COUNCIL ENDS YEAR'S WORK

Many Reports, Some Business and Sundry Bouquets Occupied the Session.

COMPLIMENTS PASSED.

Two Letters Received From the Trolley Company—Old Indebtedness Wiped Out and Balance Left in the Treasury—Chief Doane's Recommendations.

To all practical purposes the Common Council for 1901 is no more. The last session of the old body was held Monday evening. After transacting a considerable amount of ordinary business and passing a few "bouquets" about, the council adjourned. President Dumont and Councilmen Randolph, Coriell, Mellick, Tolles, Buckle, Glosk, Lee and Craig were present, while Councilmen Clifton and vanHerwerden were absent.

The report of City Treasurer William F. Arnold was presented and the summaries read. This report will be published later in the daily papers of the city, as per resolution. President Dumont took occasion to refer to this report by saying that in 1900 there was borrowed in anticipation of taxes $26,500, while at the close of this year there are no bills and there is a balance of $17,000. In 1899, the fire department owed $6,800. This year there is a balance of $1,800 and $4,200 in uncollected taxes is due the department. There is this year a total of $19,000 on hand as against $8,000 in 1899. This, Mr. Dumont said, was an excellent showing.

The report of Chief T. O. Doane, of the fire department, showed forty officers and men on the pay roll. There are 298 hydrants, with a pressure of seventy-five pounds. Two new hydrants were located during the year. There are 5,300 feet of hose, eleven horses, nine of which are owned by the city. There are thirty-eight fire boxes.

During the year there were seventy-nine alarms, a decrease of thirteen. There were twenty-eight box alarms, twenty-nine by telephone and twenty-two still alarms. The various causes are as follows: Chimney and defective flues, 27; unknown, 6; stoves and ranges, 6; locomotive sparks, 3; grass, 3; lamps, 3; spontaneous combustion, 2; gasoline, 2; bonfires, 4; debris, 2; gasoline motor, 2; leaves, 2; kerosene stove, 2; incendiary, 1; gas stove, 1; outside city, 1; children and matches, 2; children and lantern, 1; fireworks, 1; tinsmith, 1; mice and matches, 2; sun, oil and water, 1; alarm, 1; explosion of chemicals, 1; collision of oil cars, outside city, 1; cigar, 1.

The losses and insurance are as follows: On buildings, $8,295; insurance on buildings, $31,900; loss on contents, $3,772; insurance on contents, $15,135; total amount of insurance, $47,035; insurance collected, $12,067; total value of property involved, real estate, $50,100; personal, $23,800.

By way of recommendations, Chief Doane renewed his request for a transmitter at headquarters. He also asked that the fire alarm wires in the centre of the city be placed underground, and that another full paid fireman be employed. He suggested that the city dispose of the old hose wagon at No. 3 house in the West End and purchase a more modern one. He reported that the present wagon is sadly in need of repair. He also asked for an ordinance governing the sale and storage of gunpowder and other combustible material. He recommended that a license be granted for the dealing in these explosives. In accordance with a motion two hundred copies of this report will be printed in pamphlet form to be distributed by Chief Doane.

The report of Captain Kiely, of the police department, showed that during the year there have been 530 arrests, 433 whites and ninety-seven colored. There was collected in fines $546. The force consists of nineteen men, and the captain suggests that additional men be appointed so that the seventy-four miles of streets in the city can be covered more fully. The expenditures for the year were $15,998.57 out of the appropriation of $16,000.

Building Inspector T. O. Doane's report showed that 151 permits were issued during the year, the estimated value of buildings and repairs being $439,100.

The report of the street committee was presented by Mr. Tolles and appears in full in another column.

The finance committee's report was presented by Mr. Lee, in the absence of the chairman. This showed none of the appropriations have been exceeded and that practically an indebtedness of $9,000 in the general fund and $6,000 in the fire fund has been wiped out. The committee cited the fact that next year it will be necessary to issue bonds for sewer improvements.

Mr. Lee offered a resolution that J. B. Coward be given notice that the Common Council will give up its present quarters, including the officers of collector, city clerk, mayor and street committee, April 1. Mr. Tolles seconded that this resolution was red for the purpose of giving the new Council the right to renew its contract with Mr. Coward or select other quarters if it so desired. When the vote was taken Councilmen Dumont and Coriell voted no. The latter at first did not vote, but the President could see no reason why he should be excused and called for his expression, which he gave with some emphasis.

At this point Mr. Dumont inquired of the finance committee regarding a conference recently held, when the collection of James E. Martine's taxes was considered.

Mr. Lee, speaking for himself, said that he could give no information on the subject as he had not been acquainted with the matter. Mr. Dumont took exception to Mr. Lee's remarks and said that he was surprised that some action had not been taken. He felt sure that the person referred to wants a chance to get rid of paying his tax and he for one did not want to be a party to any such scheme. He hoped that such an opportunity would not be given.

Mr. Mellick explained matters by stating that Collector Smith informed him that the corporation counsel had issued the necessary notices to be sent to the various tenants occupying Mr. Martine's property and that they would soon be sent out. Hereafter the city will collect Mr. Martine's rents.

Mr. Tolles referred back several petitions, including one for the widening of Madison avenue, one from property-owners asking that the new hospital be located at some other place than that selected and another one regarding crosswalks and sidewalks. These will be considered by the new Council.

Mr. Coriell made a few remarks at this time concerning the fire department, particularly about the financial status. He said that during the year the indebtedness was reduced to $4,800 and that there are now no bills to pay. He said that all the buildings have been renovated and repairs made where needed. He recommended the purchase of 1,000 feet of hose next year.

The resignation of Frank Day as a regular fireman was received and accepted. Mr. Tolles, on behalf of the street committee, asked that the committee be excused at this time from making a report on municipal water works, as negotiations are now pending with the Plainfield Water Supply Company.

Mr. Buckle took occasion to commend the police department for excellent work and said that he felt sure that the same standard of efficiency established by former Councilman Barrows had been maintained.

Mr. Lee gave his report as chairman of the alms committee. This showed the receipts to be $4,980.57 and the disbursements $4,448.91. There are at present twenty-eight persons receiving aid from the city, sixteen less than last year. Of this number ten children are at the Industrial Home. Four persons died during the year. The committee thanked the Organized Aid Association for hearty co-operation.

Mr. Lee asked for $50 with which to purchase a new device for properly heating the rooms at the Industrial Home. This device is to be placed on the range and is guaranteed to fill the bill. The appropriation was granted.

Mr. Lee inquired as to whether the Elizabeth, Plainfield and Central Jersey Street Railway Company had made any reply to the recent action taken by the Council regarding certain violations of the ordinance under which the road is operated. In reply two letters were read by the clerk. One was from Col. Hine acknowledging receipt of the resolution adopted by Council, and stating that it had been referred to John N. Ackerman, the new general manager. The other letter was from Mr. Ackerman, under date of December 14, saying that the resolutions had been received and he would soon meet the committee for the purpose of adjusting differences.

This concluded the business of the evening and the rest of the time was devoted to an exchange of complimen-

A CHRISTMAS CANTATA WAS WELL RENDERED

Large Audience Saw "Santa Claus' Defenders" at Park Avenue Baptist Church.

"SANTA CLAUS" THERE.

MARTIN STUTZMAN MADE HIT AS "GRINY," THE NEWSBOY.

List of Those Who Took Part in the Cantata—Miss Florence G. Hawkins and Her Class Were in Charge.

An assemblage of people, numbering well up in the hundreds, witnessed at the Park Avenue Baptist church, last Monday, an elaborately costumed and well enacted Christmas cantata. It was an unqualified success in every way. Only pupils belonging to the Sunday-school took part.

The cantata was entitled "Santa Claus' Defenders" and pictured the efforts of the children and their friends to defend the mission of their pastor, Santa Claus. Opposed by those who had no sympathy with the pleasures that enter so largely into the hearts of children, their convincing arguments finally succeeded in converting these opponents to their way of thinking.

Throughout the cantata there were many choruses and carols. Of the speaking parts, the palm was taken by Martin Stutzman, garbed as "Griny," the newsboy. Other parts well taken were "Mr. Discontent," Charles VanWinkle; "Nita," Miss Violet VanWinkle; "Peace," Miss Reignette Marsh; "Good-Will," Miss Emily Runyon; "Love," Miss Lillian Richardson; and "Santa Claus," Harry Hall. The latter caused much laughter by his original jokes and witticisms on members of the school and local hits.

In all the affair was decidedly novel and spoke volumes for the ingenuity of Miss Florence G. Hawkins, the director. In this she was assisted by the members of her Sunday-school class composed of the Misses Bessie Giles, Elsie Giles, Lillian Richardson, Priscilla Beatrice Emmons, Emily Runyon, Elizabeth VanWinkle and Reignette Marsh and Mrs. Green.

At the conclusion of the cantata, the pupils of the Sunday-school were given presents and the customary boxes of candy.

The entire list of those appearing in the affair is as follows: The Misses Elma Runyon, Elizabeth VanWinkle, Priscilla Beatrice Emmons, Cora Brokaw, Jessie Sentmel, Elsie Giles, Artlise Brown, Marjorie Brown, Anna Clark, Lillian Canning, Maud Harris, Bessie Giles, Annie W. Wyckoff, Adelia Runyon, Violet VanWinkle, Reignette Marsh, Emily Runyon and Lillian Richardson and Mrs. Annie J. Lowry and Mrs. Laura E. Krom; Messrs. Herbert Brokaw, Aaron D. Thompson, Jr., Ernest Whitney, John Swentzel, Augustus Nash, Harry Thompson, Charles VanWinkle, Martin Stutzman, Arthur Whitney, Charles VanWinkle, Stewart Freeman and Harry Hall. A children's chorus was composed of Florence Smalley, Autumn DeLancy, Bernice Swentzel, Anna Clark, Arline Brown, Martha Soper, Susie Whitney, Ethel VanWinkle, Elinor Stutzman, Mildred Odam, Marjorie Brown, Mary Leveridge, Grace Weeks, Lillian Canning and Maud Harris. Mrs. E. Frank Vail acted as accompanist.

The Modern Clubhouse.

The Chronicle, a weekly insurance journal, published in New York, contains an interesting article on "Modern Club Houses," by Evarts Tracy, of Hillside avenue. It gives many timely hints on the construction of fire proof club houses and their interior arrangements. A handsome reproduction of the Yale Club's skyscraper on Forty-fourth street is shown in illustration.

Dog Supposed to be Mad.

A small dog, owned by George Taylor, of Elmwood place, and supposed to be mad, was shot Saturday by Patrolman Charles Gasso. The dog was running wildly about the yard and snapping furiously. To save further trouble his life was cut short.

Plainfield Lodge Officers.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I.O.O.F., at its regular meeting, Tuesday evening, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Noble grand, Frank Miles; vice-grand, Wm. Zimmerson; financial secretary, Elias Bird; recording secretary, J. F. Sheppard; treasurer, James Clarkson.

VERDICT FOR HORSE OWNER

W. C. HENDRICKSON GIVEN $550 FOR KILLING OF HORSE.

Suit Against Philadelphia and Reading by Owner of Stock Farm at Belle Mead.

Somerville, Dec. 31.—In the Circuit Court here, yesterday, before Justice Garretson, an exceedingly interesting case was tried between Wm. C. Hendrickson, the owner of a big stock farm at Belle Mead, and the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company. Hendrickson, who was the plaintiff, had a valuable brood mare, which got out of the pasture and wandered on the tracks, where it was struck by a locomotive and killed.

Duncan and Reger, counsel for the plaintiff, claimed that the railroad company was obliged to build and maintain a fence along its tracks; that the fence was down and Hendrickson's horse went through it on the tracks and was killed.

The company endeavored to show that the fence had not been down more than a day at the longest and that it had no knowledge and no means of knowing that the fence was out of repair.

In his charge to the jury the Justice said that if it was determined that the company knew, or ought to have known, that the fence was down, it was negligence on the part of the company to leave the fence in that condition. Hence, the company was liable for the result of the accident.

Hendrickson claimed $600 damages. The jury, after a half hour's deliberation, brought in a verdict for $550. James J. Bergen appeared for the company.

In the Orphan's Court a citation, requiring Frederick A. Pope, of this place, administrator of the estate of the late Mary Hatchett, (colored) of North Plainfield, to render his accounts, was made returnable Friday. Geo. Hatchett, of North Plainfield, is next of kin. He is represented by Lawyer Horace Coddington.

THE YEAR'S WORK ON STREETS AND SEWERS

Full Text of the Annual Report of Councilmanic Streets and Sewers Committee.

MUCH WORK WAS DONE.

LIST OF STREETS MACADAMIZED AND REPAIRED.

The New Street Signs—Work at the Sewage Disposal Beds—Enlargement of Sanitary and Storm Sewer Systems.

The annual report of the committee on streets and sewers, presented at the meeting of the Common Council, last evening, was as follows:

To the Honorable the Common Council of the city of Plainfield:

Gentlemen:—During the year 1901 the work of improving the condition of the streets, as begun in previous years, has steadily progressed, and we believe that the efforts of your committee during the year that is past have met with general approval.

New Macadamizing.

West Eighth street has been macadamized from Grant avenue to Monroe avenue, and the gutters protected by paving where necessary, the property owners contributing $708.44.

Rock avenue has been macadamized, for a width of fourteen feet, from the Central Railroad of New Jersey, to a point north of Dunellen avenue. The property owners south of Front street contributed toward the cost of that portion of the work, and a large part of the stone for the section north of Front street was furnished by the contractors for the new disposal works. The following streets have also been macadamized but not entirely completed: First, Second and Third places; West Sixth street from Park avenue to Plainfield avenue; Orchard place; Carlton avenue from Watchung avenue to Putnam avenue.

The cost of this work is being defrayed by the issue of temporary bonds, to be retired as the assessments are paid.

This list could have been considerably extended, as a majority of the owners on a number of other streets were anxious to have them macadamized. It was thought wise, however, to be somewhat conservative in the matter of issuing bonds, so only those streets were undertaken which were near the centre of the city and well built up. On streets in the outlying districts your committee has always been ready to recommend the payment of a proper portion by the city whenever the property owners were ready to subscribe the balance.

Ordinances have been prepared for macadamizing Spooner and Hobart avenues, the property owners having expressed their willingness to pay their proportion of the cost.

During the year, assessments for the city's portion of cost of macadamizing have been paid on East Sixth street, East Ninth street and West Third street, amounting, with interest, to $1,688.94, and the sum of $700.00 has also been paid to the collector on account of anticipated assessments against the city for macadamizing done this year.

Re-Macadamizing.

The following streets have been re-macadamized during the year: East Second street, repaired east of Richmond street for Street Railway Company; Watchung avenue, from Front street to Fifth street; East Front street, from Park avenue to Watchung avenue, and preliminary work from Netherwood avenue to Leland avenue; Woodland, near South avenue and north of Prospect avenue; Belvidere avenue, from Woodland avenue to Ravine road; South avenue, east from Richmond street and east from Belvidere avenue; West Ninth street; West Eighth street, portions; Madison avenue, from Seventh street to Stelle avenue; Liberty street, from Second street to Eighth street; Plainfield avenue, from Front street to C. R. R. of N. J.; Clinton avenue, from Front street to Second street; West Second street, from Liberty street to Central avenue; West Front street, finished from Park avenue to Clinton avenue, and preliminary work from Clinton avenue to Rock avenue; Somerset street, preliminary work; Grant avenue, from Front street to Fourth street; Washington street, preliminary work; East Fourth street, east of Washington street.

The work of grading and macadamizing Elm place was started, but, owing to the unusually early cold weather, it was necessary to postpone further work for the present, but it should be completed at the earliest possible opportunity. Other streets needing re-surfacing or repairs are the following:

Somerset street, to be completed; East Fourth street, to be completed; West Front street, to be completed; Washington street, to be completed; East Front street, Richmond to Leland; North avenue, Park to Watchung; Madison avenue, Front to Fourth; Central avenue, Front to Eighth; Richmond street, Second to Fifth; Fifth street, Watchung to Plainfield; Plainfield avenue, C. R. R. of N. J. to City line; Grove street; Belleview avenue; Railway road.

The work on Plainfield avenue has been delayed in anticipation of the construction of a street railroad to South Plainfield; which would, of course, almost destroy a pavement sixteen feet wide; we are informed that the track will probably be laid during the coming spring.

Your committee has been in consultation with the Street Railway Company in relation to disposal of storm water from the vicinity of Woodland and Belleview avenues, and has delayed repairs on the latter avenue until provision can be made for the water which has damaged the macadam so seriously.

Grading and Turnpiking.

The dirt streets of the city have been cleaned once or more by the city scraper; gutters have been deepened and in most cases the crowns have been rolled. We feel that this work is fully worth its cost, as most of the streets keep in good condition afterward and the taxpayers consider that these streets should have some attention, even if they are not macadamized.

The streets requiring the most work of this kind were the following: Leland avenue, Netherwood avenue, Johnston avenue, Berkeley avenue, Highland avenue, Webster place, Cushing road, Prospect avenue, Randolph road, Field avenue, Sherman avenue, Monroe avenue, Elmwood place, Girard avenue, North avenue, Manson place, Spooner avenue, Berckman street, LaGrande avenue, east of Richmond street, Kenilworth avenue, Hillside avenue, unmacadamized portions, Clinton avenue.

After the heavy rains of August 24 extensive repairs were found necessary on Hillside, Watchung, Putnam, LaGrande and North avenues, West Third street and others.

By agreement with the property owners on Girard avenue, this street was widened 17.4 feet, making it of a uniform width of 50 feet; when the Freeholders of the two counties can agree upon the details of construction, a bridge of the same width will be constructed, and Girard avenue will then become a most attractive connection between the city and borough.

Storm Sewers.

New storm sewers have been constructed in West Third street and Clinton avenue to carry off the water which has so many times caused washouts on West Third street, west of Manson place; it also connects with a private eighteen-inch storm sewer draining the streets and property to the southeast.

The Albert street storm sewer has been extended 200 feet to the south gutter of Front street, to avoid the flooding of that side of Front street, caused by the rails throttling the culvert.

In Plainfield avenue an eighteen inch sewer has been laid from the C. R. R. of N. J. to Third street and two of the six catch basins and inlets have been completed; when the others are finished, the deep gutter depressions at this intersection can be filled in and the whole crossing be much improved.

Owing to the delay in receiving pipe for the sanitary sewer in South avenue, the proposed storm sewer in that avenue has not been constructed, as it is intended to be laid above the sanitary sewer in the same ditch.

Most of the pipe has been paid for, however, and the cost of construction will be small.

During the improvement of West Second street, a new inlet and connection with the storm sewer was made at the west corner of New street, which allowed of abolishing the gutter depression across West Second street.

The accumulation of storm water on West Fifth and West Sixth streets is very serious, especially at New street, where in heavy showers, lakes extending several hundred feet are formed, covering the roadway entirely from sight. We would recommend that a storm sewer be constructed in Arlington avenue, from West Fifth street to Cedar brook, for the relief of this section.

Crosswalks and Culverts.

Only twelve new crosswalks have been laid during the year, but repairs, including considerable new stone, have been made to many of the old ones.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVALS AT LOCAL PARISHES

Grace and Holy Cross Parish Sunday-Schools Held Their Festivals.

GIVEN LAST MONDAY.

AFTER A MUSICAL SERVICE, GIFTS WERE PRESENTED.

Appropriate Addresses Were Made at Both Exercises—After Service All Adjourned to Parish House Where Tree Was.

All the children of Holy Cross parish were made happy, last Monday, by the Christmas tree exercises held by the Sunday-school. Choral evening song was first held in the parish church and the principal feature of *the service was the singing of Christ*mas carols by the vested choir and pupils of the school.

Rev. R. E. Madeira made the address, his remarks being particularly appropriate for such an occasion. The choir led the children to the parish building at the conclusion of the service. There has been erected a handsome Christmas tree, beautifully adorned. Beneath it was banked a load of toys, all of a valuable grade and such as are seldom given on such occasions. After these presents were distributed the exercises were at an end.

The Christmas festival of Grace Episcopal prish Sundasy-school was held in the church edifice, Monday, and a large congregation, made up principally of the pupils, was present. Evensong was sung. Its special feature was the rendition of Christmas hymns and anthems by the vested choir and the Sunday-school. Addresses were made by the rector and curate. The rector's text was: "Behold I Bring You Good Tidings."

The choir led the recessional to the parish building where the children enjoyed their Christmas tree. The distribution of gifts was made by the rector. Every member of the Sunday-school got a handsome present and a box of candy and prizes were given for faithful attendance.

To Mrs. W. A. Freeman was given a half dozen plates, the gift of the pupils and a shopping bag, the gift of a friend. Rev. R. M. Hodgman, the rector, received a book, "Life in Greece," and Rev. J. H. Wilson, the curate, another book, "In The Levant," both being presents from the Sunday-school.

BIRD WAS HELD.

For Grand Jury on Charge of Kidnapping Thirteen-Year Old Italian Boy.

The hearing of Fred Bird, of East Front street, charged by Sylvester DeLago with kidnapping his thirteen-year-old son, was held before Justice Nash at police headquarters, Monday afternoon. The defendant was held for the Grand Jury in $200 bonds. The amount was immediately furnished.

Bird acted as his own counsel and maintained that the boy was beaten by his father as a child. He also said he asked to go to South Carolina with him. Counsellor Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., for the State, declared that the boy could not give his consent as he was not the age required by law. He also stated that Bird took the boy despite the father's objections.

SOLDIERS WED.

Marriage at Officers' Quarters of Salvation Army Last Evening.

Two earnest workers in the local corps of the Salvation Army were united in marriage last Monday, in the officer's quarters of the barracks. They were Junior Sergeants Edward Brunn and Miss Lillian May Gary. The ceremony was performed by Major Waller, of Newark, and was witnessed by a number of army workers including Ensign and Mrs. McCloud.

Following the ceremony a soldier's tea was served. Both bride and groom are well-known young people and have been connected with the corps for several years. The groom is employed at the Scott Press Works.

Admitted to Probate.

The will of the late Mrs. Wiskie Vanderweg, of this city, was admitted to probate by the surrogate of Union county, Friday. John H. VanWinkle, Jr., of the firm of John H. VanWinkle & Son, is the sole executor.

Miss Madge Martin, of Harlem, is the guest of her uncle, Horace J. Martin, of Jackson avenue.

My Lady's Christmas

What for my lady's Christmas?
Roses! Herself is more fair.
Oh, the nodding grace of her,
And the winsome face of her,
And the dusky shadows lurking in her hair.

But what good gift to bring her?
Jewels? She's more precious far.
Ah, the pure pearls gleaming white
And the ruby's flashing light—
See, on lips and forehead! My Jewel nay, my star!

But to come empty-handed—
Will she know and understand?
Will she stoop to love me,
She so far above me?
Give herself, and take from me,
All I am—all I may be,
Lifted to her? Will she have me, heart and hand?

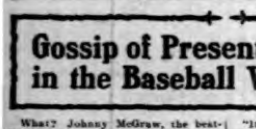
Gossip of Present-Day Doings in the Baseball World

What? Johnny McGraw, the best-known man in baseball, a philosopher! It would be difficult for those whose acquaintance with the redoubtable "Muggsy" extended no farther than the sight of the little fellow playing third base to imagine the pugnacious athlete in the role of a philosopher. Yet, at the recent meeting of the National League, when the magnates held their annual "pow-wow," McGraw astonished his colleagues with wit, humor and philosophy.



The Convention Fever Is On.

"Just got in from Baltimore," remarked McGraw, as he walked into the hotel corridor dressed like a successful leading man in a popular play. "Thought I might be late, you know, and walked briskly from the railroad station. A matter of five minutes in an annual baseball meeting is as important as a grain of sand on the seashore. What, no heavy 'villains' wearing gum shoes waiting to sandbag me! That's too bad. Of course, the preliminary directors' meeting is being held. That is so important, you know. They have to tell the anxious public who won the pennant last year. Then there are our accounts—auditing them is a task. Guess baseball men have the convention fever, and will never recover unless they are inoculated with 'nonsonderous germs.' Those germs are better than brickers in a ball team. They knock out all shams and bring people down to rock bottom business. The chances are the board of directors is in session, tilted back on chairs to a man, and sitting in a room that is blue with cigar smoke."

McGraw's smile when he said this drove one of the reporters to the neighboring office building on a Sherlock Holmes quest. Subsequently he reported that McGraw had correctly "sized up" the situation. The pseudo sonderous body of directors was in session, but had a camp fire been burning inside the circle of baseball warriors, and had a captive National league baby been bound to a property tree from some theater, the meeting would have been but a trifle more melodramatic.

"You see," continued McGraw, when he had carefully checked his $100 overcoat, "baseball men like to travel hundreds of miles, sit in a circle and deliberate. If the supreme court only knew how massive were the brains of the magnates, the justices would go out and play golf and brave decisions to the board of directors.

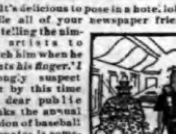
"There will be nothing done at the annual meeting that could not be accomplished by writing a few letters. But as the Amalgamated Association of Objectors to the Negative in Photography, the Association of Sons of Fathers of the Real Sons of Maryland, etc., insist upon holding annual meetings, so do the baseball fellows. It's fine to occupy a sleeping-car all by yourself and tell the wondering porter that you are going to the annual meeting in Chicago to save the baseball world $1,000,000. That dignitary of the car will shine your shoes every half-hour if you permit him.

"It's delicious to pose in a hotel lobby while all of your newspaper friends are telling the nimble artists to 'watch him when he points his finger.' I strongly suspect that by this time the dear public thinks the annual session of baseball magnates is something of a mutual admiration society. I'm in favor of baseball men holding their annual sessions at home with a bottle of ink and four stub pens and three quires of linen paper for ammunition. Besides, just think of the danger a player-manager runs when he visits the annual session. He might be kidnaped by a National league villain. Or he might have a caller, such as Jim Carney, the king of prairie league managers, who would pour tales of big money into his ears and sign him for the season to captain and lead the Dreadnaughts or the Daisy Cutters. If it were not so prodigiously ponderous, an annual meeting might be called a serious waste of time, money and brains. Recall the days when I, with other players, used to haunt the corridors of the hotel down in New York when the National league temple of mystery was tinkling with deals, counter-deals, mysteries of baseball than the Turtle Rose case, and every magnate who passed through the portals wore gum shoes and a brigand's cloak. For convention fevers take a prescription composed of 30 parts of railroad tickets, ten parts of inconvenience in traveling, ten parts of hotel bills, ten parts of tobacco smoke and 20 parts of hot air and buncombe. However, if it is fashionable to have this fever once or twice a year, I suppose I'll have to submit dignifiedly as a magnate by submitting to its ravages. The fever leaves scars."

Going to a League Meeting.

And this is "Muggsy," the infielder whose sobriquet was given to him by critics because he could browbeat an umpire into ambulation quicker than Jesse Burkett, Hughey Jennings, Freddie Clarke or any of the famous loud talkers of the diamond! "I" Donahue, the wisest backstop who ever trained a pitcher a wild pitch, heard "Muggsy" expatiate, and declared to a friend that McGraw had sharpened his tongue on hot crab meat a la Maryland, at his Baltimore home.

Of course, a gathering of the powerful in baseball without Capt. A. C. Anson would be a dream. Your uncle keeps his hand in by trotting around at the annual meets and, under the fire of pleasantry, often amuses his auditors with a wealth of reminiscent gossip. Towering above the throng, in which were President Ban Johnson, Vice President Charles Somers, the Boston magnate; "Connie" Mack, Virgil Garvin—the tallest pitcher on the staff within the memory of man—Tom Loftus, the new manager of the Washington team; smiling Frank Dwyer, who will direct the Detroit club next season, and a host of other celebrities, Capt. Anson brought up the subject of crooked baseball, when some one told him that the American league had placed a ban on "kicking" in games by providing a penalty of ejectment from the grounds.



Umpire Amos Dolondo Two Games.

"In my long experience on the diamond—"

"Let's see; you played ball 54 years, did you not?" interrupted John McCarthy, the umpire baiter.

"Don't be hard on the old man," replied Capt. Anson. "As I was saying, in all my time on the diamond, I never heard of a crooked deal in baseball. Years ago there used to be considerable betting on games, but the man who played could not be reached by the gamblers. Everybody knows that baseball men play just as conscientiously as they know how to play, and it would be the most difficult thing in the world for a man to successfully carry out a job to 'throw' a game.

"One day when I was in a justice court during the preliminary hearing of the case against the Chicago club of the National league, for playing on Sunday, the prosecuting attorney, who knew as much about the game of ball as we played it as I do about the source of the Nile, approached me to enter into conversation.

"'This baseball business, Mr. Anson,' he began, 'is like a lottery, is it not?'

"'Well, the element of luck plays a big part,' I replied.

"'You just pool the money and fix on the side what will win, I suppose?' he said.

"What I said to that man was not printed in the record. He was prosecuting us, no doubt in full sincerity, but as there was no law in the state against Sunday ball playing, we won our case. Do you know that I gave that fellow a ticket for every game of ball he played at home that season, expecting that he would go out to see how the boys fought to win. But he never appeared."

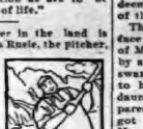
"Sold the tickets, I suppose?" was the comment of a bystander.

"No, sir," returned Anson. "He saved them all, and at the end of the season told me that it was against his principles to see a lot of men hired to play baseball. This opened the way for me to argue the matter with him, and—"

"To-day he is the chief rooter," injected another bystander.

"No, sir," retorted Anson. "He saved them that rolls Saturday evenings, and like lights a pipe out in the alleys at three minutes to 12 o'clock. His next venture will be golf, and then we will get him around to the idea that there are as good men playing baseball for compensation as are to be found in any walk of life."

"Every ball player in the land is sorry for Big Amos Rusie, the pitcher, who could not stand prosperity," remarked Pitcher Jimmy Callahan, as the conference of ball players was about to break up. But the players are going to derive a great deal of sound advice from Rusie's case. They are saving their money. The ball player who can keep in the glare of the calcium for more than five or six years and keep up his earning capacity, is not the rule. He's the exception."



The Fish of Rusie—Still He's Happy.

Rusie once made $6,000 a year twirling for New York. He thought he could always earn that generous salary. "Good fellows" helped him spend the money. Age, increased avoirdupois and a dead arm came to "Mighty Rusie" and the managers of fast teams in the big league no longer saw in Rusie the drawing card. They perceived that he was a back number. Rusie, finding the profession practically closed to him, went to work for day laborer. He is happy and contented and his change in living has brought back to him the love and compassionate joy of his devoted wife, who had to get a divorce. Rusie can earn in several years the amount that an indulgent baseball club used to give him for less than 100 hours of actual work a season. His case points a moral to every athlete. No sporter of uselessness comes to every athlete who is careless about his ways of living. There will be no day laborers among the thrifty baseball men. When they cease to be efficient on the diamond they will have a competence sufficient to live upon.

How to Boil an Egg.

A method to prepare soft and medium cooked eggs has been evolved by the repeated laboratory tests at the University of Illinois. Using a granite-ware saucepan of one quart capacity, a pint of water was heated over a gas flame; when the water boiled the gas was turned off and an egg which had been kept in the refrigerator, was dropped in the water. Without disturbing the water or relighting the flame, the former was covered closely and the egg allowed to remain in the water six minutes. It was then soft-cooked. Eight or nine minutes more was medium-cooked. This way of preparing boiled eggs is recommended for its certain result of digestibility.

Grim Reminders of Death.

Even the negroes of Zululand must have their little jokes to jar the feelings of the medico. They have hit upon the happy device of decorating the graves of the dear departed with the bottles of medicine prescribed by the doctor.

RODE ON BULL MOOSE.

Royal Exploit at a Pinchy New York Sportsman at Churchill Lake, in the Maine Woods.

Riding on the back of a wild bull moose was the daring feat recently performed by Paul Libby, of New York city. Mr. Libby made two attempts to ride the animal before he could remain on his back long enough to have a photograph taken.

This exciting adventure occurred recently in Maine. Mr. Libby, with Charles Wake, also of New York city, in company with two guides, were on a 500-mile canoe trip through the picturesque lakes and rivers of the Pine Tree state.

the waters leading to the Allegash river, and came the entire length of the St. John river to Fredericton.

Here they saw lots of game, including dozens of moose. It was the closed season, so the hunters were restricted to shooting with kodaks. They enjoyed some great fishing, however. When the party arrived in their canoes at Churchill lake, they came upon a gigantic bull moose enjoying a swim in the lake waters.

Sam Cole, a guide of a jocular turn of mind, offered to bet Mr. Libby that he could not mount the moose's back. Without a moment's hesitation Mr. Libby accepted the wager. He leaped from the canoe and landed squarely on the back of the animal, which, frightened by the advent of this unexpected passenger, promptly sank to the bottom of the lake. Mr. Libby held on to the ears of the moose and was carried down with him. Beneath the water Mr. Libby deemed it wise to slide off the back of the animal.

The moose soon came to the surface again, and to the great relief of Mr. Wake and Guide Cole, Mr. Libby arose a second later. The moose swam aimlessly around and seemed to have lost his bearing. Nothing daunted by his failure, Mr. Libby prepared to try again, and Mr. Wake got his camera ready. This time Mr. Libby landed well forward on the back of the moose and rode him, holding on by the ears, Tod Sloan fashion, for about a minute. He then slid off the slippery back of the animal, which swam to the other shore and disappeared like a flash into the forest.

HE WANTED A BEAR.

But When He Met One Face to Face the Bold Hunter Fled in the Other Direction.

"The sickest man I ever took into the woods," said an Adirondack guide, near North creek, "was a lawyer who came in from Buffalo last fall to kill a bear. He said he was going to kill one if it took all season. He wanted a rug of his own killing for his office. He stayed in the woods three weeks, and wouldn't look at deer or small game. Finally he had to go home. He sent his stuff out to the railroad by team, and walked out himself, saying that would be his last chance to see bear.

"Sure enough, he went around a big rock and met a bear face to face in the trail. He forgot what he was after, forgot he had been hunting three weeks, forgot his only animal, forgot that he wanted a rug for his office, and even forgot that he had a gun. He turned and sprinted in the direction from which he came till it all came over him that that bear was just what he wanted. Then he stopped, went back," said the guide, according to the New York Times, "and saw from the tracks that the bear had gone a good deal faster than he did, and in the opposite direction."

ARE HARD WORKERS

Busy Statesmen Who Never Take a Christmas Vacation.

Members of Appropriations, Ways and Means and Finance Committee of House and Senate Get No Rest.

[Special Washington Letter.]

"The lives of government clerks must be very monotonous," said Congressman William Alden Smith, of Grand Rapids, Mich., as we were riding from the capitol in an electric car.

"I have often watched them going to and coming from their offices. Now it is four o'clock in the afternoon, and they are coming out of the executive departments in great droves. You notice that nearly all of them rush for the street cars. The rush, partly because they are tired, and partly because so many of them live away out in the suburbs. They walk in the mornings, and ride in the evenings.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH.

"Every morning, from eight o'clock until almost nine, the thousands may be seen walking towards the departments, all of them carrying little packages containing their lunches. Some of them walk as much as two or three miles on fair days on their way to their work, and it probably does them good. But, after being shut up in the departments, where many rooms are illy ventilated, if not ventilated at all, they are as tired out by four o'clock as the giant tillers of the soil are when they have worked from sun-up to sundown.

"There is something proerssatioating or nonsolent in the atmosphere of this city, I continued Mr. Smith. 'At my home I am always in my office at eight o'clock each morning. Here it is a task and a struggle for me to get to the capitol by ten o'clock. It is the same with my family, too. We do not get up so early as we do at home, and we do not go to bed so early as we should. I have brought servants with me this year, and am trying to keep house instead of being an uncomfortable boarder. And I find that the servants have breathed the somnolent air of Washington, and they do not get up and go about their work as they did at home. Maybe they are the indolence of other servants in the neighborhood, or maybe they are the airs of this community. I hope that a season here will not spoil them for their duties at home when we go back at the close of this session of congress.

"The government clerks, I understand, only work half days during the Christmas holidays. The six hours of vacation are not taken from their annual leaves of 30 days. They are very fortunate folks in the matter of days of rest. No other class of working people have 30 vacation days with pay given to them every year. And it is good pay, too."

The congressman did not mention the fact that men in his class also easily acquire the resting habit in the city. No sooner do the congressmen gather here than they begin to talk about the Christmas vacation. They are annually in session about two weeks in December, doing nothing but preliminary business, when they go to their homes for two weeks or longer in order that they may go to their homes for Christmas and New Year's dinners with their families. They also receive good pay during their restful periods.

"Uncle Jimmy" Richards, to whom everybody here knows, was for years at the door of the democratic side of the senate for almost 25 years when the congress has been in session, and there has never been a year when a Christmas vacation of less than two weeks has been taken, except about 13 years ago. There was a short session of congress. President Cleveland threatened an extra session unless certain legislation was accomplished, so that on that occasion the Christmas vacation was only five days. But that was an exception to the rule. Like the rule, however, because when the statesmen are on vacation I also am on vacation, and drawing my pay all the while. They can't "resign" as often to please me, and the other employees feel the same way about it."

While the congress is absent from the capitol building there are a few statesmen and employes who are hard at work, and their labors are of the greatest importance. The chairman of the house committee on appropriations, Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, and the chairman of the senate committee on appropriations, Mr. Allison, of Iowa, are working on the details of the permanent appropriation bills; those which require especial attention every year at their hands. And with them are the clerks of their committees, Mr. Courts and Mr. Cleaves; two gentlemen who have handled appropriation bills for so many years that their services are exceptionally valuable to the country, as well as to the congress. They never take vacations for the Christmas holidays, nor for any other holidays while the congress is in session. Moreover, these employes work on the details of appropriation bills during the long vacations when the statesmen are away from this city for months at a time. They have no time to acquire the habit of too much resting.

HERBERT E. PAYNE.

During the past 20 years the annual appropriations for the expenses of the government have increased from $300,000,000 to $600,000,000. As the country grows in population the federal employes necessarily increase in number. This was true before the expansion of the country which was incidental to our clash at arms with a foreign foe.

The secretary of the treasury sends to the congress each year a report of the expenditures of the government for the past year, with estimates for the probable expenses for each ensuing year, and all of these estimates require careful consideration. Each department of the government, and each bureau of the several departments, presents, through the secretary of the treasury, estimates for the development of its work. If it were not for the watchfulness of the congressional guardians of the treasury the annual appropriations would increase the more rapidly. Each bureau chief wants increased appropriations, and the sum total is always alarmingly large. The committees on appropriations study the requirements of each bureau, and make appropriations less than the amounts asked for in a majority of the cases.

The chairmen of the committees on appropriations, and the committee clerks are charged with great and grave responsibilities. While the senators and representatives are taking their vacations and giving heed mainly only to those matters which concern their states and districts, these diligent and faithful public servants are looking after the income and outgo of the government. When the committees on appropriations make their reports to the great appropriation bills, the congress adopts those reports and acts in accordance with their recommendations.

It is a popular fallacy that every member of congress carefully studies these bills. They do nothing of the kind. They know practically no more about the appropriation bills for which they vote than the people do at home, who never see the bills. They take it for granted that what the chairmen of each committee reports is all right.

There are members of two other committees who have not the time to acquire the Washington habit of overrestfulness. The house committee on ways and means and the senate committee on finance have duties which necessitate careful attention to details and investigation of financial conditions. The congress devolves upon those committees the work of levying taxes by customs duties and internal revenue. The chairmen particularly must be familiar with the resources of the government, the necessity for cutting down the revenues or of increasing them. From those committees, for example, came the bills which increased the federal revenues for the war with Spain, and the resultant increased expenditures.

While the committees on appropriations make provision for expenditures *of the executive, legislative and judi*cial departments of the government, these other committees see to it that there is always sufficient money in the treasury to meet those appropriations. Their members must know exactly what amount of taxation should be laid upon every article, from a needle to a barrel of whisky. You may well understand that the statesmen charged with such far-reaching affairs must be far-seeing and broad minded. Other members may take time for vacations and even for junkets, but these gentlemen stick to their posts. In congressional affairs they are "the men behind the guns," who keep the ship of state on even keel. Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, is chairman of the senate committee on finance. Representative Payne, of New York, is chairman of the committee on ways and means.

The emphasis placed upon the importance of the work of these four committees is not intended to minimize the work of the numerous other committees, but to show that these are some of our public servants whose duties are exceptionally important, so that they cannot enter upon that somnolent condition which Congressman Smith, of Michigan, so graphically and truthfully pictures as a characteristic of many but not a few clerkships in our national capital.

SPECTERS IN CHAPEL.

Neighbors See Strange Midnight Gatsmn On In a Little Church at La Crosse, Wis.

Mrs. J. Kalbusnik and half a score more who live in the neighborhood of a chapel in the southeastern portion of La Crosse, Wis., are complaining that two spirits of another world keep them awake. These two wanderers enter the church at midnight and seem to go through a phantom wedding ceremony and then disappear. All sorts of tests have proved to the satisfaction of Mrs. Kalbusnik and her friends that there is nothing material about the participants.

Mrs. Kalbusnik saw the apparitions first two weeks ago at midnight. There were a man and a woman and, although they appeared to be of a rather misty and hazy material, she thought nothing particular of it until she noticed them turn into the church. Immediately the lights appeared to be lighted as by magic. She followed and looked in at the window, but the lights and the phantom people immediately vanished.

Several other neighbors noticed it, says the Chicago American, and planned to trap the persons thought to be playing tricks. A rope was tied across the front door one night and the little company sat on the corner across the street until the midnight chimes pealed out, when, as if from the ground, the two apparitions appeared arm in arm and walked up to the door.

The materialists across the street were horrified to see them take no heed of the rope and, in fact, beat walk right through the doorway as though it were perfectly free. One made an outcry and ran across the street, but the ghosts vanished again. Later others took up the watch, but none has been successful in solving the problem.

Finally they realized that if the ethereal beings were molested they would immediately vanish. The watchers stationed themselves at windows and waited. They report that the pair on several occasions came in the door and the altar immediately became illumined with a peculiar hazy light and they proceeded to the altar and assumed the position of a bridal couple. Suddenly there was a peculiar piercing, but not loud scream and the lights went out. The strange proceeding does not take place every night. The most favored time is during wild weather and on Thursday nights.

Sometimes it is several weeks between the visitations. The strange doings in the little church have been kept a secret by the neighbors for fear of ridicule, but now they are forced to go outside their own circle to get aid in solving the problem.

Smuggling by Motor Cars.

The bulky nature of motor cars offers special temptations to people who have no scruples about the payment of the octroi. Numerous have been the cases lately of attempts to dodge the officials at the gates of Paris. The reservoirs of an automobile can be made to hold almost anything, and Peyrefitte says that a lot of dutiable spirits is being got through free, so much so that the receipts have been falling off to an alarming extent. It appears that the chauffeurs are no longer to be dealt with with leniency, and examples will be made.

Loaded Down with Jewels.

The maharajah of Johore looks like a jewelry peddler when he is traveling. On his recent visit to London he wore huge rings set with big diamonds and rubies, six on each hand; on his breast he had a solitaire diamond that looked like a locomotive headlight, while his vest buttons were ornamented with precious stones.

Sermon in the Pulpit.

Rev. Jesse R. Page, of North Carolina, has a deep regard for the comfort of his congregation. While preaching at Morgantown, on a recent warm evening, he dropped his voice almost to a whisper, saying: "I hope the brethren in the rear will excuse me if they do not hear. If I talk louder I will awaken those in the front pews."

Mr. Gatling's Awful Record.

The population of the world has been much diminished through the mechanical skill of the great gun inventors, Thomas Maxim and Richard J. Gatling, both of whom are Americans. It is computed that Gatling's famous gun alone, since 1862, has killed over 250,000.

THREE SMALL BRIGANDS.

They Imprison Two Prominent Men for the Purpose of Getting a Ten-Dollar Ransom.

The Seattle (Wash.) correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean is authority for the statement that, following closely the exaspide of the Bulgarian brigands who abducted Miss Ellen Stone, three North Seattle small boys the other day held two citizens in durance vile for several hours because they refused to pay ransom to obtain their liberty. The victims of the unpleasant experience were E. H. Wells, editor of the Evening Star, and Lyman E. Knapp, former governor of Alaska.

The desire of these citizens to explore the gloomy interior of a new standpipe now being erected on Queen

WERE FREE ONCE MORE.

Anne hill led to their capture and subsequent imprisonment. Wells and Knapp visited the standpipe to inspect its interior before it had been completed. They entered the structure through a steel door in its side. While they were engrossed in their explorations they were suddenly plunged into darkness. A hurried investigation revealed the fact that they were prisoners.

A youthful voice from the outer world commanded in imperious tones that ten dollars be paid at once as the price of their freedom. In vain did the prisoners parley. Each overture was met with derision and a repetition of the original demand for ransom.

After fully an hour's parley Wells and Knapp grew nervous and desperate. They searched their prison for some means of escape. A circular bit of blue sky, seen at the top of a cylinder of steel 100 feet in height, held out slight hope of freedom, and soon scattering drops of rain from the opening above foretold the probability of an added discomfort. At last, after considerable exploration of the bottom of the tank, Wells found an old pick-ax. Taking turns, he and his fellow prisoner made heroic onslaughts on the steel door which shut them in.

Finally the door began to show signs of yielding. Stripped of all surplus clothing and bathed in perspiration, the prisoners inserted the pick into a small aperture. Their united efforts burst the hinges of their cell door and they once more breathed the air of freedom.

HE WAS NEVER BORN.

So Said a Prisoner to a Chicago Magistrate, But a Doctor Will Have the Last Say.

Thomas Cosgrave informed Justice Sabath, of Chicago, that he is prophet, the Lord and the only real pope in existence. The "prophet" predicted that Germany would exist to see nine more kaisers and nine more popes would rule the Catholic church. These popes, however, he said, would not be genuine, as he alone had that office. England, he said, would see nine more kings after King Edward. The speaker denounced many of Europe's royal families and declared that the Catholic church had not been in existence since 1882. At that time he had issued an edict excommunicating the entire church from itself, he said.

"Where were you born?" asked his honor.

"I never was born," answered the defendant. "I'm from the beginning. I'm not to die. I'm on earth to down all my enemies and to claim my rights."

"And what is your name?" asked the court.

"I have no name."

Justice Sabath, says the Chicago Post, ordered that the defendant be examined by a city physician as to his sanity.

TRIFLES OF DRESS.

Little Things Which Add to a Woman's Appearance.

Steel and black are combined with good effect on many gowns this year.

Some of the smart neck-wear is trimmed with the velvet dots which make the chiffon veils so attractive. These dots are set on a wide lace band, which is boned so as to require a lining. The transparent effect of the lace and velvet is very becoming to the skin.

Dog collars of black chiffon embroidered with tiny steel pearls are exceedingly handsome with a low necked gown. White silk featherbone is used to give the necessary stiffness to these transparent collars.

Tiny rosettes of black chiffon, gathered very full, appear here and there disposed with apparent carelessness on the skirts of some of the imported ball gowns, and the snakes are frequently of this delicate material. Coat collars and revers are stylish when made of Persian panne edged with heavy guipure lace. Wide berthas of lace appear on many decollete dresses. This is a fashion, however, which can only be adopted by a tall, thin woman.

The latest dinner gown is made with short sleeves. The neck, however, is veiled by a transparent yoke of lace, which has no collar.

The fashionable bride's dress here shown is of cream liberty satin. The collarless waist is laid in fine tucks. There is a full bolero effect of lace, and the blouse portion of the waist is gathered into a plain crushed belt. Directly in front there is a full bow of illusion holding a spray of orange blossoms. The sleeves are partly draped with this illusion, which reappears in tiny puffings among the orange blossoms on the skirt. The latter is made with tiny pin tucks on the hips and a tucked beading to the three flounces of chiffon and lace, which give it fullness.

WINTER MILLINERY.

Velvet, Fur, Lace and Beaver Are All Popular.

The new millinery shapes show decided picture effects. They are, as a rule, worn to one side and tilted forward so as to cast a shadow over the right eye. They all cling closely to the hair in the back. For day wear velvet prevails, although there is a pronounced fad for making the hat of the same material as the gown. For mornings, sailors or three cornered shapes of felt are popular. This felt closely resembles in its hairy texture the old fashioned beaver. It is most fashionable in white and in the pale pastel tints, especially pale blue. The three cornered hats are trimmed with buckles and rosettes.

Now that the weather has become cold in earnest fur hats are beginning to appear. They are, as a rule, made either in the three cornered or in the flat Spanish turban shape. Rich lace finds a prominent place on the majority of them, and they are also trimmed with beautifully shaded velvet flowers. Chinchilla mink and sable make the best hats.

The illustration today shows a hat of black velvet. The crown and brim are laid in tucks, and for trimming it has a single long ostrich plume, which is contained on the right side by an irregular mass of velvet held in the middle by a jeweled buckle. This is a smart mode and can be carried out equally well in chiffon or taffeta.

ON HUMBLE LINES.

How Three Working Women Keep the Wolf From the Door.

SOMETIMES along the humblest lines of manual labor a member of the great sisterhood of wage earners achieves a result which opens the eyes of women to the opportunities that lie around them every day waiting to be grasped.

In one of the large cities of the Union a certain bakery company's wagons dart along the streets bearing upon their sides in large letters the trademark "Mrs. Blank's Homemade Pies." Everybody therefore who is honest enough to own that he is fond of our delicious American fruit pies knows Mrs. Blank's pies. I saw those wagons so often and the horses attached thereto seemed so well taken care of, the pieces themselves looked so attractively clean and were so polite, that I was interested to know more of worthy Mrs. Blank.

She began in a very small way making pies for sale, but making them so good and so above suspicion that customers rapidly increased for the toothsome confections. She at length added other baker's stuffs, proportionally good, to the pumpkin, mince and apple products, and these became the fashion too. Mrs. Blank's family lived handsomely and had everything they wanted, and the bakery gradually became one of the largest bread, pastry and cake establishments in the city.

Mrs. Blank herself conducted the large business till she made a considerable fortune; then, wearying of so much care, the capable woman, who had worked her way to both competency and a business reputation on the strength of pie, sold the business to a stock company which is shrewd enough to still keep her name on its wagons.

The original Mrs. Blank retired to a pleasant seaside resort, a quiet place. There after a time, because idleness was unendurable and making pies was the pleasantest way of passing the time that she knew, she opened another bakeshop, a small one.

There, too, is Joe. She is gray haired now—grows gray in the service of the restaurant firm for whom she began working twenty years ago, but they called her Joe when she began with them as a young woman, and Joe she will be to the end of the chapter. The restaurant in which she works is a large one, furnishing meals certainly to a thousand people daily. It has the name of serving the best coffee in New York city.

One who is a judge of good coffee and had sampled repeatedly that made in this place was curious enough to inquire as to the brand used and the method of preparation. He found that every cup of coffee furnished there was made and for years had been made by one person, a little widow called Joe for short. She began first in the establishment as a laundress, then was promoted to coffee maker. She does nothing but brew the amber liquid which has become noted. Day in and day out the pleasant faced little woman stands at her coffee urn, a genuine artist in her line. She must be happy if she knows how well the customers of the establishment appreciate her skill.

Oddly enough, at the same restaurant there is a woman bartender. She is a young woman still, but she, too, has been in the service of the firm and given satisfaction wherever she was set to work ever since she was a girl in short dresses. When a diner calls for any vinous, malt or spirituous liquor with his food, it is swiftly prepared by this young woman, who stands behind a screen door.

I confess I have never sampled any of her drinks, but if they are as good as Mme. Joe's coffee they must be unsurpassed.

These three women took the task that lay nearest them, the work they knew how to do, and performed it so well that they raised it to an art.

SUSAN PEPPER.

Popular Velvet Disks.

Velvet disks are the latest trimmings. They are set arranged that they can be sprinkled and pasted on any fabric. Some white lace gowns have them put on in graduated sizes, and they are, while not a very durable trimming, at least effective. Generally they are put in waved lines, with the large ones at the bottom and the small ones at the top.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.

They Are an Elaboration on Those of Their Elders.

Children's garments this winter follow the fashion of those of their elders. They are covered with fine tuckings, stitchings and embroideries. The babies' coats especially show a wealth of fine needlework. A pretty model has the triple cape effect, the edge of each tiny cape being finished with a scalloped application of white panne. One of the newest frocks for a little girl is made of fine white wool crape, the entire dress being laid in horizontal pin tucks. It is trimmed with heavy yellow guipure lace in shaped bands, and through this at intervals are passed narrow velvet ribbons.

A knotted sash of black velvet ribbon completes this thoroughly French costume. The prejudice against having black on a child's dress seems to have died out, for one sees these chic touches of black quite frequently even on very young children.

The smart child's coat here shown is of coffee brown cloth, lined throughout with satin of the same shade. The coat depends principally for style on the heavy stitchings, which simulate an empire effect. A narrow collar and revers of mink give it a softening touch. The muff is also of the mink. The large picturesque hat is of pale blue felt trimmed with pompons of dark brown and velvet ribbon of the same shade.

COLD WEATHER COSTUMES.

Dresses of Checkerboard and Striped Velvet Are Novelties.

The latest Paris models in gowns show much larger sleeves. This increase, however, is chiefly noticeable below the elbow, where in some dresses it attains very "floppy" proportions. Velvets and velveteens make charming gowns. The most popular of these materials are either pressed into fine checks or else striped. Checkerboard velvets, as they are called, are simply plain colored velvets with the nap stamped in different directions to give the goods the effect of being checked. These velvet gowns are, many of them, made up with the skirts stitched down into narrow box plaits, which are allowed to flare at the bottom. The bloused waists are treated in a similar manner. Yokes of fine lace are introduced, and there are frillings and puffings of this at the elbow and wrists.

Nearly all the cloth gowns have a touch of velvet. Perpendicular bands of this appliqued down the skirt are a novelty, as are also velvet and lace appliqued figures, with the under material cut out to show a bright colored lining.

Gored flounces figure on nearly every skirt. The newer models have as many as half a dozen of these overreaching in width as they reach the bottom. The trains of all dressy costumes are longer than ever.

A simple but charming gown is shown in today's picture. It is made of royal blue velvet, and it is trimmed with deep saffron lace. The skirt is perfectly plain, with the exception of a graduated flounce. The waist is laid in box plaits, with a square yoke of all over lace outlined by the heavy lace appliques. Down the front there also runs a broader strip of this applique. The full undersleeves are of the all over lace, the belt of pale yellow silk to match the lace.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

FOR STREET WEAR.

Suits Are Becoming More and More Like Dressers.

Tailor made dresses are jauntier than ever. Many of them closely resemble dressers. The sleeves are puffed, and there is a deal of application about the blouses and skirts. A costume shown in a fashionable tailor's establishment had its skirt accordion plaited into a stitched yoke of plain cloth. This yoke effect was continued a little way up on the blouse waist, which was also in accordion tucks stitched down to give the snug tight fitting look so necessary to a smart coat. Then there was a yoke and a smart little standing up collar, also of the broadcloth. There seems to be a marked tendency toward trimming suits of black broadcloth with stitched bands of cloth in pastel tints, and also many embroidered and Persian vests are used with soft fronts of lace and chiffon.

Most of the collars are flat, or else they stand up military fashion. This is to allow the wearing of the new fur boas, which are in flat stole shapes this year. For those who wish to wear a long coat and who cannot stand the Louis Quinze or redingote effects there is a loose three-quarter length which gives very becoming lines.

Broadcloth and velvet are the proper materials for dressy occasions, but cheviot and silkeline are most stylish for all other occasions.

A very smart tailor made is here shown. Black cheviot was used for the original model, and this was trimmed with strappings of black panne. The coat has a high standing up collar and a short inner vest effect showing the waist beneath. The strappings are disposed so as to give the best possible lines to the figure. The sleeves have bell shaped upper and tight fitting under sleeves, which extend well over the hand. The skirt is plain, with the exception of a series of perpendicular straps, one of which outlines the bottom of the skirt in the back.

FLAT EFFECTS.

The Millinery of the Season Is Very Simply Trimmed.

Some of the newest millinery has a very bare and untrimmed appearance, *more especially the large toques of vel*vet with flat crowns and brims of folded velvet, where the sole decoration is a group of flowers or a couple of plumes poised on the left side. Very stylish hats are made entirely of lace, with ribbon borderings of velvet. One recently seen had black velvet borderings, with a knot of turquoise crepe de chine inside the front brim, which was slightly raised. There were also two rosettes of velvet on the left side which held a black and blue quill.

All sorts of fine lace and tucking are used to face the brims of hats. In the case of the three cornered toques now so much in vogue, chiffon is shirred and then banded with narrow velvet ribbons.

Today's picture shows a hat made of satin. It is tilted to one side, and are all fashionable hats this season. The crown is encircled by a band of black velvet sewed with lace application. A wide scarf of lace partly veils the brim and droops gracefully behind. A plume of finely velvet ospreys forms the ornaments the raised side, and on the hand there is an accordion pleated ruche of black chiffon held by a buckle of brilliants.

FUR FASHIONS.

The Latest Shapes—Expensive and Inexpensive Ones.

As the season advances furs become more and more attractive. The tendency seems to be toward fancy effects. Fur animals are no longer considered the smart thing by women who faithfully observe the changes in fashions. Flat stole and cape effects prevail, but by capes are meant the short ones reaching only about the shoulders and terminating in the front in two long stole shaped pieces. Capes reaching to the waist line are considered suitable only for middle aged women. Three-quarter capes, however, of sable, mink and ermine are used for carriage wear and for theater wraps. Chinchilla, ermine, sable and silver fox are the most *costly furs. The silver fox ranks high*est in the scale, a good muff setting for as high as $750. Chinchilla is becoming rarer and rarer. It is cked out with sable and other furs in a variety of ways. As it wears hardly more than one season it is a most extravagant purchase.

Forms of all shades are cheap and pretty. The fashion seems to be to make these up without the heads, trimming them instead with bunches of tails.

The zip to date ermine jacket in the sketch is made blouse shaped, with a postilion back. The wide collar of sable is cut in graceful curves. The sleeves, which are loose below the elbow, have wide cuffs of the sable. A jeweled belt confines the fullness of the blouse at the waist line. With this is worn a waist having a full front of chiffon. The skirt which accompanies the jacket is of pearl gray cloth. It has three gored flounces headed by an application of strapped cloth and deeper gray velvet.

The muff is of sable ornamented with six tails. The hat is of white felt trimmed with two pale blue ostrich plumes.

SEPARATE WAISTS.

The Shirt Waist Has Turned Into a Soft Tucked Blouse.

Of late separate waists harmonize with the skirts with which they are worn. A pale colored waist will be worn with a pale gray cream or white skirt.

Blouses of flannel or taffeta are heavily embroidered in conventional designs and enriched with medallions of lace. A favorite way of renovating a white waist is to trim it with a bertha of wide lace into which are applied medallions of pale tinted panne or silk. All over lace blouses are made with elbow sleeves and collarless necks, the only trimming being a big chou of velvet over the left breast. Blouses of velveteen are used both for dressy and other occasions. For the former they come in pale colors in plain and pompadour designs.

The shirt waist has developed into a soft affair, tucked and blousoned at the waist line with a dainty stock and belt. Sometimes there is a suspicion of applique about it.

The newest blouse sleeve is laid in tucks at the shoulder and cuff.

White chiffon and cream lace compose the dressy waist in the sketch. The yoke and upper part of the sleeves are laid in tucks, which are so arranged that they follow the curves best suited to the figure. There is a bolero effect of cream lace and irregular shaped applications on the upper sleeves and cuffs. The belt is of crushed white panne.

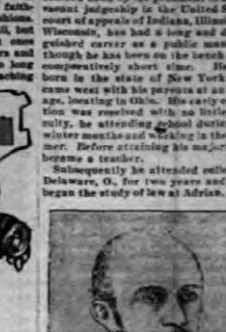
JUDGE FRANCIS BAKER.

Appointed by the President to Fill the Vacant Judgeship of the Seventh Judicial Circuit.

Judge Francis E. Baker, who has been decided upon by the president to fill the vacant judgeship in the United States court of appeals of Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, has had a long and distinguished career as a public man, although he has been on the bench but a comparatively short time. He was born in the state of New York and came west with his parents at an early age, locating in Ohio. His early education was received with no little difficulty, he attending school during the winter months and working in the summer. Before attaining his majority he became a teacher.

Subsequently he attended college at Delaware, O., for two years and then began the study of law at Adrian, Mich.



JUDGE FRANCIS E. BAKER.
(Appointed to Preside Over Seventh Federal Judicial Circuit.)

He was admitted to the bar in 1857 and at once located at Goshen, Elkhart county, Ind. In 1862 Judge Baker was elected in the state senate and served with distinction. Twelve years later he was elected to congress from the Thirteenth district, was reelected in 1874, and again in 1878, and voluntarily retired at the end of his third term.

After that Judge Baker was distinguished as a lawyer, and in 1892, when the vacancy occurred in the district court by reason of the elevation of Judge Woods to the circuit court of appeals, he was appointed to the district bench, and his work here induced his friends to urge him for succession to a higher place. Judge Baker's work as a federal judge has been characterized by great ability, energy and industry, and his many friends took a great interest in his appointment.

CHILI AND ARGENTINA.

South American Republics Now on the Verge of Declaring War Are Pretty Evenly Matched.

The war cloud which now hovers over the two South American republics, Chili and Argentina, has arisen out of the dispute over the boundary line between these countries, in the range of mountains running north and south. Should war devastate the two republics will find themselves very evenly matched. Neither has the advantage of the other in the matter of coast exposure and coast defense. Argentina, of course, is a much larger country in area and has a population apparently of 4,000,000, while Chili has a population of about 3,000,000. The area of Chili is 250,000 square miles, while that of Argentina, including its territories, is 1,135,000 square miles. The army of Argentina, on a peace footing, numbers 21,215 officers and men; that of Chili 19,150 officers and men. The Argentine navy consists of four coast defense armor-clads, five armored cruisers, three second-class cruisers of high speed, and seven smaller cruisers of modern construction, together with four destroyers and 22 torpedo boats.

(President of the South American Republic of Argentina.)

The Chilian fleet consists of five armor-clads, two second-class and two third-class cruisers, 11 gun vessels and gunboats, four destroyers of 30 knots and 29-knot speed, and 15 torpedo boats. Of the two navies by far the best boat is the cruiser O'Higgins, built at Elswick for Chili in 1896, and a fine vessel in all respects. She has a displacement of 8,370 tons and carries four eight-inch guns. With these forces, based on peace, the two republics have good model for development of powerful armies and navies in case of war.

Bird Was an Expert Thief.

A Parisian actress was the victim of a number of thefts from her home. Leaving a diamond bracelet on her dressing table, she went out through the keyhole of a door leading to an adjoining room. Suddenly the saw it disappear. The thief proved to be a starling, and the actress found that the bird had deposited in the chimney all her lost jewelry.

SHOULD BE ELMINATED.

When the wind swings around into the north and north-west, the invariable result is that a cloud of waste papers suddenly appears on West Front street between Madison avenue and Somerset street. Horses are frightened while the general appearance of the street is sadly injured.

It is but natural to suppose that these papers have been thrown out on the street by the merchants whose establishments front the street where this unsightly litter is to be found. It is not the case, however. The papers have been carried by the wind from the rear of the business blocks where they were heaped up near the brook.

It is probable that those who are responsible for the waste paper do not realize that their carelessness is so evidently shown. If they did, there would undoubtedly be a cessation of the trouble. Let, therefore, those merchants who are in the habit of throwing their waste paper in the rear of their stores and along the banks of Green brook, find some other means of disposing of it and the city will be decidedly the gainer.

PASSAIC RIVER POLLUTION.

The Passaic river pollution is one of the greatest sanitary problems which the New Jersey Legislature has had to solve for many a year. The report of the State Sewerage Commission has just been presented to Governor Voorhees and it contains the outline of a plan entirely different from any yet suggested to remedy this trouble.

The plan outlined by the commission is that an immense trunk sewer, to drain all the Passaic valley, be built to tidewater and extend way out into New York Bay where it cannot have any effect on that city. It is estimated that such a sewer will cost over $7,000,000, but the members of the commission believe that it will be economy in the end. It will, they say, offer the only final solution of the problem and would answer it for all time.

The construction of such sewer would be an engineering feat of no mean proportions. It is stated, however, that the contour of the land is such that it could be accomplished successfully and without being compelled to follow any roundabout path.

It would care for the sewage of Paterson, Passaic, Newark and all the smaller places which are located on or near the banks of the Passiac river and now empty their sewers into that stream.

A COMPARISON.

There is food for considerable thought in an editorial which appeared in last week's issue of the Morris County Chronicle. Editor Lindsley publishes at the head of his editorial column a list of some of the local possibilities for the new year. As Morristown is often pointed out as one of the ideal suburban cities, it is interesting to know just what that place still lacks.

Most prominently brought out is the dissatisfaction with the present service of the D. L. and W., both with New York and Dover. Faster time and more trains are mentioned. A trolley is suggested. A wish is expressed to have fewer children on the streets at night. This immediately suggests to mind a curfew law and the thought of a curfew law for such a good town as Morristown is rather a shock.

Among the municipal improvements referred to are more macadamized streets, dollar gas and electric light, and manual training in the public schools. Then comes the surprising request that there be fewer hard cider and poker joints.

Because we live in Plainfield and its troubles are brought home more forcibly in consequence, many Plainfielders are given to the belief that this city is worse off than many of its neighbors. This tabulation of the troubles of an ideal community like Morristown is therefore a revelation to many. When these things are compared with Plainfield's kicks, it certainly looks as if the people of the city and borough were unusually well favored. Just as present, unsatisfactory service on both steam and electric roads is engaging the attention of the population of Greater Plainfield but there is reason to hope that the condition of both will eventually be improved. And notice, Morristown hasn't any trolley at all and complains about the lack of proper railroad facilities.

PLANS FOR HOSPITAL.

The news that plans for the new buildings of Muhlenberg Hospital have finally been selected will be welcome, indeed, to the Plainfield public. Those who have had the slightest acquaintance with the present hospital accommodations have long realized the need of more commodious and up-to-date buildings for Plainfield's hospital. It has seemed as if the Board of Governors was unduly slow in starting the work. It is probable, however, that the men who are at the helm in this movement understand the situation better than anyone else and that they will see that no time is really lost in securing this needed improvement for the city.

While these plans have not yet been approved by the board itself, there is no doubt but the approval will be forthcoming. The subject will probably be brought up at the regular meeting of the board Monday evening. Action on the subject may, therefore, be expected.

The building committee was empowered some time ago to secure proper plans. A competition was arranged for which a number of architects entered. It is a subject for local pride that one member of the winning firm is a Plainfielder. Another Plainfielder was included in the list of those who were awarded lesser prizes for the merit of their drawings.

FATHER SMYTH BID HIS FRIENDS FAREWELL

Last Sermon to the Members of His Parish Before His Departure.

GIVEN IN THE MORNING.

ASKED FOR SAME GOOD TREATMENT FOR HIS SUCCESSOR.

Reviewed Many Things That Had Happened Since His Location in Plainfield—A Large Congregation Present.

Rev. Father P. E. Smyth's farewell words as retiring rector of St. Mary's church were spoken by him, Sunday morning. They were uttered in a voice choked with emotion which openly betrayed his great feeling at leaving a people with whom he has worked and advised for nineteen years. Nearly the entire parish was present despite two previous masses and the inclement weather. There was also present many members of other Plainfield churches, including several well known divines.

In his opening remarks, Father Smyth paid a high tribute to Father Egan, who is to be his successor, and asked that the same kindness and fidelity be given him as the present pastor had received for so long a time. He told of Father Egan's work in other fields and bespoke for him continued success with his new charge, being assured that he would receive its support and consideration such as a man in his position needs.

Continuing Father Smyth said his years in Plainfield had been happy ones. True, he had had cares and troubles but all had been surmounted and all had been benefitted by the conflict. Asking his hearers to go back to the time when he first assumed charge of St. Mary's church and recall the conditions which existed, he thanked God for the progress made.

"I couldn't ask for a better parish or a better home," he said. "but honestly and sincerely I've learned to know each one of you too well and a change will do us good. A new priest coming in has more energy and doesn't know the people and consequently will have to watch them out and will learn new things in regard to them. Nineteen years ago a few little troubles existed here which have since been cleared and the feeling now between pastor and people is good. I take satisfaction in the knowledge that I, even in a small way, have helped create this good feeling.

"I have no recommendations to make for the future, no suggestion to offer and my principal motive for leaving I have placed before you. I hope you will give me credit for it. But one more thing more I have to say and that is, encourage the Parochial school. If I were dying tonight my last wish would be that you keep up and support the church school. Our children must be trained in religious matters as well as for the walks of life and the school will do it."

In a brief interval previous to concluding Father Smyth took occasion to speak of the financial condition of the church. The total debt is now on the parish buildings, exclusive of the church which is clear, is about $17,000. Of this amount $10,000 is on the school, $5,000 on the convent and the remainder in notes. During the past year the receipts were $10,000 and from this $8,750 of the debt was paid off. In the nineteen years that Father Smyth has been at the head of the church $17,300 worth of repairs had been made to the buildings and $68,000 in interest had been paid on the church debt.

FEATURES OF CHRISTIANITY THE LITTLE ONES GRADUATED

THREE DISTINCTIVE ONES OUTLINED IN SERMON.

Last of Series of Special Sermons by Pastor of Trinity Reformed Church.

The last of a series of three special sermons was delivered Sunday morning at Trinity Reformed church by the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck. The subject was "The Three Distinctive Features of Christianity."—"Incarnation," "Atonement," and "Regeneration."

The pastor said the advent of Christ was amply prepared for by God, and in the discourse a week ago it was shown that the advent of Christ was to save souls. The first feature, "Incarnation," the speaker said showed God assuming human form and being tabernacled with men. In referring to the second feature, "Atonement," he said that men has been out of harmony and violated the laws of God. Now, Christ has made atonement for sin through sacrifice. Dr. Schenck considered regeneration one of the most important of the three features, and he said that the religion of Christ would last forever because it contains what man must have.

In conclusion, Mr. Schenck made a few remarks appreciate to the new year and urged all to have a desire to live more holy and devoted lives for Christ for the advancement of his cause.

THEATRICAL.

For New Year's week bills as attractive as the popular Christmas week programmes which have drawn such packed houses thus far, will be presented at Manager Proctor's four New York theatres. There will be a preponderance of vaudeville of the very best grade and when quality is considered along with quantity these offerings will alone take prominence in the amusement catalogues of the big city. But although there will be an abundance of the best variety turns, the drama will not be neglected and the Proctor Stock Company will hold forth as the leading feature at both the Fifth Avenue, where "The Still Alarm" will open its second and last week, and at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, where "A Bachelor's Honeymoon" will be spent and at the Fifty-eighth Street, where "The Last Word" will be spoken. In these presentations the Stock Company will surely maintain its reputation for careful and effective work. At the houses where plays are presented the vaudeville acts will be seen between scenes of the play, but at the Twenty-third Street the policy of continuous vaudeville will maintain. Manager F. F. Proctor's new theatre in Newark will be opened within ten days; two weeks at the outside. With the clearing up of a few minor details the handsomest theatre in the east, outside of New York city, and one of the handsomest theatres in America exclusively devoted to vaudeville will be thrown open to the public.

L. T. L. CHRISTMAS TREE

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL HELD SATURDAY.

Programme Given by Members of Loyal Temperance Legion —The Gifts.

The members of the Loyal Temperance Legion enjoyed their annual Christmas celebration, Saturday evening, in the W. C. T. U. rooms on Madison avenue. The attendance was the largest in the history of the Legion. A good sized tree, well filled, was one of the attractions.

After an opening song, "Christmas Night," there was a recitation, "The Little One's Welcome," by the Misses Mabel Seals, Mildred Dennis, Anna and Ethel Vail, Grace Lamatti, Julia Lamatti and Elsie Clark. Other recitations were "The Child Jesus," by the Misses Anna Vail, Clara Weber and Ethel Schenck; "Work and Play," by Russell Miller; "At Seven in the Morning," by Willie Cooney; "Just Before Christmas," Clifford Vail; "Christmas," the Misses Mildred Dennis, Ruth Moore, Elsie Clark, Grace Lamatti, Julia Lamatti, Lizzie Frank and Chas. Schuck, John Frank and Russell Miller; "The First Christmas," Miss Helen Woolley. There was also a lullaby song by the Misses Julia and Grace Lamatti, Lizzie Frank and Ethel and Anna Vail and a cradle song by the Legion.

Other features of the programme was a vocal solo by Mrs. Honeyman and the Chantauqua salute given by the Legion to Mrs. Elizabeth Parse, Mrs. R. K. Case and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, who were present as officers of the Union. One of the most enjoyable parts of the programme was the phonograph selections given by Mrs. George Macintyre.

At the close Mrs. Case made a few remarks to the children as past president. The roll call then followed and the children received boxes of candy. Miss May E. Howley, as president of the Legion, was in charge, assisted by Mrs. Dudley Miller and Mrs. Ira West.

ADDITION PLANNED.

Demands for Increased Floor Space Will be Met by Boehm.

Architects will soon be at work on the plans so that the improvements can be started in May.

UNEXPECTED FINALE TO BOMBARDMENT OF EGGS

Patrolman Higgins Captured Offenders and Made Them Clean Up the Debris.

'TWAS DONE AS A JOKE.

BUT ALL VESTIGE WAS REMOVED BY CAREFUL SCRUBBING.

Three Small Boys Bombarded Front of Mrs. Seal's Home With Ancient Eggs Saturday Afternoon.

Patrolman Morris Higgins assumed a new role, Saturday afternoon. In addition to meting out summary justice to three mischievous boys, he afforded a half hour's entertainment for 200 delighted spectators.

In their wanderings about town, Edward and Christopher Eskerson and Edward Lisner found some eggs of an uncertain age in the rear of a grocery store. They were confiscated by the boys who could find no target at which to hurl them until they reached Liberty street. Then a sign attached to the front piazza of Mrs. Seal's home caught their eye. The next moment a fusillade of eggs began. Some hit the sign, some spattered over the front door and a few more scattered about the porch.

When the supply of eggs gave out the boys decamped but not in time to escape Patrolman Higgins' eagle eye. All three were captured and marched back to Mrs. Seal's home. Mrs. Seal at once fell in with a plan suggested by the patrolman. Procuring pails and scrubbing brushes all three culprits were put to work removing the mess.

All three were made to take off their coats. While one carted water the other two were made to go over the entire piazza and the front part of the house beneath it with scrubbing brushes. They were kept at it until not a vestige of the eggs was to be found.

The crowd which gathered to witness the fun offered a score of suggestions as to how the work should be done. Several times the boys attempted to make a reply but when they caught the patrolman's stern glance they returned to the task without a word. When it was completed to the satisfaction of Mrs. Seals and Patrolman Higgins they were allowed to go.

Rev. George B. Shaw, of New York, who has been called to the pastorate of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, has returned after a four days visit to Plainfield. Sunday he officiated at the funeral of Miss Nellie Randolph, at Mount Pleasant.

SANTA CLAUS VISITED PERSEVERANCE LODGE

He Brought Nice Little Gifts For All the Knights Present.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

SANTA HAD TROUBLE IN GETTING TO THE LODGE ROOMS.

Each Gift Was Accompanied by a Verse—Santa Looked Like George O. Stevens—The Officers Elected.

All the good little knights in Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., received presents from Santa Claus last Friday. The knights had gathered together to hold their annual election, and old Santa wired them from the North Pole that he would drop in during the meeting.

All evening long, while the business session lasted, Santa sent telegrams from various points of his journey and at last he telegraphed from North Plainfield that "Newt" Smalley had "collored" him and that if he could ever "break away" from the discussion of "municipal ownership" he would visit the boys. At last Santa put in an appearance. In "general contour" he much resembled George O. Stevens, a worthy knight.

All sorts of presents he gave the men of the lodge and attached to each was a clever little verse, which like the present was a gentle "roast" on the recipient. The poetic effusions of Santa Claus gave one the idea that he had previously consulted William N. Runyon. Samuel Robinson received a live goat. After forty of the knights had been remembered in this fashion boxes of candy were given to "the little scholars," in classes of five. The "chicken bone class" and the "pig tail class" were well remembered. Later refreshments were served and Santa Claus said "good bye."

The committee in charge of the arrangements had fixed up a Christmas tree which was a wonder in its way. The members of the committee were William N. Runyon, chairman, Charles M. Ulrich, Jacob Blimm, Jr., Robert L. Lee and James McGinley.

At the business session the following officers were chosen: Councilor commander, William N. Runyon; vice chancellor, Charles M. Ulrich; prelate David Bush; master of the work, James Armstrong; master at arms, James McGinley; inner guard, Samuel Clouston; outer guard, Peter Strem; master of the exchequer, J. B. Higgins, keeper of records and seal, Charles McGinley; representative to Grand Lodge, William Young, alternate, Donald McInnes; trustees, Samuel Robinson, for three years, David Bowden, for two years.

PLANS ALL TOO ELABORATE

REPORT MADE CONCERNING THE HOSPITAL BUILDINGS.

Those of Tracy and Swartwout Were Most Satisfactory and They Will Prepare New Ones.

Following the transaction of routine business at the regular meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, held last evening, the members were received with much regret the resignation of H. P. Reynolds as treasurer of the organization. Mr. Reynolds has held the office for many years, but ill health has made it impossible for him to perform the duties devolving upon him.

The resignation was accepted and William C. Kinney, of 818 Madison avenue, was elected in his place. Mr. Kinney was first elected a member of the board in the place made vacant by the resignation of E. B. Clark.

The building committee reported that it had examined various plans offered for the new hospital buildings and that Tracy & Swartwout had been selected to be the architects. The plans submitted were all too elaborate and the successful architects will at once prepare others on a more modest scale in order that actual building operations may begin within the near future.

Miss Young, matron of the hospital, rendered her report for the past month as follows: Patients admitted 26; discharged cured 21; improved 3; not improved 1; died 1; remaining 15; treated for the month 43; dispensary patients treated 43; visits made by latter 204.

Setting a Prisoner Free.

A man with rheumatism is a prisoner. His fetters are none the less galling because they are invisible. To him Perry Davis' Painkiller comes as a liberator. Rubbed well into the swollen, stiffened joints, it not merely drives away the pain, it makes the muscles pliable so that the prisoner becomes a free man. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis. 25 and 50 cts.

New culverts have been constructed at East Second street and Johnston avenue, East Third and Richmond streets, and on West Eighth street west of Grant avenue. The following culverts have been rebuilt: 1—North and Leland avenues; 1—North and Netherwood avenues; 2—Watchung and Kensington avenues; 1—Putnam and Carlton avenues.

The culverts at Park avenue and Fifth street have been widened; those at West Second and Liberty streets have been altered to discharge more water into the Plainfield avenue storm sewer, and the culvert at North avenue and Richmond street has been provided with cast iron covers, the stone covers having been found too weak for the heavy loads passing to and from the freight house. Alterations have been begun on the culvert at East Fifth street and Watchung avenue so as to carry the water more freely under the street railway tracks.

Flagging and Curbing.

During the year 7,340 lineal feet of flagging have been laid, and 3,408 feet of curbing have been set.

The present practice in serving flagging notices has not proved satisfactory, and we recommend that in future only a limited number of notices should be served at one time and, upon the expiration of the time limit, that the Common Council should immediately proceed to fully complete the work called for, before serving further notices.

Street Lines and Monuments.

During the year the Street Commissioner has further extended the work of defining the street lines by iron and stone monuments, and a large number of the street intersections have been completed.

Miscellaneous.

The new steam roller has given entire satisfaction, and the saving in coal, as compared with that consumed by the former roller, has been about ninety cents a day.

Six hundred and eighty-three new street signs were purchased during the year, and all but eleven of them have been put up. We believe that no other expenditure made by your committee has given more general satisfaction than the amount paid for these signs.

In response to requests of the Common Council, the Union County Freeholders have erected new bridges over Cedar brook at North and Netherwood avenues, thereby greatly improving the condition of both streets during heavy rains; another bridge is much needed over Cedar brook at Berckman street.

During the repair of the city buildings at the disposal works, sheds were altered to accommodate the steam roller and sprinkling wagon; the former has been housed for the winter, and the latter is now undergoing a thorough overhauling, including new four-inch steel tires.

We believe that a saving of comfort and expense would result from the use of a street sweeping machine, which would be operated in the business portion of the city after the stores were closed for the night, by the same horses which would be used the next morning, with carts, to remove the sweepings. The best machines can be so adjusted as to level off loose stones into depressions, so that they are suitable to use on macadam streets, even if the latter are not in the best condition.

Sewers.

Considerable difficulty has been experienced this year from stoppages of house drains caused by the intrusion of roots, and many property owners have had the pipes taken up and relaid with heavy Portland cement joints, in some cases substituting cast iron pipe. The street sewers have worked satisfactorily, only one stoppage occurring, that being caused by a mixture of stone dust and water from a stone sawing machine.

All the sewers and flush tanks are inspected and tested about every two months, and all are in good order.

The contractor for sanitary sewers in North, South and Leland avenues has been unable to proceed with his work, owing to scarcity of cars delaying delivery of pipe. It seems probable that quite a number of other extensions to the sewer system will be demanded in the near future.

The completion of the new disposal works has been delayed long beyond the proper time, partly by the difficulty of securing so large a quantity of suitable filling material, but partly, we are compelled to say, by lack of energy on the part of the contractors.

We are much encouraged, however, by the experience of other places, and by the comments of visitors at the works, to believe that the new system will prove a satisfactory one to the city.

As there was no longer any intention of removing the buildings on the property to make room for more filtration beds, we have had the dwelling, barn and smaller buildings repaired, and the dwelling painted.

We recommend that in the spring the said filtration beds be planted with various crops and that every effort be made to get the entire plant and property into most attractive condition possible.

CHRISTMAS WEEK ENDS WITH CHURCH WEDDING

Marriage of Miss Pauline F. Humphrey to Rev. Ernest L. Walz, Jr., Saturday.

AFTERNOON CEREMONY.

BRILLIANT NUPTIAL FUNCTION WHICH WAS LARGELY ATTENDED.

Ceremony Performed by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, Assisted by Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, of New York—The Bridal Party.

Miss Pauline Fowler Humphrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Humphrey, of Hillside avenue, and Rev. Ernest Louis Walz, Jr., of New York, were married at the Crescent Avenue church, Saturday afternoon, before a large assemblage of friends from New York, Chicago and this city. It was a brilliant nuptial function and coming as it did, at the close of the Christmas week it served as a happy climax to an eventful season.

The interior of the stately edifice was adorned with Christmas greens and floral designs. It was precisely at 4 o'clock when William H. Hiltman, organist of the City Park church, New York, commenced the opening strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin" and at that moment the bridal party entered.

The ushers came first. They were Rev. J. H. Dennison, Rev. W. R. Jelliffe, and John R. Innerarity, of New York; George Campbell Harding, of Pittsfield, Mass.; and William R. Gilbert and James P. Murray, of this city. Miss H. Zephine Humphrey, of New Haven, Conn.; Miss Ethel Genung, of Brooklyn, and the Misses Belle Noyes and Katharine Ludington, of New York. Preceding the bride, who was accompanied by her father, Henry M. Humphrey, was the maid of honor, Miss Lucy H. Humphrey, the sister of the bride.

In front of the pulpit the groom and his best man, Frederick W. Walz, of New York, joined the bridal party and the nuptial ceremony was performed. Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the church, was the officiating clergyman, and he was assisted by Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the distinguished divine of New York.

As Mr. and Mrs. Walz wended their way down the main aisle at the conclusion of the ceremony, Mendlessohn's wedding march was rendered by Mr. Hiltman.

The reception which followed at the home of the bride's parents was in the nature of an exclusive affair, only the relatives and intimate friends of the young couple being the chosen guests. A delightful wedding supper was served and after receiving the felicitations and profuse congratulations of the guests Mr. and Mrs. Walz departed on their honeymoon.

The bride was gowned in white satin, entrain, heavily trimmed with silk and pearl embroidery, which is a family heirloom, having been brought over from France many years ago. There was also trimming of Venitian point lace. Her veil of tulle was caught up with a spray of orange blossoms. The shower bouquet was of bridal roses. The gowns of the maid-of-honor and the bridesmaids were of white organdie, trimmed with cream lace. They wore white Leghorn hats and carried large bunches of holly. Lillies of the valley were the boutonnieres of the ushers.

In the large and valuable collection of gifts received by the bride were dainty designs in silver, cut glass, china and Favrile glass as well as some attractively framed pictures.

At the conclusion of their honeymoon trip, Mr. and Mrs. Walz will repair to their new home in Plainfield, Vt., where the groom will assume his duties as pastor of the Congregational church, of that place, to which he has recently been called.

Before the bridal party made its appearance at the church door, Mr. Hiltman played with much expression "The Wedding Day at Troldhaugen."

An Extravagance's Story.

"I suffered for years with a bronchial or lung trouble and tried various remedies but did not obtain per manent relief until I commenced using One Minute Cough Cure," writes Rev. James Kirkman, evangelist, of Belle River, Ill. "I have no hesitation in recommending it to all sufferers from maladies of this kind." One Minute Cough Cure afford immediate relief for coughs, colds and all kind of throat and lung troubles. For croup it is unequalled. Absolutely safe. Very pleasant to take, never fails and is really a favorite with the children. They like it. L. W. Randolph.

Christmas Party.

In honor of her children, Joseph and Sadie, Mrs. Henry Moskowitz, of East Front street, gave a birthday party Christmas Day. Singing and recitations were the features.

tary remarks. Mr. Mellick was the first to speak. He expressed his gratification concerning the pleasant relations during the past year with President Dumont, who now retires. He said that the Council is fully acquainted with what Mr. Dumont has done and all could appreciate his devotion and faithful service to the city. He had been a student of the city affairs and he moved that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Dumont for his agreeable manner and fair treatment.

Mr. Dumont responded with a few well chosen words. He said that his service had not been a burden to him. He was interested in the city and its affairs. He referred to the fact that in the last two years the same membership of the Council had passed from the Nineteenth to the Twenty Century. He believed that the Council had been a strictly business one, which was no reflection on other Councils. He believed that the present Council's record was a clean one, and no better wish could be extended to the new Council than that the body show a clean record. He thanked the members for the kind expressions of regard.

Mr. Buckle continued the compliment by referring to Mr. Craig, who will retire this year. He expressed his regrets over Mr. Craig's retirement and said that he always found him a congenial worker. Mr. Craig responded with a few words, thanking all for the courtesy shown. He said that he performed his duty from the heart and his relations had been pleasant. In conclusion, Mr. Buckle remarked that the present Council has much to be proud of when actions are judged by results. This concluded the speech-making and the Council adjourned.

Health and Beauty.

A poor complexion is usually the result of a torpid liver or irregular action of the bowels. Unless nature's refuse is carried off it will surely cause impure blood. Pimples, boils and other eruptions follow. This is nature's method of throwing off the poisons which the bowels failed to remove. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are world famous for remedying this condition. They stimulates the liver and promote regular and healthy action of the bowels but never cause griping, cramps or distress. Safe pills. L. W. Randolph.

Nasal CATARRH

In all its stages there should be treatment.

F. A. VIERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, SAYS:

Baltimore, Md., March 30, 1901.

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.

About five years ago my right ear began to sing, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in that ear entirely.

I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the most eminent ear specialist of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.

I then, saw your advertisement, accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and today, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours,

CHRISTMAS AT THE CHURCHES

Beautiful Musical Services Marked the Day of the Saviour's Nativity.

PROGRAMMES SELECTED

Services Held in Episcopal, Roman Catholic, German Reformed and Lutheran Churches—Many Attended Despite the Unpropitious Weather.

The weather of Christmas day was not ideal, but still there were many people about the streets continually. The houses of worship, where services were held in the morning, were crowded by congregations which joined heartily in the services. In the afternoon the rain prevented much outdoor activity.

In the churches, the services were particularly elaborate, the music in all cases being a special feature. The Roman Catholics and Episcopalians held several services in their various edifices during the morning. Among the others which observed the day in this manner, were the German Lutherans, German Reformed, Swedish Lutherans and the Swedish Pilgrims.

It was a joyful Christmas at the Church of the Holy Cross. There were two services held, one the early celebration at 7:30 o'clock and the other morning prayer and late celebration at 10:30 o'clock. Both were largely attended, especially the latter, at which the church was thronged with members of the parish and their friends. The chancel and nave were profusely adorned with greens and many Christmas emblems.

Rev. W. Montgomery Downey, the rector, was assisted at the latter service by Rev. T. W. H. Neilson, formerly rector of St. Michael's church, Trenton. The music was very elaborate. The vested choir, which had been well trained by the choirmaster, Wm. E. MacClymont, sang splendidly. The order of service was: Organ prelude, Willis; processional, It Came Upon the Midnight Clear; responses, Tallis; Vesper Hymn, Dykes, in F, Adlam; Jubilate, Cooke; Introit—Behold I Bring You Good Tidings, Clare; Kyrie and Gloria Tibi, in F, Steane; hymn; sermon by the rector; Gloria Patri, Farrant; offertory—bass solo by F. B. Moffett, O'er the Hills to Bethlehem, Shelley; Sursum Corda and Sanctus, in F, Steane; communion hymn, Rockingham; Gloria in Excelsis, old chant, Nunc Dimittis, Gregorian; recessional—Mendelssohn; organ postlude.

The full vested choir was in the chancel, and in it were J. Malcolm Davis, Paul W. Blakely, Harrison Dahn, Walter M. Vail, Elmer Bohan, Herman Klinsman, Clarence Hand, Herbert F. Glaentzer, William Westphal, David Allen, William H. Burtis, Howard Perry, George Perry, Ira Vail, Russell Vail, F. M. Whiteley, George Rogers, Russell Conroy, William L. Heath, George M. Meade, Marshall Ward, R. S. Lane, Willard M. Miner, Wesley Messersmith, E. P. T. Smith, A. R. Smith, S. G. Sutton, Henry Williams, George Westervelt, Basil Cockley, F. B. Moffett, organist, Miss Daisy M. Zerbe; choirmaster, Wm. E. MacClymont.

St. Mary's R. C. church was crowded at all the masses, Christmas morning. The interior of the sacred edifice was beautifully decorated. In front of St. Joseph's altar was a representation of the scene in the manger after the birth of the Saviour.

A solemn high mass at 6 o'clock, called the Shepherd's Mass, was celebrated by Rev. P. J. Smyth with Rev. A. Westman, as deacon, and Rev. Michael Glennon, as sub-deacon. Low masses were said at 7:30, 8:30 and 9:30 o'clock, the last being the children's mass.

The solemn high mass at 10:30 was the chief service of the day. Rev. J. A. Westman was the celebrant, Rev. M. J. Farley, the deacon and Rev. Michael Glennon, the sub-deacon. At the mass the music was superb.

In full the musical programme was: Processional, Mendelssohn; Hark, the Herald Angels Sing, by the chancel choir; Kyrie, Gloria and Credo, Groiza; offertory, Adeste Fideles, Novello; Sanctus, Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Groiza; recessional, O God, Our Help In Ages Past, Veronica, by the chancel choir. The Responsoria was chanted by the chancel choir under the direction of William O'Keefe.

Solos were rendered by Mrs. F. V. Bradley, soprano; Mrs. M. Owens, alto; B. Clark, tenor, and Matthew Cashin, bass. The chorus consisted of twenty-four voices. Miss M. Smith was the organist.

At St. Joseph's R. C. church, a choir of sixty children sang Mattfeld's mass at the celebration at 5:30 o'clock. The Adeste Fideles was sung at the offertory and the Te Deum was sung by the choir and congregation at the close of the mass. The children's mass was said at 8:30 o'clock and the last solemn high mass was celebrated at 10:30 o'clock.

Groitzi's mass was sung by a double quartette assisted by a chorus. One quartette was made up of members of the regular choir and those in it were: Miss Tina Smith, soprano; Mrs. Reilly, alto; Alfred LaPorte, tenor; and James Bailey, bass and musical director. Mrs. Alfred LaPorte was the organist. The Adeste Fideles, as arranged by V. Novello, was sung at the offertory.

In St. Peter's German Lutheran church a service was held at 10:30 o'clock in the morning, and the Christmas hymns used in the Fatherland were rendered with much fervor. Rev. Theodore Hansing, the pastor, preached in German.

The service at the German Reformed church commenced at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. As in the other German church the interior of the edifice was tastefully adorned with greens and Christmas emblems. Rev. G. Hauser, the pastor, preached on "The Birth of Christ."

Rev. O. G. Norseen, the pastor of the Swedish Pilgrim church, held a service in the Congregational church parlor at 6:30 o'clock in the morning. There was a fair attendance of the members. Swedish Christmas hymns were sung and the pastor preached in that language. The Swedish Lutheran Gethsemane church congregation held a service in Grace church parish building at 6:30 o'clock and Rev. H. Johnson officiated.

Rev. Erskine Rodman, the rector, and Rev. J. H. Wilson, the curate, conducted three services at Grace church, which was beautifully decorated for the festal occasion. An early celebration was held at 7 o'clock and another an hour later. The most attractive service was held at 10:30 o'clock and was followed by Holy Communion. At this service the curate preached a brief and eloquent Christmas sermon.

The order of the music was: Processional—Adeste Fideles; Venite and Gloria, Turner; Te Deum, Attwater; Benedictus, King Hall, in B flat; Introit—When All Things Were In Quiet Silence, Henry John King, the solo part being rendered by Miss Cornelia Miller; Kyrie Eleison and Gloria Tibi, King Hall; hymn—While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night, Gabriel; offertory—The Heavens Are Telling, from Hayden's Creation, the two quartette parts being rendered by Miss Miller, Miss B. Miner, William Tallamy and Arthur F. Freeman; communion service—King Hall's, in B flat, the solos in the Agnus Dei being by Miss Miller and Mr. Tallamy; psalm 117, Mesuller; recessional—Hark! What Mean Those Holy Voices? Geo.

The full vested choir composed of the following: Sopranos, Fred Kanen, Herbert Smith, Herman Scheller, John Yose, Jos. Miller, Herbert Grant, Fred Bach, Alfred Manly, Earl Vanderbilt, Stanfell Forbes, Sherman Haverle, Gurth Williams, Clarence Steiner, H. Smith and the Misses Jessie Little, Mildred Ulrich, Margaret Yeager, Beadie Martin, Jennie Smith, Ethel Forbes, Carrie Fuller and Cornelia Miller; contralto, Albert Yeager, Beatrice Miner and Ada Clark; tenors, W. R. Cock, Wm. Tallamy, G. W. Johnson and Laurens H. VanBuren; bassos, Arthur F. Freeman, Fred J. Pope and Wm. Hepburn; crucifer, William Jeffrey; acolyte, Blanchard Fosgate; organist and choirmaster, Mrs. Wm. A. Freeman.

At the Church of the Heavenly Rest the day was observed in a fitting manner. Rev. William Moore, the lay reader, conducted a service held at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. The interior of the church edifice was tastefully decorated and about the nave were placed the handsome banners of the Sunday-school. Carols and Christmas anthems were sung, although the formal Christmas service will not be held until Sunday.

The early celebration at St. Stephen's church was at 7:30 o'clock and at 10:30 there was matins followed by the second celebration at 11 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Johnson officiating. The musical features were very good, especially the anthem "Sing O Heavens."

An Evidence of Harmony.

All the twenty-one employes of The Daily Press assembled in the editorial rooms, Tuesday afternoon, and presented Albert L. Force, editor and proprietor, with a handsome mahogany easy-chair, inlaid with pearl. The presentation speech was made by City Judge Wm. N. Runyon. It was an excellent evidence of the harmony which prevails these days in The Daily Press office between employer and employes.

United Workmen Fix Date.

CURE FOR RED TAPE.

Chicago Man Collects a Bill After a Hard Struggle.

Ran Up Against an Office Where They Had System—Got His Money After He Had Taught the Barnacles a Lesson.

Stories of the red tape in the government departments at Washington are common, but they are not the only places where delays in the transaction of business are found. There are concerns in every large city so hemmed in by red tape that it may take a week or so to untangle it, and a Chicago man ran into one of them not long ago.

The concern owed him a little money, and after waiting awhile for a check he went to collect it. He didn't go far, however, for he was stopped by a boy at the outer door of the first of the many offices.

"What do you want?" asked the boy.

"Money," said the man.

"What for?" demanded the boy.

The man explained, and thereupon the boy told him that all such accounts were paid Saturdays at the cashier's office. So the man came back Saturday.

"Don't know anything about it," said the cashier. "You'll have to get an order from some one."

Then the man started out after the order and promptly ran up against the boy again.

"Write out your name and the nature of your business," said the boy, "and I'll take it in to Mr. Smith."

The man did as he was told, and word came back that Mr. Smith didn't know anything at all about it.

"If I can see Mr. Smith half a minute," suggested the man, "I think I can straighten the matter out."

"Mr. Smith has no time to see you," answered the boy, "but maybe Mr. Jones knows something about it."

Mr. Jones was equally inaccessible. Another boy guarded the outer door for him, and another statement had to be written out and sent in to him, which resulted in the announcement that Mr. Jones didn't know anything about it.

"THAT WILL WAKE THEM UP."

"Can't I see anybody in this office?" demanded the man in desperation. "It's only a small matter, and if I could get hold of some one in authority I could straighten it out in less than two minutes."

"No," answered the boy. "Can't see anybody here unless he knows about your business first."

The man next tried writing a letter, but it remained unanswered, so he went back in person. By this time he had become interested as well as indignant. He wanted to see how much time and labor it would take to get the money.

On the second trip luck favored him. Workmen were changing some office partitions, and he managed to slip through when no one was looking and get hold of a man at one of the desks.

"How about it?" he asked, when he had stated his business.

"Everything here," replied the man at the desk, "is done according to a system. Now, if anything is due you, you should make out a bill in regular form and—"

"Make out a bill!" cried the amateur collector. "Bang it all! I can't get a chance to present a bill to any one."

However, that seemed to be the only thing left for him to do, so he departed to make out a bill; and while he was doing it he kept getting warmer and warmer, until he reached a point where he made the bill "for services rendered, $157." Then he returned to the office and gave it to the first boy he met.

"I'll bet that will wake them up," he said to himself.

It did, says the New York Sun. The boy was back inside of two minutes with the message that "Mr. Smith says it is exorbitant. He called at the right department through the office 'phone and was told the amount due was only $7."

"Of course," said the man with the bill, "but I wanted to get action on it some way. You tell Mr. Smith that there is a discount of $150 for cash."

Word came back that a check would be mailed that afternoon; and it was. All of which shows that there is a way to wake up a red tape office.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For Week Beginning Jan 6. Conducted by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—The Faith which Saves Rev.—Matt. vi. 33; Gen. xvi. 7, 8; Matt. xxi. 22.

On the first Sabbath of the new year it is appropriate to study, first, things in our lives. Life is made up of many elements. All are important. No element of life is to be lightly esteemed. The most insignificant phase of life may be tremendously important to us. But some elements of life are more important than others. Some are to be placed first, with others second. That it is important to know the things which should come first in life is apparent to all. Ignorance on this subject might lead us to give undue emphasis to that which is of least importance at the expense of that which is most important. Many are placing the secondary things of life first and as a result are wasting or ruining their lives. Esau realized his error in failing to appreciate what should have been of first importance in his life, and many modern Esaus are following in his footsteps.

The topical references suggest several things that should come first in our lives.

1. The kingdom of God should come first. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Life's greatest kingdoms before us—the kingdoms of the world and of God. Which shall be sought first? Many seek first the kingdom of the world, expecting to enter the kingdom of God when success in the world has been achieved. But this is not Christ's idea of the relative importance of these kingdoms. He says to His disciples, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." But what about the things of the world? The man who seeks first the kingdom of God may leave other things to God. God controls the kingdom of this world as well as His own kingdom, and to those who are truly His children He will give all of this world that is needful and consistent with His eternal good.

2. The kingdom of prayer should come first. The first thing that Abraham did when God promised him the land of Canaan was to erect an altar in His name. His first act after he had pitched his tent between Bethel and Hai was to "build an altar unto the Lord and call upon the name of the Lord." Abraham's altars signified thanksgiving and prayer. For the new blessings that come into our lives with each new day we should erect altars of thanksgiving and prayer to our Lord.

3. Service to Christ should come first. "Jesus said unto him, Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead." In no better way could Christ have enforced the principle that service to Him should come first in our lives. No duty is more sacred than the duty we owe to our dead, and yet Christ here declares that even this duty is second to that which we owe to Him. "Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead." Thus is the supreme claim of Christ upon our lives enforced. If it stands above our most sacred duty, it stands necessarily first above all other duties. "Christ first" should be the motto of our lives.

BIBLE READINGS.

Gen. xxxv. 1-7; I Sam. i. 9-11; Ps. cv. 1-5; cxxxvii. 5, 6; Prov. iii. 13-18; Eccl. xii. 1, 13, 14; Mark ii. 14; John ix. 4; I Cor. xii. 31; II Cor. viii. 5.

Prayer.

O thou Divine Life, in whose greatness the smallness and the fragmentariness of our imperfect lives may be taken up and blessed and forgiven and made one and nearly complete. Thou whose gentleness should make us great, we would be thankful for the beautiful promises that are always calling us to better and nobler lives! May all that is dull and unreceptive of truth and beauty be rooted and aroused to high devotion and holy will, that we may forever escape the dread coercion of evil deeds, the fatal unraveling of conscience, the days of feeble resolve, the years we would, but cannot, because it would not when it should! And may the thought that what we have sown that shall we also reap abide in our minds, with all its fear and all its solemn joy! Amen!—George R. Freeman.

The Church and the World.

The power of religion should leaven the world and not be leavened by it. Of course there must be a discrimination between the two, and I am not one of those who think that the church has nothing to learn from the world. Life is a big school, and it is part of God's plan to teach the saints of the ages—love, pressure, temptation and difficulties of the world. But we hold that we are stronger than the world, that Christ has overcome the world, and our faith is similarly to overcome. The world we give up for spiritual life is holiness, but the positive side of holiness is an abounding spiritual vitality that takes hold of all that is best in life and is itself more sober, sane and attractive than anything the world can show.—Dr. W. T. Davison.

Burden Bearing.

Upon the summit of loving
Christ stood, and, gazing down the street,
As I sought with unattuned yearning
To climb the dear Saviour's feet,
And while I struggled with burdens
If only I were understood—
It is sure to make men happy,
The Master said, to help them good.

The heart that is full of trouble
A feast of rebellion seems to me,
The more that alone it suffers,
That cries out against its cross,
And there never was a burden
There never was "ought" or "should,"
Which grieved the Perfect spirit
To seek and obtain the good.

But sympathy, sweet companion,
Love's accents, tender and mild,
Rich anger and strife and sinning
The pangs of the little child,
He's hearing another's burden,
If only I were understood,
Gives Christ over the struggle for climbing
To be high and holy and good.
—Philadelphia Ledger.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 5. "Trusting the Promises"—Text. Rev. xxi. 5.

"Behold I make all things new."
I wait for my story:
The birds cannot sing it,
Not one as yet in the tree;
The buds cannot show it,
Not even the bloom, lying low,
Such as I wish it to be.

Each life is a story, unfolding its plot as years pass; a drama more interesting than any fancy can originate. What humor, what pathos, what heroism, what misery and meanness are woven in this play in which we all have part! What mingling of interests and yet what isolation in power for every one!

The new year comes up. No stopping the looms of life. All moves on the same as ever. All day is much like yesterday and the day before. The sun shines as ever, and the world moves in its accustomed grooves. So will it the day after we die. But, though things are as of old, we may become new. It is the hope that we change. Our story grows. Birds and bells lose their old childhood art of foretelling the future, but we have the power of shaping that coming time as we please.

What shall this year yield for me? is a question well to ask now. What are you seeking? If more enjoyment, more money, more knowledge and influence, very likely it will bring some of what you wish, but not enough to satisfy, never enough to make the soul content. That restless, unsatisfied, immeasured thirst is not quenched at those springs. New pleasure, new wealth, new knowledge and fresh power may all be good as far as they go, but new life is the only thing that keeps the soul young and capable of getting the good out of things. What are you worth today? Take account of stock and see what are your assets and liabilities. Has all you have obtained amounted to enough to pay for the labor expended? The world is full of riches. Mines of fabulous richness wait for you to stake your claim and work them.

If the old has been unsatisfactory, why not make this a different year? Hire out to the Lord of Life; get into His vineyard and, at work for Him, New aims, new deeds, new friends, new inspiration and new rewards of effort all lie in this field. Life is grandly worth living and is worth living gradly.

Has the past year given some soul growth? Then be thankful and keep straight ahead. How much more there is to enjoy in the blessed pathways! Get all the pure pleasure possible out of life. Let life be exulting and joyous for you. Virtue is not doleful, but shouts for gladness. Get and use the things of earth, but use them wisely for self and neighbor and God. Know all you can that will be helpful and right, and in all your getting get understanding. Know more in order to be better.

Make all fast to God.

Our lives need inspection often and thoroughly lest, like the Brooklyn bridge, some strape break, and by overloading the whole structure may collapse.

Make the vows hold firm. Renew them as they weaken or new strain comes on them. Suffer no rotten plank to remain. Remove all wornout things, and keep all the life fresh and firm with Christ.

Symptoms of Self.

Some of the manifestations of the self life are: A disposition to look at everything with an eye to how it will affect ourselves. It is an instinctive, widewake looking out for what we call No. 1. There is a disease in the roots of some trees and vegetables called "root knot," which causes the roots, instead of stretching themselves out in the soil, to curl themselves back into a knot, stunting the growth and preventing fruit.

The self life is always unwittingly magnifying itself. It will talk incessantly of its efforts and great achievements; it will relate incidents in its past life in such a way as to show off self to the best advantage.

A soul affected with mental root knot is always turning back upon itself, and if it preaches or prays or sings or gives money or enters any enterprise it has a keen faculty of seeing how the results will affect its own honor or reward or happiness.—Rev. G. D. Watson in "Way of Faith."

The Smallest Attitude.

The smallest attitude a man can take, whether he is still rejoicing in his youth or getting into years, is that attitude of awe and reverence which bells a man confronted by facts of our habitual experience, that attitude of dedicated will which, for so much received, pledges the best that it can give.—John W. Chadwick.

Not Gifts, but Graces.

God respects not the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they are; nor the rhetoric of our prayers, how long they are; nor the music of our prayers, how melodious they are; nor the logic of our prayers, how methodical they are; but the divinity of our prayers, how heart sprung they are. Not gifts, but graces, prevail in prayer.—Presbyterian.

A Continual Struggle.

Life is a struggle. The contestants are inherited tendencies and our ideals. We must not weaken, but so overcome that the inherited tendencies shall prove a blessing and not a curse. We must direct our past into the mold of the present.—American Hebrew.

Four Things.

Four things a man must learn to do
If he would make his record true—
To think before he acts and feels,
To love his fellow men sincerely,
To act from honest motives purely,
To trust in God and heaven securely.
—New York Independent.

CHRISTMAS AT THE HOSPITAL

ANNUAL CELEBRATION TOOK PLACE THERE CHRISTMAS AFTERNOON.

Grace Church Choir Assisted in Carols—Gifts Were Presented to All Present.

While hundreds of Plainfielders thoroughly enjoyed the festivities of Christmas-tide, there were none that appreciated the day more than those who were detained at Muhlenberg Hospital. The annual celebration took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, when, as usual, the tree was lighted and there was the customary pleasant features to mark the happy event. Considering the inclemency of the weather there was a large attendance, including many graduate nurses and visitors in general.

As on all previous occasions of a like nature, the vested choir from Grace Episcopal church, under the direction of the organist, Mrs. W. A. Freeman, was present and rendered beautiful music. Among the selections were "Come All Ye Faithful," and "Sun of My Soul." Two other selections were Christmas carols.

A part of the festivities of an interesting character was the address by Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel. His happy words, appropriate to the occasion, were listened to attentively.

After the exercises, there was the distribution of gifts under the direction of the Board of Governors and the Woman's Auxiliary. Every one of the sixteen patients, as well as every nurse and attache of the hospital received presents, including a box of candy and an orange. Many of the gifts were of a substantial nature.

Held From the Late Residence on Grandview Avenue, Tuesday.

The funeral of Joseph S. Powlison, of Grandview avenue, was held from his late residence, Tuesday morning. There was a large number of friends present to pay their last respects.

The interment was made in Bedminster. Phillip and Peter Vroom, nephews of Mr. Powlison, and George S. VanArsdale and John Dolliver were the pallbearers.

DINNERS FOR POOR, TREE FOR CHILDREN

Such Were the Christmas Accomplishments of the Local Salvation Army.

TREE CHRISTMAS EVE.

SENT OUT 225 BASKET DINNERS TO PLAINFIELD'S NEEDY.

Ensign and Mrs. McCloud Worked Hard for the Success of Their Plans—Presents on the Tree For All.

Through the efforts of Ensign and Mrs. McCloud, in charge of the local corps of the Salvation Army, 225 Plainfield families were enabled to partake of an excellent Christmas dinner at their own homes. In addition, over 100 children were given a genuine treat, Tuesday evening, in the shape of an entertainment at the barracks, a Christmas tree and the gift of a toy such as only children can appreciate. Briefly stated the Army was the means of its being a merry Christmas for many of Plainfield's worthy poor.

Mr. and Mrs. McCloud worked early and late for weeks in advance preparing for the event. They were amply repaid by the expressions of joy which lighted up the recipient's faces. The dinners were prepared and placed in baskets which were then delivered in time for yesterday's feast. The menu consisted of fowl, vegetables, fruit and bread. At some places enough was placed in the baskets to supply eleven people.

The children's share in the army's beneficence was extended them on Christmas eve. The hall was filled with a joyous expectant crowd of them of all ages. There was also a generous sprinkling of adults.

Ensign McCloud was in charge and under his direction the following programme was rendered: Recitation, Miss Grace Philmore; recitation, George Walsh; recitation, Raymond VanOrden; solo, Miss Ella Walsh; solo, Harris Martin; duet and motion song, Myrtle and Pearl McCloud, remarks by the ensign.

At the close of the exercises Santa Claus appeared in the person of Edward Brunn and proceeded to amuse the children after which each was presented with a doll or toy. Though the gifts were small, there was no doubt in the minds of the givers but what they were acceptable. Altogether the affair was a decided success and speaks well for the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. McCloud and the members of the army corps who assisted them.

WED CHRISTMAS EVE.

Miss Katherine Meier Was Quietly Married to Franklin Nelson Diem at Bride's Home.

Miss Katherine Meier, daughter of Mrs. Anna Meier, of East Fourth street, and Franklin Nelson Diem, of Cedar street, were married at the residence of the bride's parent at 10 o'clock Christmas eve.

The nuptial event was somewhat of a quiet affair, only the relatives and intimate friends of the bride and bridegroom being present at the ceremony. Rev. George Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church, officiated. Miss Caroline Meier, a sister of the bride, was the bridesmaid, and John Taylor acted as best man. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, William Meier.

The parlor, where the nuptial ceremony was performed, was tastefully adorned with greens, holly and cut flowers. After the ceremony a wedding supper was served. The bride was gowned in white silk and carried a bouquet of bridal roses and the bridesmaid wore a grey gown and carried pink carnations. Mr. and Mrs. Diem will reside on West Second street.

NEARING CENTURY MARK.

Mrs. Emily Connett Celebrated Her Ninety-Fourth Birthday.

A pleasant celebration Dec. 23, was that enjoyed by Mrs. Emily Connett, widow of the late Benjamin Connett, it being the ninety-fourth anniversary of her birthday. The event was celebrated at her home on Manning avenue, where she lives with her daughter, Mrs. Lambert DeCamp. Many friends and neighbors called on Mrs. Connett and the afternoon was thoroughly enjoyed. Mrs. John Stevens, of 193 Watchung avenue, is a daughter of Mrs. Connett. The latter is enjoying fairly good health.

But the Unpropitious Weather Did Not Spoil the Christmas Entertainments.

A NUMBER POSTPONED.

The Others Had a Delightful Time With Professional Entertainers or Elaborate Programmes by Local Talent—Those Who Took Part.

"Santa Claus" kept most of his engagements in Plainfield, last Thursday, even if it did happen to be an exceedingly rainy night. The dampness also failed to quell the ardor of the young people and they were out in force to meet him. The programmes, all more or less elaborate, which had been arranged to entertain the members of the various Sunday-schools until the arrival of the good old Christmas saint, were given complete, but few of the participants staying away on account of the unpropitious weather.

The Sunday-school entertainments were all good. In some cases, professional entertainers were provided, while in others the programme was supplied by the young people of the school.

CALVARY BABTIST CHURCH.

The members of Calvary Baptist church and their friends enjoyed a musical entertainment, last Thursday, furnished by New York talent. It was a decided novelty and was enjoyed by a large audience.

The programme, as rendered under the direction of Mrs. Lulu Scott, consisted of vocal and instrumental selections by the Mallen family, of New York, considered excellent artists in their line. In brief it was as follows: Trio, "Good Evening One to All," Mallen family; solo, "Thy Sentinel Am I," Mrs. M. J. Staats, of New York; violin selection, Miss Mamie Mallen; solo, "My Dream of You," Mrs. M. J. MONROE AVE. M. E. CHURCH.

At the Monroe Avenue M. E. church the feature was the usual Christmas cantata in which the pupils of the Sunday-school took part. This year the entertainment was better than ever and the costumes of the participants were elaborate.

The title of the cantata was "Santa's Surprise." The principal characters were represented by Avis Aldrich, Chystelle McMurray, Marion Pearson, Willie Briggs, Jerry Manning, Charles Leland, Guyon Fountain, Harry Lade and Harvey Stryker. The committee in charge of the entertainment consisted of Miss Charlotte Aldrich, Miss May Pound, Miss Mary Beekman and Miss Rose Adams.

CRESCENT AVE. CHURCH.

The annual Christmas entertainment of the Sunday-school of the Crescent Avenue church was held last Thursday in the chapel of that edifice. It consisted of many views shown by means of the projectoscope.

In the afternoon the primary department entertainment was given in the church parlor and its programme was of the same nature as that of the evening, excepting that the little ones sang a number of Christmas carols before the moving pictures were shown.

Some of the best views produced in the afternoon and evening were the first race between the Shamrock II and the Columbia, the Montreal fire department in action, McKinley's inauguration as well as his last speech at Buffalo and his funeral at Washington and in Canton. Together with these many humorous pictures were shown.

The committee in charge of the affair consisted of G. A. Strong, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, Dr. B. vanD. Hedges, William G. Wright, Mrs. Townsend Rushmore and Miss Miller.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Christmas festivals at the First Baptist church under the auspices of the Sunday-school were greatly enjoyed Thursday. In the afternoon the primary department, under the direction of the superintendent, Mrs. Powlison, had a jolly time. A feature this year was the presence of the members of the cradle roll and their mothers. At the close of the entertainment tea was served to the mothers and the babies received little tokens.

After the opening exercises there were recitations by Miss Onida Hetfield, Miss Helen Myers, Miss Marie Moffett, Miss Adelia French, Miss Elsie Monroe, Florence French and Jed. Smalley. These recitations were interspersed with carols by the school. An attraction was the Christmas tree, from which presents were taken for the children. Each one received something to remember the event by and the little folks were appreciative.

In the evening a more elaborate programme was prepared for the older pupils, although twelve of the younger ones helped to entertain. The programme was in charge of Miss Bertha Whitney and it was called a "Christmas Party." The platform was arranged similar to a parlor, and here a series of tableaux were given. The first half consisted of pretty formations and graceful movements, while the last half comprised the representations of familiar games, such as "Going to Jerusalem," and "Blind Man's Bluff." The boys were neatly attired in white suits with different colored sashes, while the girls wore white dresses. Miss Isabella Taylor was the queen, Miss Elizabeth Winn and Miss Ethel Smith, fairies; Dewayne and Carlton Smith, fiddlers; Fred Crowther and Ernest Conover pages, while George Rogers, Harold Vanderhoff, the Misses Helen Pierce, Amy Moore and Beulah Rogers helped to make up the party. Miss Edith Cairns assisted in making the tableaux complete. During the first half Miss Whitney read the Christmas story, and Miss Mae Batchelor presided at the piano. During the last half Miss May Whitney was at the piano. The various scenes were enchanting and the calcium lights as operated by John Neagle made them more so. Interspersing the tableaux the scholars were entertained by Alfred E. Pearsall, of Westfield, who gave several humorous selections in his usual pleasing fashion. Mrs. F. M. Wade was expected to sing, but was detained.

After the entertainment Santa Claus appeared in the person of Frank Jones, and he made all happy with his comical sayings and distribution of gifts to the pupils. This concluded the festival. The committee under whose auspices the affair was given consists of J. G. McLaughlin, Miss Florence Marsh, Miss Edith Cairns, Miss Grace Yerkes, Mrs. Powlison, Miss Sue Woodland.

WARREN CHAPEL.

Notwithstanding the stormy weather Warren chapel was crowded last Thursday by an audience well aware that there was something good in the form of entertainment in store for it. It was the annual Christmas entertainment of the Sunday-school and in all respects it proved a successful affair.

The programme was a continual treat and the applause was unceasing while it lasted. Miss Saidee Mae Howell rendered some clever piano solos and Miss Willis did equally as well as a vocalist. Miss E. DuBois Benton caught the audience with some recitations, which were particularly well rendered and Miss Cahoone received unlimited commendation for her execution of solos on the violin. Beside the local talent there was J. E. Garretson, of New York, who mystified the crowd with his juggling ability and with his performance as a bell ringer.

Before the completion of the formal programme Rev. J. O. McKelvey presented to Former Mayor Place, on behalf of the latter's class, a fine silk umbrella, and Rev. Robert D. Schoonmaker, on behalf of Rev. Mr. McKelvey's class, presented the latter with a handsome Morris chair. The recipients made neat speeches in thanking their classes for the Christmas remembrances. Refreshments were served at the conclusion of the exercises.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The First Day school of the Society of Friends, of this city, held its annual Christmas festival in the meeting-house, corner of Watching avenue and East Second street, last Thursday. There was a large attendance of adult members as well as children of the school, despite the stormy night.

A short entertainment preceded the serving of refreshments, which consisted of ice cream and cake. In full the numbers given were as follows: Concert reading, "A Christmas Thought," by the school; recitation, "Shoes or Stockings," Miss Margery Cooley; recitation, "The Poppy land Family," Engrot of Clifford Vail; recitation, "I'd Like to be a Santa Claus," Miss Helen Poole; reading, "A Family Reunion," Miss Agnes Cooley; reading, "How the New Year Came In," Miss Mabel Vail; recitation, "Nature's Face Washing," Ruth Stryker; reading, "What the Cloir Sang About the Bonnet." Miss Ethel Lorton; "A True Story of Lewis, a Buffalo Street Waif," by Miss Margaret Vail, superintendent of the First Day school; concert reading, "A Song of the Twentieth Century," by the school.

MARCONNIER CHAPEL.

"The Promise Fulfilled," was the title of the Christmas service given at Marconnier chapel Thursday evening. The inclement weather did not interfere with a good attendance. There was a Christmas tree.

Willie Robertson made the opening address. Recitations were given by the Misses Mary Morrison, Nettie Stover, Jennie Robertson and Lillian Schwenk, Daisy and Eva Morrison, little tots, Miss Mary Morrison, the Misses Amy Lupher, Gertrude and Lizzie Comer, May Pyatt, Nettie Stover, Annie Nelson, Mary Morrison and Richard Campbell, Fred Stover and Monroe Pyatt.

There was an address by M. Seymour Purdy, and a vocal solo by Mrs. Lucy Schenck. Following the entertainment Santa Claus appeared in the person of William Compton, who distributed presents to all. Those receiving Bibles for regular attendance were Fred Stover, Robert Morrison and Richard Campbell. Monroe Pyatt and Willie Morrison received Bible dictionaries.

Joseph D. Moss had charge of the music, while Mrs. H. W. Marshall presided at the piano. The committee on decorations was Mrs. H. W. Marshall, Miss Fanny Stover and Miss Carolyn Kelly. H. W. Marshall, as superintendent of the school, was in charge.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The Christmas festivities at the Congregational church last Thursday were a success. In part first there were songs and recitations by the primary department. Then came nursery rhymes, including "Boys and Girls Come Out to Play," "Little Bo Peep," by the Misses Maude Emmons, Oliver Hedden, Florence Wychoff, Lila Day, Ruth Day. Other songs were given by Miss Katherine Day, Miss Nettie and Clarence Steiner, the Misses Margaret Fisher, Emma Yeoman, Katherine Day, Mary Forbes. "Little Jack Horner," was given by Stanley Fisher, while "Little Boy Blue," was sung by Miss Myra Emmons. Harold Miller took the part of "Little Boy Blue." "The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe" was enacted by Miss Mary Whiton and a troop of the younger children of the school, who made a visible appeal for the Italian Mission in New York to which the school sends gifts every year. The birthday jug of the primary department was broken and added to the collection.

Gifts were given to the members of the primary department and candy to the whole school, while the sexton, Geo. Dean, was remembered with a gift. The chairman of the committee was Miss May Harold. Miss Minnie G. Morse was the accompanist, assisted by Walter Reynolds.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

A Christmas party was held by the primary and cradle departments of the Grace M. E. Sunday-school Thursday afternoon. The pupils participated in an entertaining programme and Andrew Wilson amused them by his antics as Santa Claus, throwing candy among the little ones and distributing presents, mainly consisting of games, dolls and books. Miss Belle Lunger and Miss Alice Carroll, the teachers, had charge of the affair.

RECORD BREAKING RUSH AT THE POSTOFFICE

But Postmaster Bird and His Assistants Handled It in Good Shape.

IT IS ALL OVER NOW.

EVERY CARRIER HAD TO HAVE HELP CHRISTMAS DAY.

Time Never Known When There Was So Much Holiday Mail Matter as There Was This Year.

It was not until Friday morning that the Plainfield postoffice resumed the even tenor of its way. Never before in the history of the local office did the Christmas mail reach the size that it did this year. The exceedingly heavy mail required unusual efforts to care for it. As it was, all the mail received at the office Christmas day was distributed that day but the belated mail matter continued to arrive up to this morning and gave the carriers considerable work to handle it all in time.

Commencing several days before Christmas and continuing up to the hour of closing the office Christmas Day, there was one continual rush. The full force of carriers, substitutes and clerks in the office was called into service to handle the mail.

Of course, much credit for the excellent service is due Postmaster Bird, whose watchful eye was over all to see that things moved promptly. Then there is great credit due all the carriers, clerks and attaches of the office. They all worked in unison and harmony and it was this as much as anything else that brought about the excellent results.

Perhaps the greatest rush was witnessed Christmas morning, when the carriers arrived to take the mail out. The sight was one never seen before at the office. The floor was literally covered with packages and other mail matter. There was hardly room for the men to move around.

The plan by which the mail had been coming in had warned the local authorities that they might expect a record-breaking Christmas mail and so they were, in a measure, prepared to care for it.

Letter Carrier E. T. VanWinkle probably had the most to carry of any. He secured a one-horse truck and two men to assist him. As it was, it required all the morning to cover his route. Every carrier was compelled to get assistance in handling his share. Several of the men had one or two assistants loaded down with packages who accompanied them over their rounds. Others utilized push carts to carry the extra load.

When they had all departed, however, the postoffice was clear of mail and every package or letter, which came to a Plainfielder by Christmas morning, was distributed before noon that day.

Thursday's mails were still heavy and the carriers carried big loads when they went their rounds. This morning saw a few belated Christmas packages bound for Plainfield homes. The Christmas rush is completely over, however, and many words of commendation are being said for the excellent way in which the emergency was met.

THE POPE'S INCOME.

It Is Obtained from Peter's Pence and Audience Fees.

Total Amounts to About One Million Dollars a Year, Leaving a Deficit of Half a Million Altogether Unaccounted For.

The financial position of the papacy after the loss, in 1870, of the temporal dominions of the church, is a question with which many outsiders have grappled, but which no one can answer with any degree of accuracy. There are no estimates discussed and no financial statements made in the various of the pope in his character of the exchequer; he furnishes the necessary funds for the administration of the Holy See, and money matters are settled by him with his accountants under a triple seal of secrecy.

Still, says the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, during the last 30 years of papal seclusion in the apostolic palace many data have leaked out on which an approximate estimate can be formed, if not of the total certainly of the expenditure of the Holy See.

When Rome became the capital of Italy the new government did not interfere with the benefices of the secular clergy and though friaries and nunneries have been suppressed, their inmates have been provided for from a special government fund. Since then other congregations have cropped up under foreign auspices to such an extent that the religious orders in Rome, including the wealthy Jesuits, are said to own property to the amount of £12,000,000 sterling. Consequently the lower clergy, far from proving a drain on the papal treasury, help materially to its replenishment.

The cardinals are mostly archbishops, and draw their revenue from their sees. Only some 25 eminences are Curia cardinals, who reside in the Eternal City, and act as ministers to the pontiff in the government of the universal church. Each of them draws a yearly salary of £1,000.

CARDINAL PAROCCHI

The pope, whose temporal sovereignty is now restricted to the Vatican and Lateran palace, which are recognized as extra-territorial by the Italian government, has not given up his claims on his lost provinces of central Italy. He has nuncios and apostolic legates in most of the Christian states whose duties are not limited to the ecclesiastical affairs; he keeps a skeleton army of two or three hundred men for parade purposes on the occasion of grand receptions; and has a numerous retinue of prelates and chamberlains and a staff of employes.

The chamberlains and military officers are rich laymen with nominal salaries, but the Curia cardinals, the diplomats, the majority of the court prelates, and all the subordinate employes cost money, and it is asserted by people in a position to know, that the papal court and diplomacy cost his holiness not less than £300,000 a year.

It is relatively easy to meet the expenditure, but the income is a problem bristling with difficulties.

When Pius IX. refused with indignation the annual subsidy of £140,000 offered him in 1870 by Victor Emanuel he was known to possess or invested in foreign stocks, about £1,800,000 sterling. This investment has been since then gradually increased by another £300,000, and it yields at present a revenue of not less than £80,000.

The institution of the Obole—Peter's pence—a revival of an old tax over Christendom, collected in all the bishoprics of the Catholic world—gave, in the first year, a ample revenue, which, however, has now practically dwindled to about £60,000 per annum. Efforts, strenuous efforts, have been made to stir up the generosity of the faithful, and jubilees, beatifications of saints, pilgrimages and other religious gatherings follow each other in rapid succession. The great papal jubilee is ascertained to have brought to the papal coffers in round numbers £100,000, but in ordinary years these papal celebrations only add some £40,000 to the income of the holy father.

Other sources of revenue are special audiences granted by his holiness. Every devout Catholic is admitted to see the pope and receive his blessing is expected to leave a sum of money with the prelate on duty in the ante-chamber, and these special audiences are frequent, often weekly, sometimes daily, and earnings less than a pound a day. Others, however, pay £50,000 a year. A well-known English duke, for instance, is reported to leave a thousand sovereigns wherever he visits the pope.

So far an income of £300,000 is approximately accounted for, but how and where the balance is scraped together to meet the admitted yearly outlay of £300,000 is beyond the ken of ordinary mortals.

SHOT OFFICER BY MISTAKE

Isaac P. Brown, Jr., Mistook Him For Chicken Thief and Fired.

NOT SERIOUSLY HURT.

Patrolman Overbaugh Was Looking for Chicken Thieves When He Received Charge of Small Shot—Brown Held on Bail for Grand Jury.

Mistaking Patrolman Herbert Overbaugh for a chicken thief, Isaac P. Brown, Jr., of Watchung avenue, fired a load of small shot at the officer early Christmas morning, wounding him in several places. While the full contents of the shotgun lodged in the officer's body and clothing, his injuries were not serious. His uniform was ruined. Mr. Brown was subsequently arrested and held under bonds for his appearance before the Grand Jury.

A few weeks ago Mr. Brown, Sr., who is the owner of a fine lot of chickens and ducks, asked Chief Kiely to instruct his men to watch his yard as he feared thieves. This has been done since by Overbaugh who is on the beat passing Mr. Brown's home.

He was passing the property Christmas morning at 3:30, when he heard an unusual commotion among the fowls and entered the yard to investigate. He found nothing suspicious and was on his way to the street again when a report sounded from an upper window in the house and a hail of shot struck him. The officer says it was almost as bright as day at the time and that he stood full in the open.

Overbaugh immediately called out who he was and Mr. Brown, Jr., appeared. He was informed of his mistake after which Overbaugh hurried to Dr. Carman's offices where his injuries were dressed. Most of the shot lodged in his side while a dozen of the missles pierced his face, neck and shoulders. He was relieved of duty at once on reporting at headquarters and has been off since.

That evening, the patrolman appeared before City Judge Runyon and preferred a charge of assault against Mr. Brown, the warrant being served at once. He waived examination and furnished bonds in the sum of $600 for his appearance before the Grand Jury. This is the first time City Judge Runyon has exercised his authority in a matter of this nature.

The patrolman has made a statement of the affair before Corporation Counsel Marsh and the latter will conduct his case. Overbaugh intimates that he will institute civil proceedings against Mr. Brown, on the ground of criminal carelessness.

Isaac P. Brown, Sr., of Watchung avenue, states that the gun fired upon Patrolman Overbaugh, contained No. 4 shot, considerably smaller than buck. It was fired, he states, for the purpose of frightening a thief rather than for injuring him.

FESTIVITIES ENJOYED.

A Variety of Programmes Pleased the Young People — Christmas Cantatas Were the Most Popular—Gifts and Candy for the Little Ones.

More Christmas entertainments were held by local Sunday-schools, last Friday, and more little folks were made happy. This time, "Santa Claus" had a delightful evening for his visit and the result was evident in the large crowds which thronged all the churches where the entertainments were held. While Christmas cantatas were the most popular form of entertainment, some of the Sunday-schools varied their programmes. Below will be found the programmes in detailed form:

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

The primary department of the Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school enjoyed its Christmas festival, in the afternoon, in the lecture room of the church. Like all previous celebrations it was a jolly time for the children.

The programme opened with a vocal selection by a chorus of eight girls, the Misses Jessie Smith, Gertrude Schleif, Ethel Vail, Edith Richards, Lillie Smith and Gertrude Enander. This was followed with recitations by the Misses Anna Vail, Adelaide Fritz, Evelyn Fritz, Jennie Thompson, Jennie Briemser, Helen Smith, Helen Woolley, May Porter and George Coles. There was also a song by Miss Edna Oliver, a vocal duet by the Misses Bessie and Annie Randall, accompanied by Miss Hattie Randall, and the singing of carols by the school.

Refreshments were served and the children received boxes of candy Mrs. J. M. Tier, superintendent of the primary department, was in charge, assisted by all the teachers. Mrs. Scofield presided at the piano.

In the evening the older pupils of the Sunday-school assembled in the church and were entertained with moving pictures. The machine was operated by an expert from Bridgeport, and the large number of interesting pictures shown proved to be a source of great enjoyment to all.

The pictures shown were some of the very latest including the yacht race between Columbia and Shamrock II, a raid on a saloon by Carrie Nation, the Pan-American by day and night, the visit of President McKinley to the Exposition, his memorable speech there, many of the scenes attendant upon the obsequies of the late President. Interspersing these pictures were some of an amusing character.

At the close of the entertainment there was the distribution of the usual gifts to members of the school.

BETHEL CHAPEL.

The Bethel chapel Sunday-school entertainment took place in the evening under the direction of the superintendent, Stephen A. Ginna. There was a fair sized attendance.

Thomas Tilney rendered a solo accompanied by Miss Clara Lane. Recitations were given by the Misses Cora Shipley, Mildred Lane and Ada Johnson. Candy, toys and dolls were given the little ones. Eugene O'Reilly's orchestra furnished the music and added much to the enjoyment.

The committee on arrangements consisted of Abraham Brown, chairman, Miss Clara Lane, Charles E. VanHorn, Charles Irby, Miss Euphemia Dorsey, Miss Annie Broadnax, Mrs. A. Brown, B. Sutton and Miss Gangwey.

FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

An entertaining as well as instructive Christmas affair was given by the Sunday-school of the First Methodist church, in Vincent chapel, in the evening. It consisted of a series of tableaux illustrating the origin of Christmas customs. There was an unusually large attendance.

The first tableaux represented the old Roman festival of the Saturnalia, which is the Christmas of today. Those participating in the scene were the Misses Catherine Smith and Stephanie Krom and Thomas Stafford, F. Roland Horne, Lewis Scott, Donald A. McGee, Walter McNorton and Fred Linn. Following this was the scene of the wise men following the star in the east. Ralph Lane, Lewis Wilson and Arthur Humble were the characters.

An illustration of early Christian ritual in Italy, the Christmas mass, was then shown. Ralph Fenno, Lewis Scott, Ray McDonald, Ralph Bingaman and Arthur Humble were the monks and the Misses Jenkins, Humble and Smith were the nuns. Miss Stackhouse took the part of a princess and Clarence Lawrence that of a prince. Others represented were: Soldier, Harold Whitney; child, Miss Mabel Cook; lady of the middle class, Mrs. Dunham; market-woman, Miss Symons. During this scene Miss Davies played a voluntary.

An illustration of the French legend of the wooden shoes was depicted by angels and Christ-child. The Misses Gertrude Snodgrass, Luella Derby, Mrs. Dunham and Miss Clara Dyer. Miss Catherine Smith was the Christ-child. The origin of the Christmas eve was given as a German tableaux. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford, Miss Catherine Bingaman, and Russell Lawrence; Martin Oswald, Arthur Slade and Walter McKinley. For Denmark was produced the custom of the Yule Buck, the chief character being taken by Raymond McDonald. Miss Gladys Peck and George Rittenhouse, Walter Kennedy and Russell and Roy Hand were also in this scene.

The English Christmas was depicted first be the scene showing the bringing in of the yule log and second the Christmas feast. Those in the part were the Misses Valiant, French, Dyer and Smith, and Ralph Lane, Irwin Leland, Clyde Doane, Clarence Lawrence, Frank French, Roland Horne, Russell Lawrence and R. Symons. In the dinner scene, Harlan Snodgrass was the cook carrying the boar's head. The last of the series was Christmas in America. Santa Claus was represented by R. F. Fenno and two little children in bed, by Mabel Cook and Catherine Bingaman.

Miss May Whitney sang the songs of the nations, and James R. Joy gave an appropriate reading in preceding each tableaux. An orchestra of nine pieces led by Wilson Derby furnished musical selections. Over sixty pupils of the Sunday-school took part in the affair. The costumes were a feature and the beauty of the various scenes was enhanced by the calcium light effect operated by J. Hervey Doane.

Miss Gertrude Gayer recited "Christmas Everywhere" during the entertainment. At the conclusion of the formal programme, R. F. Fenno, as Santa Claus, distributed presents among the pupils of the intermediate department and boxes of candy to the pupils of all departments.

The Bible class presented a collection of books to the teacher, J. M Derby, and the Sunday-school remembered Miss Gertrude Sharp and Isaac Kennedy with purses of money.

In the afternoon the primary department had its entertainment. After parlor games had been played refreshments were served and later R. F. Fenno, costumed as Santa Claus, distributed the presents. Those in charge were Miss Susie Davies and Miss Horne, and Mrs. Arthur Crone and Mrs. Thomas McDonald.

The committee, to whom credit is due for the elaborate entertainment in the evening, consisted of Mrs. Frank French, chairman, and the Misses Snyder, Horne and Dyer, and Mrs. Arthur Crone.

HOPE CHAPEL.

The attendance at the exercises in Hope chapel, in the evening, was exceptionally large and the programme rendered was the best in years. The feature was a dialogue, entitled "The Revolt of Santa Claus," in which fourteen boys and girls, dressed in costumes to represent different nations, took part.

"Santa Claus" was admirably represented by Miss Grace E. Overton. The other parts were taken by the Misses Mabel Farley, Christina Thompson, Bertha Jones, Rosa Droll, Hazzie Porter, Ruth Kenney and Ethel Manchester and William Stocking, Valentine Steenson, Harry Kenney, James Kenney, Frank Rimmer, Joseph Walls and Ted House. The affair was arranged by Miss Grace E. Overton, assisted by the Misses Katherine Overton, Margaret Abbott and Grace Burt.

The remainder of the programme consisted of selections by the primary department, carol singing by the school, a recitation by Miss Edna Burt and a solo by Miss Anna Warnock and Harold Lane. On the conclusion the primary department was given books and dolls and the older pupils were treated to candy and oranges.

In full charge during the evening was a committee consisting of I. W. Travell, chairman, Mr. and Mrs. N. C. King, Mrs. George Gray, the Misses Grace E. and Katherine Overton, Helen Hall and John Cose, and Henry Pearce.

The chapel was decorated by a committee consisting of John Cose, chairman, Matthew Sweeney, Walter Foster, Benjamin Evans, Harry Holland and Charles Meyer and members of the Christian Endeavor Society.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

Grace M. E. church was well filled, in the evening, when the Christmas entertainment of the Sunday-school took place. There were three parts, the gigantic picture book, tableaux and pantomime.

In the first number, the gigantic picture book, Miss Edna Sebring, represented a little girl mystified over the way Santa Claus makes picture books, and Miss Jennie DeMott took the part of the fairy grandmother. The tableaux scenes were Cinderella, sleeping beauty and beauty and the beast.

Those taking parts were the Misses Bessie Conroy, Edna Sebring, Grace Woolston, Laura Dean, Kittie Rutledge, Stella Kline, Sadie Bilyou, Lillie Mason, Marion Major, Ettie Bodenheimer and Bertha and Edith Mantz, and Russell Doeringer, Lyle Beaching, Russell Conroy and Albert Teeter.

The shadow pantomimes were the "Story of the Oysterman" and the "Story of Mary Jane." Mrs. Dyer, Chauncey Arthur Slade and Walter McKinley. For Denmark was produced the custom of the Yule Buck, the chief character being taken by Raymond McDonald. Miss Gladys Peck and George Rittenhouse, Walter Kennedy and Russell and Roy Hand were also in this scene.

The English Christmas was depicted first be the scene showing the bringing in of the yule log and second the Christmas feast. Those in the part were the Misses Valiant, French, Dyer and Smith, and Ralph Lane, Irwin Leland, Clyde Doane, Clarence Lawrence, Frank French, Roland Horne, Russell Lawrence and R. Symons. In the dinner scene, Harlan Snodgrass was the cook carrying the boar's head. The last of the series was Christmas in America. Santa Claus was represented by R. F. Fenno and two little children in bed, by Mabel Cook and Catherine Bingaman.

EAST THIRD STREET CHAPEL.

The Christmas festival of the East Third Street chapel Sunday-school was held in the evening. Great pains had been taken by the committee on arrangements to make the affair a success and succeeded admirably.

The programme was well balanced. Among its features were cornet solos by DeWitt Frasee and recitations by Miss Emery. Fred Dunavan was "Santa Claus," and his antics caused no end of fun. Christian Utzinger acted the part of the Snow Man. Presents were distributed to the little ones and all received candy. Superintendent L. W. Randolph presented bottles of perfumery to the teachers he received from them a handsome silver spoon, gold mounted.

The committee consisted of L. W. Randolph, and the Misses Alice Woodland and Deborah Winn and Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Braider.

CHURCH OF HEAVENLY REST.

The Christmas exercises for the pupils of the Sunday-school connected with the Mission church of the Heavenly Rest, were held in the parish house. They consisted of carol singing, recitations by Fred Thompson and Fred VanOrden and solos by Valley Brooks, Agnes VanOrden and Florence Phillips. At the conclusion of the programme gifts were distributed by William Winans Moore.

Mr. Moore was in turn agreeably surprised on receiving a handsome memorandum book, the joint gift of the school.

The committee in charge of the exercises consisted of Mrs. E. E. Brown and Miss Elizabeth Foster.

LITERARY.

The January Forum opens with an article by Rear Admiral G. W. Melvills on "The Military Duty of the Engineering Institutions. "The writer suggests the formulation of a plan to enable the civil scientific colleges to supplement the work of West Point and Annapolis. Prof. Paul S. Reinsch describes the opportunities afforded by "A New Era in Mexico." The list of contents includes papers on several subjects which will shortly be receiving attention in Congress. Earl Mayo contributes an estimate of the extent to which "The Americanization of England" has already proceeded. The closing paper is by Prof. Brander Matthews, who writes on "Mr. Howells as a Critic," with particular notice of his recent book on the "Heroines of Fiction."

Nothing seems lacking in the New Year number of The Ladies' Home Journal to make it the most complete issue of that periodical yet published. Cardinal Gibbons and Rudyard Kipling lead the list of contributors, the one with a strong arraignment of the "new woman;" the other with the true story of how he brought up a baby (not on a bottle). There is a wealth of good fiction. "The Wisdom of the Dove," a clever story by Lilian Brooks; the second part of "The Russells in Chicago," and the concluding chapters of both "A Gentleman of the Blue Grass" and "Christine," are all in this number. All of the regular editorial departments are unusually interesting, especially that of fashions, which is enlarged to eight pages under the editorship of Virginia Louis Ralston. The illustrations are superb. The cover is by Blenden R. Campbell, a new artist. By The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, of Westerly, R. I., are visiting Mrs. Ira West, of West Fifth street.

FATHER SMYTH'S RECEPTION

DECIDED NOT TO HOLD IT UNTIL AFTER JANUARY 15.

Committee in Charge of Arrangements Hold a Meeting Friday Evening.

The proposed reception to Rev. P. E. Smyth, the departing rector of St. Marys R. C. church, has been postponed until after the middle of the coming month. This decision was arrived at in a meeting of the committee on arrangements held in St. Mary's Lyceum, Friday evening.

The reason for the extension of the time is that many, who desire to contribute towards the purse to be presented the retiring priest, are unable to do so at the present time. It was also stated at the meeting by Father Farley that the church duties of next week might interfere with its being held at an early date. On motion of John H. Hillman the date of the reception was postponed until a date after January 15.

In all forty-nine subscription books are in the hands of the committee's members, and the showing made by nine of the holders, who reported at the meeting, was excellent. The entire city has been divided into districts and there are designated persons to collect in each of these. Another meeting of the committee will be held and all the members are expected to be present on that occasion.

Arthur Boone presided at the meeting last evening and John P. Owens acted as secretary until the arrival of the regular officer, M. J. Cashin. Mr. Hillman received the donations collected and reported at the meeting.

At a meeting of Miantonomo Tribe, No. 118, Improved Order of Red Men, Friday evening, the following chiefs were elected: Prophet, Fred Bowe; sachem, Thomas Sheridan; senior sagamore, Charles McGinley; junior sagamore, Joseph Crosby; chief of records and collector of wampum, Charles L. Holstein; keeper of wampum, A. J Stiglitz; trustees, three years, William Newcorn; two years, M. A. Leahy; representative to Great Council, J. H. Green; alternate, Charles L. Holstein.

CAR CAUGHT FIRE.

Philadelphia Train Had to Leave Its Baggage Car Behind.

A baggage car on the Philadelphia train, which arrives in this city at 7 o'clock in the evening, caught fire en-route from a hot box Thursday evening, and when it reached the North Avenue station was all ablaze. The crew and depot attendants fought the flames for some time but were unable to quell them. The car was finally sidetracked where the fire could be fought to better advantage and was finally put out. The exterior of the car was badly damaged. The contents were uninjured.

TREE AT CHILDREN'S HOME

CHRISTMAS WAS PLEASANTLY CELEBRATED THERE FRIDAY.

Gifts For the Children Were Distributed During the Afternoon.

Among the many festivals being held at this time none have been more enjoyable and accompanied with more pleasure and profit than that of Friday afternoon at the Children's Home. There are at present nineteen children at the Home and all were made happy yesterday by the kind remembrance of their friends among the members of the Children's Home and others in the city and borough.

The tree was lighted at 4 o'clock, at which time the children marched into the parlor. Here the eyes of the little ones glistened as they beheld the many beautiful things displayed for them. At the beginning a prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, after which there was the customary distribution of gifts to the children. Mrs. Kimball, president of the Children's Home Association, assisted by the matron, Miss Hendrickson, and Miss Ella Serrell and Mrs. Frank Rowley, took charge of the distribution and personally attended to each child.

As usual, there were present several of the boys and girls who have previously been at the Home, but have since been taking care of themselves, having reached that age when this is possible. There were five such persons yesterday and they thoroughly enjoyed the reunion and the gifts received by them.

The members of the association are very grateful to all who assisted in making Friday's event so successful. Especially kind were the merchants of the city and borough. The donations will make it possible for the Board of Managers to continue this grand work successfully and with less inconvenience.

JOLLY WHISTERS.

Were Entertained Thursday Evening by Mr. and Mrs. Homan.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Homan, of Hillside avenue, entertained the Jolly Whist Club at their home, Thursday evening, when the members had the usual good time. The first and second prizes for the women were won by Mrs. Peter A. Emmons and Mrs. J. P. Homan, while J. F. Buckle and Hiram Woodruff won the first and second honors for the men. The club will be entertained Friday evening, January 10, by Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Emmons, of Prospect place.

OVERCOME BY STARVATION

Stranger Fell Exhausted on City Streets Late Tuesday Afternoon.

A SWEDISH JOURNALIST.

Had Eaten Nothing for Three Days and Had Walked From New York Here En Route to Home of Friend in Philadelphia—He Was Sent On.

A pitiful tale was revealed to the police, last Tuesday, when John Anderson, a refined appearing young Swede, dropped from exhaustion in front of Johnson & Barnes' store on Park avenue. The man was literally starving to death, having been without food for three days. Despite this fact, he set out to walk from Newark, Tuesday morning, to Philadelphia, when nature asserted itself and he was forced to give up the unequal struggle.

When his plight became apparent to the kind passersby who assisted him to Armstrong's pharmacy, provision was at once made to have his immediate wants attended to. It was some time after Anderson was found that he was able to tell anything about himself. It was the oft-repeated tale of a stranger in a strange land, without funds or friends, but plenty of manly pride.

He came to this country a few weeks ago from Sweden, intending to secure work at his vocation, that of a journalist. He had a little money but it soon disappeared when he searched about for a position. He finally secured one on the staff of a Swedish daily at Boston but he was not to begin work until the latter part of this month.

He has friends in Philadelphia and during the interim he decided to visit them. He resolved to walk, not having the money to purchase a ticket, and reached Newark, Tuesday morning. He was then without a cent, had eaten nothing in two days, and growing weaker every moment. Despite these obstacles, he set out for this city and completed the seventeen miles, at 6 o'clock, Tuesday evening.

On the outskirts of the city, he sold for a quarter his last possession, a handsome pocketbook, and with the silver piece clasped in his hand he was hurrying to get some food when he sank to the ground. When taken in Armstrong's, he shook as if with the palsy and was unable to speak. Mr. Armstrong discerned his plight and for some time slowly fed him broth and crackers. This revived him sufficiently to relate his story, which was interspersed with expressions of gratitude for the kindness shown him.

He was afterward taken to the Hotel Plainfield by Patrolman Langer where he was able to partake of a light supper. A bed was given him and he was very much better, although still weak.

Through the efforts of H. Otis Newman and Patrolman George Langer, a sufficient amount was raised today to provide Anderson with a ticket to Philadelphia and also enough money to tide him over until he assumes his position. He was overwhelmed with gratitude and when he departed his face was wreathed in smiles at the prospect of meeting his friend, who was a college chum in Sweden.

Free Lesson.

Miss Anna O. Marsh, of 913 Madison avenue, will give a free lesson in sight singing Monday evening, at 8:30 o'clock at her home, convenient to the Arlington avenue trolley. PLAINFIELD YOUNG MAN WRITES OF WEIMER

Geo. C. M. Smith Describes the German City Where He is Studying.

STRANGE THINGS SEEN.

SOME OF THE MOST REMARKABLE DIFFERENCES FROM AMERICAN CITIES.

Old-Fashioned Hand-Fire Engines Are Still in Use There—Wretched Trolley Service—Many Other Courious Things.

An interesting letter descriptive of Weimer, the principal city of the Grand duchy of Saxe-Weimer-Eisenach, has been received by The Daily Press from George C. M. Smith. Mr. Smith is a son of Charles Smith, of Craig place, and he is now taking a course in music, especially on the violin, at the famous conservatory at Weimer. He graduated from the North Plainfield High School, last June, and while at that institution was well known as a violinist of no mean ability.

As he describes it, Weimer is a peculiar city, when contrasted with the typical municipalities of this country. Railroads owned by the government, trolley cars without conductors, churches where no collections are taken, with all expenses borne by the municipality, and a bureau where all must register intentions to become a resident or to leave the municipality, are some of the features which make it odd when viewed by an American. In some respects the city excels the average one in this country while in others it is behind the times.

In the course of the letter he says: "The population is largely evangelical. There are few foreign residents and no negroes. As for the climate is seldom is above ninety-five degrees, Fahrenheit, and contagious diseases are rare. There are only four church institutions, two Evangelical, one Roman Catholic and one Episcopal.

"The fire department is without a doubt old fashioned. The Germans in Weimer still cling to the old time hand engine, but fortunately the services of the department are rarely needed. This is easily accounted for. The houses are all built of cemented bricks and stone, there being no frame dwellings. The roofs are mostly of tile. There are few high buildings, none over four stories. As a rule the people live in tenements, and as for modern interior improvements there are none to speak of.

"The city is kept very clean. The trolley service is wretched. There are no conductors, the passengers dropping the fare in a box as they enter the car. The lines are all single tracks, because the streets are very narrow.

"A part of the German army is stationed in the city and a military band gives many public concerts. All Germans at the age of twenty-one have to do two years' service in the army. There is only one public school and that is attended only by the poorer class of children. There are, however, many private schools. There is a system of compulsory education, fourteen years of age being the limit. The Bible is read in all the schools and there are no Sunday-schools in the city. Lawyers' services are in little demand and therefore there are few practicioners at the bar.

"In the court house building is a department of announcements. It is here that any person wishing to leave the city to reside elsewhere or any one wishing to make his home in the city must announce his intentions, under a penalty amounting to $50 in our money. Monuments, fountains and parks adorn the city. The well known Goethe-Gardenhause is situated in the largest park, as is also a bark house where Goethe spent much of his time. A theatre produces two operas and three plays during the week in the winter season.

"The principal occupation of the inhabitants is bookbinding, but there are no large factories. The grand duke is at the head of the government and he has everything royalty could wish for. Weimer is associated in history as being the home of many eminent authors and artists. Schiller, Goethe, Herder and Wieland lived and died here. Their homes are still standing and monuments are erected to them in different parts of the city. The composers, Bach, Liszt and Hummel, and the great artist, Lucas Cranach, were also residents. It is a peculiar city and one which a traveler may well afford to visit."

HIGH WATER DAMAGED THE CENTRAL'S TRACKS

Will Take Until Spring to Fully Repair the Washouts Near Mauch Chunk.

CAUSES MANY DELAYS.

ONE TRACK SWEPT AWAY FOR A STRETCH OF THIRTY MILES.

Compelled to Lay New Track in Mauch Chunk on Account of Washout—Accounts for Lateness of Trains.

The extreme severity of the flood and washout experienced by the Pennsylvania towns along the Lehigh river, two weeks ago, is daily becoming more apparent. While the damage was roughly estimated at the time at hundreds of thousands of dollars it is now certain that the original figures will be tripled.

The greatest sufferers from the avalanche of water, which swept down the little river, ordinarily a few feet deep, were the Jersey Central and Lehigh Railroads, the former in particular. A goodly portion of the Lehigh track from Easton to Scranton was saved by reason of its being higher up than that of the Central on the opposite side of the river.

At Mauch Chunk, there is a bend in the river and here the Central suffered the most. The tracks and roadbed for miles were swept away and has or will be entirely rebuilt. Every available laborer has been pressed into service making repairs but despite day and night shifts, the progress is slow.

At present all the Central's through traffic, eastward from Scranton, is carried on the greater part of the way over a single track where formerly two were no more than adequate. There is one stretch of single track near Mauch Chunk running a distance of thirty miles. In Mauch Chunk itself, temporary tracks have been built in the streets, running alongside those of the local trolley system. Permission to do this was first obtained from the town council.

The lack of men has proved a serious handicap but it is expected many will be secured from the large cities and the road can then be placed in its original shape by spring. At the time the flood occurred, hundreds of miners were thrown out of work by the filling of the inmes, but when offered employment by the railroads, they refused almost without exception.

The train, which is scheduled to reach this city at 9:30 in the morning, comes from Scranton and has to run over the single track, necessitating slow travel. This is partly responsible for its invariably being behind the schedule.

To Appear at Inauguration.

Captain W. Kempton Browning, of Company K, has received an unofficial communication from Major W. J. Gardner, pastor of Grace M. E. church. Rev. Dr. Hoyt offered a fervent prayer at the beginning of the service. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Mr. Gardner, who took for his text: "Christ, the Truth, the Way and the Life." It was a short but moving appeal for all to follow the Lord.

MRS. O'BRIEN WON DAMAGES

WAS GIVEN A VERDICT FOR $5,000 AGAINST CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Suit Against Trolley Company Was Next Taken Up in the Somerset County Court.

Somerville, Jan. 8—The jury in the case of Mrs. Nora O'Brien against the New Jersey Central Railroad Company, went out yesterday morning at 11 o'clock and returned three hours later with a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000. As told in the Press Mrs. O'Brien sued for $25,000 damages for the loss of three toes, which was caused by her being struck by a passenger train at the depot here last summer while she was on her way to board another train.

The case of Zachariah T. Sutton against the Middlesex and Somerset Traction Company was immediately taken up. Geo. W. Anderson appeared for the plaintiff, who asked for $1,000 damages because a car of the company frightened his horse so badly last summer that he was thrown from his wagon and fractured his leg. Mr. Sutton claimed the car was running at a high rate of speed and the motorman was ringing the bell violently.

Hon. Alvah A. Clark, counsel for the trolley company, asked for a nonsuit on the ground that the motorman was only doing his duty in controlling the car and in ringing the gong. The motorman, he contended, might apprehend that the horse would stop being frightened and be controlled by the driver. "It was his duty to ring the gong for the purpose of warning Sutton as well as any others to keep off the tracks."

Exceptions were taken by the counsel for the plaintiff for the purpose of reviewing in the Supreme Court. Court then adjourned for the day.

MANY HONORED MEMORY OF PROMINENT MAN

Funeral Services of the Late John D. Titsworth Held Tuesday Afternoon.

THE FLORAL TRIBUTES.

REV. C. L. GOODRICH AND REV. DR. A. H. LEWIS IN CHARGE.

Words of Comfort Were Spoken and the Memory of Departed One Was Praised—Singing by Quartette—The Bearers.

A large number of relatives, neighbors and business associates gathered, yesterday afternoon, to attend the funeral services of the late John Davies Titsworth, which were held from the home in Madison avenue at 2 o'clock. The high esteem, in which the deceased was held, was evidenced by those present from the various walks of life. All felt a personal sorrow at the sudden termination of such a life of helpfulness and comfort, for Mr. Titsworth was a person beloved by all who knew him.

Another evidence of esteem was witnessed in the beautiful floral tributes. There were many large wreaths of galax leaves, a pillow at the head of the bier was inscribed "Husband," another pillow from Jerusalem Lodge, No. 38, F. and A. M., bore the Masonic emblems, still another pillow was inscribed "Y. M. L. 711," from Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, while a beautiful floral trumpet bore an inscription "Exempt Firemen." There were many other tributes, both large and small, and not the least was one from the firm of Merck & Company, New York, where Mr. Titsworth was employed. All the tributes were placed about the bier nearly covering the casket.

After the singing of "Asleep in Jesus," by a quartette composed of Mrs. David E. Titsworth, Mrs. William C. Hubbard, David E. Titsworth and Joseph M. Titsworth, Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church, of which the deceased was a member, read appropriate selections from the Scriptures. He then made a few remarks in which dwelt upon the beautiful character of Mr. Titsworth. He told of his devotion to his home, his family and his church, of his genial nature and charming personality. He spoke words of comfort to the bereaved ones left so suddenly without one to lead and guide and pointed them to the Heavenly Father, who alone can heal the broken heart.

Following these remarks, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis spoke briefly. He also referred to the exemplary life of the departed and told of the strong home ties, of his devotion to those he loved and of his bright and happy nature. Dr. Lewis also drew attention to the sudden termination of life and what a shock it was to all who knew Mr. Titsworth. He lead the thoughts of all, especially the bereaved ones, to Christ and invoked the Divine blessing for help, strength and comfort in the hour of trial. As the conclusion of his remarks, Dr. Lewis offered prayer. The quartette then sang "Abide With Me."

After an opportunity had been given those present to look upon the form of the departed, the interment took place in Hillside cemetery. The bearers were Joseph M. Titsworth, David E. Titsworth, Arthur L. Titsworth, Sydney R. Titsworth, Dr. Frank S. Wells and M. L. Duncan.

RACE IS DOWN TO THREE MEN

Griggs, Dryden or Stokes Will Probably be Next Senator From Jersey.

THE GOVERNOR'S DAY.

All Candidates But Two Were at Trenton Yesterday, But Nothing Definite Was Accomplished—General Opinion is One of Three.

The man who is to succeed the late William J. Sewell as United States Senator from New Jersey still remains an open question although most authorities concede that the choice has practically sifted down to three men, John W. Griggs, John F. Dryden and Edward C. Stokes. Charles M. Bacon, the Trenton correspondent of the Philadelphia Record, adds the name of David C. Baird. No one can tell, however, which of these men is likely to be named.

It was thought that something definite might come out of Governor's Day, Tuesday, at Trenton. While all the candidates but Congressman Gardner and John W. Herbert, of Middlesex, were there, there was really but little accomplished. Nearly all of the members of both houses of the Legislature were present and there were many conferences held. All the candidates appeared singularly hopeful and in excellent humor.

According to the poll of the legislators made by the Trenton Trne American, the votes for the different candidates will probably be somewhat as follows on the first ballot:

Griggs—Passaic, 6; Bergen, 3; Monmouth, 4; Morris, 2; Ocean, 1; Union, 2; total, 18.

Stokes—Cumberland, 3, Gloucester, 1; Morris, 1; Burlington, 3; Cape May, 1; Ocean, 1; Union, 1; Warren, 1; total, 12.

Dryden—Essex, 13; Union, 1; total, 13.

Baird—Camden, 4; Salem, 2; total, 6.

Gummere—Mercer, 4; Somerset, 2; total, 6.

Herbert—Middlesex, 4.

Loudenslager—Cape May, 1; Gloucester, 1; total, 2.

From present appearances, no choice is likely to result from the first ballot when many counties will have their "favorite sons" to honor. After the first ballot, there will be a general shifting of votes.

The New York Tribune sums up the situation as follows: "While it was not conceded, it might as well have been, that not one of the candidates from South Jersey, including Mercer and Middlesex counties, could count reliably upon more than sporadic support beyond his own county, and even in some of the counties this support was either divided or non-committal. It also was rumored that there were possibilities of a division in Passaic county, but this rumor was not wholly disinterested, inasmuch as those who were in a position to speak authoritatively declared that the Passaic delegation would be a unit for Mr. Griggs.

"To the theorists and the enthusiasts the situation appeared to be speculative, and they were agreed that the contest was as yet 'anybody's fight.' To the cool headed practical Republicans—the men who are tacticians and who are the vitality and intelligence of the party—the situation was only problematical in so far as it related to Dryden, Griggs and Stokes."

DEATH OF ANDREW MOORE.

Died at Poughkeepsie Monday Evening After Lingering Illness.

Andrew Moore, a well-known and highly respected citizen of Poughkeepsie, died Monday evening after a lingering illness. Funeral services will be held at the home of his daughter, 112 Union street, this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. Moore was the father of Samuel J. Moore, for several years a resident of Plainfield and related to Chief T. G. Deane, having married the latter's niece, Miss E. B. Bradshaw, also a former resident of Plainfield.

Miss Linde, of Elizabethport, has returned from a visit with Plainfield friends.

Mrs. Lebbeus Martin, of Washington avenue, has gone to Albany to spend the winter with her daughter.

COUNTRY ROAD WEDDING.

Groom Secured License in Wrong County and Wedding Party Followed Them Across the Line.

John Rayborn, of Lucas county, Ia., secured a marriage license at Chariton to marry Miss Lizzie Swartz, of Wayne county, and when he paid for the paper that entitled him to claim her as his bride he did not know that there was to be a romantic turn to the affair. Rayborn is a farmer and lives very close to the line between Lucas and Wayne counties. Miss Swartz lived with her parents just over the line in Wayne county.

When he secured the marriage license in Lucas county, John Rayborn did not remember that the line was between his home and that in which his affianced lived. He thought there would be a very prosaic country wedding.

The time for the ceremony was set for eight o'clock in the evening, and Rayborn went to the Swartz home with the Lucas county license in his pocket. The guests were assembled and the wedding supper was ready. The pastor who was to perform the ceremony stood before the happy couple and as a matter of form called for the license. John Rayborn produced it.

"Whoa!" said the parson, "this won't do!"

He called the attention of the groom to the fact that the Lucas county license could not be used in Wayne county. Corydon, the county seat of Wayne county, is 16 miles from the Swartz home. It appeared that the wedding would have to be postponed, but one of the guests suggested that the wedding party could go over the county line, a quarter of a mile away. The suggestion was accepted and the wedding took place in the public road just over the line of Lucas county. The wedding party then returned to the Swartz home and to the wedding feast.

ONE SNAKE'S APPETITE.

Dined on a Rubber Boot and Gave Up the Ghost Because It Couldn't Digest It.

From a gentleman who was at one time a resident of Brazil a remarkable story about a snake that he encountered in the woods one day, which followed him with much persistence, comes to the New York Times.

"Sitting on a stump I became aware of the approach of a huge snake," writes this gentleman. "He must have been 15 feet in length. There was no doubt the snake was about to attack me.

"Without hesitating for a moment I discharged my two barrels. For a short time the reptile raged furiously, and I climbed a near-by tree. I had hardly reached the first bough when I saw the snake approaching the tree, and it climbed up behind me.

"Higher and higher I went. Higher and higher came the serpent. My heavy rubber boots were a great drawback to my progress, but I tried to get rid of them. I took one off and dropped it, and just as I had the second in my hand the snake reached for me, and I, in my desperation, tried to shield myself with the rubber boot.

"Then the snake made a dash and getting hold of the boot turned and descended the tree. I was saved, but I had not the courage to leave the tree before my friends arrived. I told them of the adventure I had and rode home minus one rubber boot. Of his snakeship nothing could be seen.

"A few weeks later on another hunting trip we found in the road a big dead snake, terribly swollen. We cut it open and found, to our astonishment, my rubber boot, not in the least injured."

DE WINDT'S JOURNEY.

French Traveler and Companions Will Try to Reach New York by Way of the Arctics.

Harry De Windt and his companions, who will attempt to reach New York by traveling overland, started long since on their way to Behring strait. The trip will be across the continent to Siberia, where the Russian government will actively assist the explorer in his undertaking.

Vicomte de Closchamp and George Harding accompany M. de Windt. This will be the third attempt M. De Windt has made to reach America entirely by land. On the first occasion, starting from New York, he managed to reach the Asiatic coast of the straits, but owing to his capture and subsequent ill treatment by Kouri, the Tchuktchi chief, he narrowly escaped with his life and had to return.

He again attempted the journey in the reverse direction last year, but owing to the political situation in China and on the Amur Count Lamsdorf refused to allow De Windt to cross Siberia, and again M. De Windt had to relinquish the trip.

Now, however, he is receiving assistance from both the Russian and American authorities, including Commodore Melville, of Washington.

WEST VIRGINIA DIANA.

Lily Jackson, Daughter of Oldest Judge on Federal Bench, Is an Accomplished Hunter.

Miss Lily Irene Jackson, of Parkersburg, W. Va., daughter of Judge John Jay Jackson, the oldest judge in the federal bench in point of service, is the Diana of West Virginia. Judge Jackson was one of President Lincoln's appointees, nearly 40 years ago. At 77 years of age he is still one of the ablest judges on the bench and he is robust and active. His daughter is an accomplished horsewoman, a crack shot with rifle or shotgun, an enthusiastic hunter, a lover of fine horses and dogs and she can hunt all day without the slightest fatigue. On a recent occasion she went on a hunting trip and returned with 30 quail, all of which fell victims to her splendid aim. She never misses a shot on the hunt and frequently brought down more than one bird at a time. A game supper to a few of her friends followed her last hunting trip, for which she herself cooked the birds she had killed. She has hand-painted souvenir cards of her own handiwork, representing hunting scenes, and on each was a feather of one of her trophies.

Peculiar Detective System.

In Newcastle, England, professional shoppers are employed by a certain large firm of drapers to test the ability of shop assistants. This firm owns over 20 large shops and employs nearly 1,000 assistants. To find out whether every customer is politely served, a number of lady customers are employed to call at the various shops. They are told to give as much trouble as possible, and sometimes to leave without making a purchase after looking at nearly everything in the shop.

Gen. Hamilton's Spectacles.

A very remarkable story is current with regard to Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton's spectacles. It appears that the gallant officer, then a subaltern, lost a pair of spectacles in the battle of Majuba hill. They were apparently picked up by a Boer, whom they suited, and who kept them for 20 years. In the early part of the present year the spectacles were found on the body of a dead Boer. The case had Gen. Hamilton's name on it, and they were in due course returned to their original owner.

W. MURRAY CRANE.

Elected Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts Three Times and Governor Twice.

Gov. Winthrop Murray Crane of Massachusetts, who has declined to succeed Lyman J. Gage as secretary of the treasury, was elected last November for the second term as governor, and before he became governor he was lieutenant governor three years. He is a millionaire paper manufacturer, of Dalton, in the western part of the state, where he was born in 1853. His grandfather founded the Berkshire paper mill there in 1801. There are now four mills in the control of the Cranes, the Berkshire, at Dalton; the Pioneer, which is one of the largest mills in the country; the Bay State mill, and the mill at Pittsfield, where the paper used by the United States government is the manufacture of money is made. W. Murray Crane has been the guiding and controlling mind not only in the management of these large paper mills, but in the various other enterprises of the Cranes of Massachusetts. The Crane mills are noted among workers as never having had a labor difficulty, and their principal owner has a reputation for fair dealing with employes and public-spirited support of undertakings for the welfare of the community in which the mills are located. Gov. Crane became extremely popular during his first term as lieutenant governor, and in the state convention of 1899, when it was agreed the then governor should be satisfied with having served three terms, no name but Mr. Crane's was considered by the convention. He has been a member of the republican national committee and has a number of times been a delegate as large to national conventions.

HAS SUFFERED MUCH.

Queen Sophia of Sweden and Norway Has Been an Invalid for Many Years.

Queen Sophia of Sweden, who is at present very ill, is now in her sixty-sixth year, and is noted among European royal women as a devoted mother, who has had more than the average happy mother's lot to contend with. She was formerly Princess Sophia, and is the daughter of the late Duke Wilhelm of Nassau. She was married to King Oscar on June 6, 1857, and brought him a truly royal dowry, which has constituted the only great wealth which the Swedish king has had. For 14 years the queen has been unable to take an active or conspicuous part in court affairs or in public functions of any kind. Since her serious illness of 1887 she has been a great sufferer, and has been compelled to live a quiet life. She has found time and strength, however, to devote herself to works of philanthropy, especially to the Sophia home in Stockholm, endowed by her, in which she takes a never-failing and active interest.

Where Women Are Firemen.

In the town of Mont Clare, Ill., the women are the fire fighters. Most of the men are in Chicago all day attending to business, and they leave the management of the suburban town's affairs largely to their wives and sisters. So the fire captain is a woman, and so is the fire marshal, and all of the women are trained to fighting fire.

Mr. Carnegie's Benefactions.

Andrew Carnegie has given in this country for libraries and educational purposes $25,000,000, not including his latest proposed contribution of $10,000,000 for students of science. Mr. Carnegie's total list of benefactions to date is $82,000,000.

AFTER ROBERTS' SCALP.

President Believed to Be Considering the Appointment of a New United States Treasurer.

A change in the important position of treasurer of the United States, now held by Ellis H. Roberts, of New York, is looked for soon. It is understood here that the president has decided to appoint a successor to Mr. Roberts, but who the new man is cannot be learned.

A republican representative from New York, who has long been a close personal and political friend of the president, has had several talks with him at the white house recently in regard to this matter and he is authority for the statement that a new treasurer will soon be made.

Further inquiry made by the Brooklyn Eagle correspondent brought out the fact that the president is not satisfied with certain transactions of the treasurer in matters outside of his office and which were made the basis of a suit against him.

ELLIS H. ROBERTS.

It is known that some time since certain New York people called at the treasury department and complained to Secretary Gage regarding Mr. Roberts' conduct in this matter. The New Yorkers were informed that the president was the proper person to whom complaints should be made, and it is supposed the matter was taken to the white house. It was reported, also, that Mr. Roberts had met the charges against him, but this is also denied in other quarters.

Mr. Roberts was made treasurer of the United States May 1, 1897, and has been in office for about four and a half years. He has made an excellent official, his thorough knowledge of banking matters and his former experience as assistant treasurer of New York being exceedingly useful to him in his work here. There has been no suggestion whatever of irregularity connected with him in his official position.

Treasurer Roberts was born in Utica in 1827 and was educated in Yale in the class of 1848. He was first an editor in his native city, later becoming proprietor of the Utica Morning Journal. In 1870 he went to congress and served two terms. President Harrison in 1890 made him assistant treasurer of the United States at New York. In 1893 he became president of the Franklin national bank in New York. He has written and lectured much on financial subjects, including the tariff. A suit brought against him in 1894 as a result of which he was ordered to pay his alleged debt of $21,000 on a judgment rendered, brought his name into prominence and discussion.

DR. JOSEPH ZEMP.

Elected President of the Swiss Republic for the Year 1902 Over Two Opposing Candidates.

Dr. Joseph Zemp, the newly elected president of the Swiss republic, is regarded as a genuinely capable statesman and eminently qualified to preside over the national council which initiates all legislation in the little mountain state. He is a leader in the conservative party, although he is known to hold tolerant and even liberal views in matters of great weight. Dr. Zemp is 67 years old, and is a native of Entlebuch, Lucerne. One year ago he was elected vice president, and he comes into his present office by virtue of the unwritten law that the vice president shall succeed to the highest office, provided his services in the subordinate position have been satisfactory to the people. As vice president he was head of the department of state railways and telegraphs, where he was well tested in the art of government. He was elected over two opposing candidates.

Enormous Loss by Fire.

The loss from conflagrations in this country, for 11 months of 1901, is $150,000,000, and the most of this tremendous drain could be saved by better construction and greater care.

New Year's Customs in European Countries

Some Odd and Pretty Ways in Which the Day Is Celebrated in Many Lands.

IT IS interesting to note, in connection with the reviewing of the customs and ceremonies which grow up about an anniversary day of any kind, how much they reflect the character of the day celebrated, and embody the central thought which gave rise to its national or international observance. It is also instructive to note the evolution which gradually takes place in the methods of observing any public anniversary day. To take down an old volume and read of how our forefathers threw themselves body and soul into the spirit of such days as they rolled by, makes one realize that times have indeed changed, but for better or worse we will have to let each decide for himself. A paragraph from Irving's Knickerbocker is illustrative of this point:

"New Year was truly a day of open-handed liberality, of jocund revelry, and warm-hearted congratulation—when the bosom seemed to swell with genial good-fellowship—and the plenteous table was attended with an unceremonious freedom, and honest, broad-mouthed merriment, unknown in these days of degeneracy and refinement." And without taking up the challenge thus thrown out, that times "ain't what they used to be," and willing to admit that perhaps we did make a mistake in not arranging for our earthly advent 200 or 300 years ago, let us look on the bright side of the matter, and remember that the chap with the corded hat and knickerbockers has long since moldered in the grave, while we have life and its opportunities before us.

And the coming of the new year emphasizes the last thought and gives fresh hope as one looks on all the possibilities and opportunities lying hidden therein. It is this all pervading essence of thought of the New Year's anniversary which can be traced in almost every custom belonging to the day, which has arisen in this or other lands.

In France and the other Latin countries the great gift day of the year is New Year's day. In the popular eye it is the greatest festival of the year. It is the great family day. In the morning the children are out of bed and at their stockings before the light of day has begun to streak the early morning with dashes of gray. They then rush to be the first to salute their parents and offer them good wishes for the new year. If any member of the family has died during the year all the near relatives assemble at the grave in the early morning, renewing flowers and ornaments. After the midday meal, the younger members of the family call upon the older ones and in the evening they all meet for dinner at the home of the oldest member, who is considered the head of the family. When the French speak of their family it is in the broad sense and includes all relatives.

In Scotland, as in France, New Year's day is the most important festival of the year. The day before known as hogmanay, at which time the children of the poorer classes in the retired and primitive towns swaddle themselves in great sheets and go along the streets in little bands, calling at the doors of the wealthy inhabitants for a dole of wheaten bread or sweet cake.

Another visitor whom every family expects on this night is the First-Foot, a name given to the person who first sets foot over the threshold after the clock strikes 12. Hence in Edinburgh and other large cities the streets were thronged in the old days and there was a din and clatter in the air as the First-Footers pressed up and down carrying a hot-pint, or bowl of hot toddy, which each offered the other with "A gude New Year." And girl caught on the street, even with an escort, only to be kissed by any youth. This merry rollicking custom prevailed until in 1811, when the rowdy and criminal element made it the occasion of bold robberies and held possession of the streets of Edinburgh for several hours, since which time the First-Footer has come to the exception rather than the rule.

But it is to Germany we have to turn for a curious bit of horse play in connection with the celebration of New Year's eve or St. Sylvester's night. In many of the larger cities, and especially Berlin, everybody is privileged to indulge with blow of the fist any citizen who ventures into the street after dark with a high silk hat. The unfortunate visitor from the provinces and the stranger in the city are the special mark of the roysterers. Suddenly he finds himself the center of a jolly group of men and boys and the cry of "Hut ab!" sounds in his ears and when he finally makes his escape it is with his hat rim resting on his shoulders and the battered remains of the crown of his hat resting on his aching head.

In rural Russia New Year's begins as preeminently a juvenile festival. The boys rise with the sun, fill their pockets with dried peas and wheat, much after the manner of the American youth on Halloween night, and go in bands from house to house. As doors are never locked, it is easy for them to effect an entrance. They use the peas on their enemies and the gentler wheat upon their friends. After breakfast the handsomest boy in the village is bedecked with evergreen and bright berries, and led to the house of the nobleman, followed by the pea and wheat shooters of the early morning. The lord admits the horse and guests to his parlor, where all the family is gathered. This is the greeting of the peasants, old and young, of their lord and master.

A New Year's eve custom which is said to linger around Bramyard, in the Worcestershire border of Herefordshire, England, is the rush for the first pitcherful of the New Year's bearing in his hand an apple stuck full of corn variously colored and decorated with a sprig of some evergreen. Three short skewers serve as supports to the apple when not held in the hand, and a fourth serves to hold it by without destroying its many colored honors.

The Persians celebrate the beginning of the year by exchanging presents of eggs, which is suggestive of the custom surrounding our observance of Easter, and may convey with it the thought of new life and a new year. The egg, at least if it is fresh, is symbolizing a beginning and a life with all its promise and possibilities.

ANDY MILLER'S SNAKE.

A Very Intelligent and Faithful Serpent Bred in Old Kentucky Retires for the Winter.

Andy Miller, of Harrodsburg, Ky., got his seven-foot cornsnake under Dan to bed for the winter last week. Dan retires late this year because Andy had kept him awake by making him stay by the fire.

But one cold day last week he slipped out and tried to follow Andy to the barn, as he loved to do. When half way there the cold got him, and he fell into a torpor.

Andy knew what had happened as soon as he saw the vacant place by the fireside. He soon found his pet, and filling a box with rags, put the snake in it and buried the box three feet deep.

He has had Dan'l for three years and each season when the cold weather sets in "coaches" him until spring again clothes the leafless trees and life again is tolerable for snakes.

It was under somewhat peculiar circumstances that Andy acquired Dan and adopted him for Daniel's good. As Andy tells it, he was going through his wood land when a rabbit ran past him so rapidly that he could hardly tell what the creature was. Close behind the rabbit came the snake.

One hundred yards away the thought must have struck the rabbit that its only salvation was in the run, for Andy says it made a loop and, to his amazement, squatted between his feet. And the snake, not to be robbed of its dinner, turned and came at Andy full tilt.

When the snake reached Andy's legs he recovered from his astonishment. He caught the reptile by the back of the neck and carried it home.

In a year or so it had become so gentle that it would come at a whistle and would jump through a hoop. It follows Andy like a dog, and all summer long sleeps on his feet at night.

Dan has never voted yet.

PIG IN HER PARLOR.

English Woman Kept It There Because, She Says, She Had Educated It as a "Christian."

Miss Emily Hampton, of Nazeing, England, was summoned the other day for keeping a pig in a manner dangerous to health. The nuisance inspector testified that he found the pig occupying the whole of one room in the house of the defendant. The animal was lying between clean sheets on a feather bed, covered with a white lace counterpane, with his head resting on a pillow. The room was furnished like the usual parlor, and there were illuminated texts on the walls.

The inspector said further that he found the defendant kneeling at the bedside and kissing the pig and calling it a naughty boy because it had eaten a small portion of its pillow.

Miss Hampton pleaded that she had educated the pig as a Christian. She had reared it from infancy. When young it used to occupy the sofa. It had always asked to be let out when it wanted to take the fresh air. If never kicked the clothes off the bed and was most quiet and peaceable. Visitors came in carriages to see it. The magistrate gave Miss Hampton six weeks' in which to find fresh lodgings.

Value of Oriental Rugs.

A square foot of the best Persian rug is worth about $10, and it takes a single weaver 22 days to complete it. This allows the weaver about 44 cents a day for her wool and her labor, but three-fourths of this amount goes to pay for the wool. Only 11 cents a day is left for the weaver.

WORST OF TYRANTS.

Debt Ruins More Lives Than Any Other Bad Habit.

The Problem of Receipts and Expenditures Is One in Which Every Man, Woman and Child Is Interested.

(Special Washington Letter.)

"A LL individuals should be bookkeepers," says the secretary of the treasury. "The subjects of receipts and expenditures should be drilled into the minds of school children. The problem of how to live within a stated income should not be left to the solution of maturity or old age.

"The state should be thrifty. It should be understood that public wealth can only flow from private prosperity. It is wicked for private individuals to waste their substance. It is criminal for a state to expend more than its income or promote wastefulness in official life. The manner of the living of public men receives more careful scrutiny by the plain people than they imagine. There flows forth therefore from the recklessness of the livings of some public men not only the jealousies which engender crime, but habits of wastefulness among the people themselves."

SENATOR DUBOIS.
(Idaho Statesman, Called "the Poor Man of the Senate.")

The subject of conversation was the fact that so many rich men are seeking places in high official life, not for the purpose of earning their livings thereby, but for the purpose of having exalted social station. Such men do not serve the people well. To use the offices for their own selfish ends. The conclusion reached was that the people should take more individual interest in political affairs than they do, and should see to it that rich men are not sent into high public places merely because they are rich; nor should rich men be debarred from public service if the people understand that they have patriotic purposes. But the accumulation of rich men in a body at the national capital tends to the atmosphere of aristocracy which is inconsistent with the spirit of our government.

The problem of receipts and expenditures, which Secretary Gage says children should be taught to solve, has occupied the minds of many statesmen and women, including Wilkins Micawber and all of his class. Few can easily learn that wealth consists of the savings rather than the earnings. The miracle of the loaves and fishes was completed only when obedience was given to the command: "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing may be lost." The miracle taught not only a lesson of the divine power of the Theanthropos, but also inculcated a lesson of political economy. Nature knows no waste. She utilizes the smallest atoms. Man alone is wasteful. Even the beasts of the field are economical. The squirrels save and the bees busily store away food for the winter. Man alone does not seem disposed to look ahead "for a rainy day."

Grover Cleveland once said: "It is our neighbors who keep us poor, because we try to live as they live, instead of living as we ought to live, on our incomes." A similar lesson was inculcated by Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer, who said: "So apportion your wants that your means may exceed them. Every man who earns ten shillings a week can do this if he please, whatever he may say to the contrary; for, if he can live upon ten shillings a week, he can live upon nine and eleven pence. Poverty is relative and therefore not ignoble. Neediness is a positive degradation. If I have only £100 a year, I am rich as compared with the majority of my countrymen. If I have £5,000 a year, I may be poor as compared with the majority of my associates, and very poor as compared with my next-door neighbor. With £5,000 a year I may dread a ring at my door bell; I may have my tyrannical masters in servants whose wages I cannot pay; for the flesh that lies near me my heart some Shylock may be dusting his scales and whetting his knife. Every man is needy who spends more than he has; every man is needy who spends less than he has."

"How to live on $5,000 a year, as a member of congress, was a problem which kept me awake many a night," says Senator Dolliver, of Iowa. "Three years ago I moved into a small flat away out in the northwest part of the city, and clear outside of the social swirl, and since that move was made I have always had a little money in my pocket for car fare at least. Previous to that time it was hard times all the time. In my home town, or in any other town in Iowa, $5,000 a year would be a splendid income, because the cost of living on a par with the neighbors is so much less.

"I learned that lesson from Senator Dolliver last spring," says Senator Dubois, of Idaho, "and I have taken a little flat on East Capitol street, about four blocks away from the capitol. You see, my wife did not want me to come back to the senate; but I told her I must go either to the senate or the poor house, and so she let me come to the senate. Now, with $5,000 a year, and living in a small flat, we can get along and probably get a little bit ahead. You must know that when a senator takes a flat, that fact is recognized by all society as notification that the senator is too poor to give entertainments and squander fortunes in flowers and wines. I am one of the poor men in the senate, and shall live as a poor man should."

"From Senator Plumb I learned that lesson of economy, long before I expected to come to the senate," says Senator Burch, of Kansas. "I have taken a flat near the Shoreham, where I am within a minute's walk of my street car lines. There is no elevator in the house, and I am on the third floor. Nobody will climb those stairs except those who are anxious to see me, and whom I will be glad to welcome. The general public will understand without any word from me that there will be no entertainments or banquets in that flat. The people who live for that sort of thing are not in the habit of climbing stairs. I hope to be able to live within my salary, but it will be a daily study of economy for me to do so."

One of the popular fallacies throughout the country is the idea that only rich men come to the senate. The three mentioned above are all poor men; and there are others. Senator Knute Nelson, of Minnesota, is a poor man and lives economically now, as he did when he was a member of the house of representatives.

Senators Allison and Dolliver, of Iowa; Cullom and Mason, of Illinois; the senators from North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho and all of the states south of Mason and Dixon's line are without wealth. It will thus be seen that the body which has been sneeringly alluded to as "the millionaire club" is not composed of very rich men. On the contrary, a large majority of the senators must be classed with the poor in this world's goods.

Whether the people should send rich men to the senate can be determined only by the legislatures of the several states. But they should bear in mind the fact that acquired wealth does not reduce a man's usefulness; whereas inherited wealth frequently produces love of ease and effeminacy. There are several rich men in the senate; but each one of them has acquired his wealth by his own efforts, and they are all useful senators. For example, there is Senator Elkins, of West Virginia. He is a man of wonderful energy and force, always busy, and always doing his people some good. There is Senator Hanna of Ohio, a man of acquired wealth, who is always doing things for his people, a man of tireless energy, unpretentious and public. Senator Depew, of New York, attended the senate because of his capabilities as a working man; and he is still busy. Senator McMillan, of

SENATOR ALDRICH.

Michigan, although a millionaire, is one of the hardest workers in public life. Senator Clark, of Montana, probably the richest man in the world, acquired all of his millions by industry. He never uses tobacco or alcohol in any form, is always sober, and always busy. These are the only conspicuous rich men in the senate, and every one of them is a credit to that body, a credit to his state and a credit to the republic.

Senator McMillan once told the narrator how he acquired the splendid mansion which is his home at Detroit. He said that as soon as he was married he undertook to buy a small house on the installment plan. By rigid economy, by denying himself all luxuries, and some necessities, he managed to pay for the house. Then he began to buy the adjoining house in the row. When that was paid for, his income was much larger, so he bought every house in the row, one at a time. When they were all paid for, he was a mature man, with a family in need of more room; so he tore down the row and built his palace where he began as a young man.

Every successful man has had similar experiences. Economy is in itself a great revenue. As it is practiced in the national capital by senators, it is also practiced by representatives. Their mode of living, within their incomes, should be a lesson, an inspiration, to young men and women everywhere. They should avoid debt. The creditor is a dangerous acquaintance. He follows at the debtor's heels. He sits by his bed moments, and stops only at the graveyard gate. The children of economical, thrifty people learn their bookkeeping lessons of receipts and expenditures every day. They are thus educated and graduated into good wives and husbands for the coming generation.

FOR ORDINARY WEAR.

Waists of Flannel, Cashmere and Corduroy Are Fashionable.

For a schoolgirl nothing is prettier in the way of waists than one of dotted velvet. Such a waist can be made with stitched plaits and strappings or, if desired, trimmed with little pipings of plain satin the color of the waist or black. With a waist of plain velvet a wide lace collar is pretty. Changeable velvets make charming blouses for dressy and ordinary occasions.

White flannel, which has been heretofore so popular, is being discarded by people who have to consider the cost of things. It is really most unpractical, as it soils almost immediately, and when washed it either grows yellow or shrinks.

Cashmere and silk and wool fabrics are superseding flannel because of their superior cleaning qualities. Box plaits form a popular way of making these unlined tailor made waists.

The waist in today's illustration is of white silk laid in alternate tucks and shirrings. The sleeves are elbow length and are finished by wide ruffings of chiffon. Above these ruffings are wide and narrow bands of black velvet, terminating in rosettes. The waist has a short yoke of tucks, bordered by a curved medallion applique. The waist is collarless, but about the throat is worn a pretty neck ornament consisting of three narrow bands of velvet ribbon held together by a white lace butterfly.

ELABORATE SKIRTS.

Triple Flounces, Appliques and Tucks on All the Newest Models.

Skirts are becoming more and more ornate. Triple effects are especially stylish, and one of the newest skirts boasts of three gored flounces laid in clusters of five tucks and edged with a rich passementerie. In net and thin goods a favorite model for tall people consists in a yoke with two rows of shirring farther down, from which falls a full ruffle edged with a wide patterning of lace.

Skirts of velvet are handsomest made perfectly plain, with a clinging effect around the hips and a long train. One large gored flounce is rich when added on invisibly or by means of a single heavily stitched fold. A pretty style for a cloth gown consists in ornamenting it at intervals with wavy bands of inch wide velvet ribbon of a little darker shade than the cloth.

Today's picture shows a gown of yellow lace of a rather plain design. The waist is bloused into a belt of turquoise silk. The sleeves are elbow length, with a wide frill. The sole trimming of the waist consists of narrow black velvet ribbons brought across the shoulders and front forming fichus and held together with a turquoise brooch.

The skirt has a graduated flounce set on invisibly. There is a very long train.

FASHIONABLE MATERIALS.

Veronese Red the Latest Tint For Street Gowns.

The fashionable materials for street wear are many. First we must count for morning wear the homespuns, silk-lines and all the long hair goods on the Scotch and English order. These homespuns and friezes are very stylish in the pale colors and especially in the fawns, under blues and grays. However, for more practical purposes green is much used, and there is a new shade of red called "veronese" which is not a thick, brickllke red, but has in its composition rosy tints and is very becoming both to blonds and brunettes.

Corded and ribbed goods are considered very smart, especially for young girls.

The brown tailor made in the illustration shows one of the most fashionable effects by way of a wide collar. This extends well over the shoulders and is trimmed with a wide band of handsome sable. This band is continued down the front, passing through the belt so as to give the waist and skirt the effect of being in one piece. There are wide sleeves banded with the sable and having a chic trimming in the shape of two sable tails. The suit is further enriched by bands of velvet applique on the waist and skirt. The belt is of the cloth, stitched. The hat is of sable and color colored lace, with a huge chrysanthemum as trimming.

THE NEW YEAR MILLINERY.

Flat Shapes Are Giving Way to More Elaborate Effects.

The plateau toque tilted to one side is beginning to pall upon the fashionable taste. An attempt at a change has been made by building the center, which stands for the crown, of heavy lace and the outer circle of fur. One of the new shapes is a flat, round toque, with upturned brim, a sort of improved turban. This is very smart and promises to supersede the pancake hat. This turban shape is nearly always trimmed on its under brim with a wreath of crushed roses, camellias or shaded dahlias.

For young girls there is a wealth of pretty felt shapes. Large, floppy felt hats are crushed here and there or threaded with ribbon and so drawn into quaint fates. Pale blue felts are charming trimmed in this manner, with soft white ribbon and bunches of violets, while pale pink adapts itself to autumn foliage and knots of brown velvet.

Hats of rough white felt are trimmed with wreaths of holly, with its red berries, and a square bow of black velvet drooping over the hair in the back.

A very old and yet at the same time simple hat is shown in the picture. It is of black velvet, and the trimming is of spotted black and white panne. It is drawn around the crown softly into a big knot in front. On the left side the brim is tilted, and there is also an irregular bow of the panne on the band. This simple hat can easily be made at home.

The Adaptable Woman

By Maud Robinson

"Hypocrite!" My friend Maisie Rendee shot forth this remark just after her caller had gone.

"Why do you call that charming Mrs. Ainsworth a hypocrite?" I demanded indignantly.

"Didn't you hear me say she agreed with everything I said?" Maisie retorted. "There wasn't one point on which she disputed me, yet I have heard that same woman express diametrically opposite views on the very same questions when she was talking with another woman. That's why I brought up the same subjects. I wanted to hear what she would say. But it's no use. You can't make her disagree with you. She won't disagree with any one."

"Happy woman!" I interjected.

"Oh, that's all very well," Maisie went on, "but at least I would like to see her consistent. You know she has a really brilliant mind, is a tremendous reader, and there's nothing she likes better than to talk to intellectual people. In fact, she has nothing in common with the type of woman the Germans designate as 'hausfrau.' Well, my dear, the other day she happened to call on a woman of this description—a woman who cared for nothing but her housework and kitchen. And what do you suppose happened? Why, she fascinated the creature completely. During the whole of her visit she talked most enthusiastically on household subjects, discussed the relative merits of Brown's and of Jones' baking powders and whether that new washing compound wore holes in the clothes or not. Fancy! And I don't believe she ever had a tin of baking powder in her hand during her whole life. Here's another instance: She can't endure children, you know, yet whenever she goes where there are any she plays with them in the most charming manner and quite wins the hearts of all the mothers.

"She will volubly discuss politics on Tuesday evening with Jack Witherington, who admires brainy women, and will make him admit she is the cleverest one he ever met, and yet on Wednesday, when Lewis Carver appears on the scene (he has old fashioned ideas on the subject of women), she will display the most adorable and utterly feminine ignorance on all serious subjects.

"And then when she attends the meeting of the Society of Advanced Woman Thinkers she wears a costume so severe that it savors strongly of the masculine, yet that very afternoon she crushes home, receive a quick change and appears at the Van Sutphens' afternoon tea in a creation of most frivolous chiffons. Now, did you ever see such a contradiction?"

"I am certain that she will never be straitlaced in Bohemia or Bohemian in the salons of Mrs. Grundy. When she goes to a strange country, she will almost instantly adapt herself to its ways and customs. When her husband loses her fortune, she will look as attractive in print gowns as she did in brocade ones, and she will do her housework with the same grace with which she received her guests at dinner parties.

"When by chance she has to do with inferior people, she will come down to their own level in talking to them, and when she has dealings with individuals who are her superiors in life she will raise herself to meet them. In other words, the adaptable woman is all things to all people."

But Maisie shook her head disapprovingly. She herself is not an adaptable woman.

OPERA AND THEATER WRAPS

Coats of All Over Lace the Novel Thing.

A great many women cling to the circular opera wraps, but the coat is smarter for theaters and restaurants. These coats are made of the simplest or the most elaborate materials, just as one's purse or taste dictates. Black peau de soie or broadcloth makes up well with revers and facings of ermine. On the other hand, a recent importation has an accordion plaited mousseline de soie lined with the palest of mauve satin and trimmed with a yoke of tinted lace encircled with mink. The sleeves were roomy and were lined with many rows of frillings.

Coats of all over heavy guipure lace are among the season's novelties. When of black lace, they are trimmed with chinchilla or ermine, and when of the ecru shades they are outlined with bands of mink or sable.

Skunk, with its glossy brown fur and full bushy effect, is excellent when used in narrow bands on pale colors, and it looks even better when used to outline boleros and tunic draperies and to border the open sleeves, which are supplemented by undersleeves of light color or fanciful description.

Here is a very dainty boa. It is made of pale blue chiffon trimmed with a flower applique of black chiffon. The boa proper is composed of deeply tinted ruffings edged with the black applique. The long ends are shirred a dozen rows and to these shirrings are added three pointed ruffles edged with the applique. The hat which is worn with this is of eminence purple velvet with a soft fold of chiffon over pale mauve taffeta.

SPOTTED GOWNS.

Made of Net or Chiffon They Are Most Stylish.

Very handsome evening gowns are made of wide and narrow insertions of black chantilly. These are joined together by means of black velvet ribbons. Black velvet ribbons are much used for silk and net skirts. The widths increase as they reach the bottom. Plaitings of black velvet baby ribbon are used with good effect on berthas and flounces. This same narrow velvet is also very chic when in outlines boleros and collars of lace.

Dotted effects are all the style for evening gowns. The dots are either the same color as the material or else they contrast. In the latter case the lining is almost invariably the color of the dot. For instance, a net with a pale corn colored dot will be made over a soft colored silk.

Black spotted chiffon is the material of the gown illustrated. The dot is pale pink, and the gown is made over pale pink silk. The waist is draped softly above a wide belt of crushed panne. The narrow shoulder straps are supplemented by a slight draping of chiffon. The skirt is made with a wide, plain yoke. A large pale pink peppy is fastened to the left of the decolletage. It has long streamers of shaded pink velvet.

SHEER MATERIALS.

They Are the Proper Thing For Evening Gowns.

Never before have evening gowns been so beautiful. They are appliqued and reappliqued until hardly an inch of the original material can be discerned. Wide bands of costly lace are served with silver spangles, and these are placed over materials of rubberlike texture and softness. The lining silks of these gowns are lustrous, and soft liberty satin is much used, and the necessary fullness below the knees is afforded by numerous ruffles. Very often a white gown will be trimmed with wide bands of cream medallion lace into which are set ovals of Persian silk or chiffon.

Flowered chiffon forms the material of many stylish dresses. It comes this season in very large patterns on cream or pale tinted grounds. Orchids and roses form the most popular patterns.

but it is so expensive that only the rich can afford it. Very chic and at the same time inexpensive dresses are made of the numerous novelty nets and thin crapes. Gowns of this sort are made up over two linings, one of mousseline and the under one of silk.

A dainty evening gown is here pictured. The material is pale green tulle striped in silver. The blouse waist is made full with a fichu effect across the bust and tucked shoulder caps. The skirt has a wide ruffle headed by a lace applique. The new style of this simple dress is given by the spray of roses which starts on the left shoulder, is tacked on the right hip and from there falls to the knees. Such floral decorations are very popular this winter.

JUDIC CHOLLEY.

DAINTY UNDERWEAR.

Much Beading and Insertion Are Used in It.

The newest lingerie is much decorated with beadings, through which run pure white or colored ribbons.

Nightgowns are many of them made of soft china silk, and a favorite model is covered with insertion of yellow lace. It has a short empire waist bordered by two rows of this insertion, and the sleeves are banded with it at intervals of two inches. There is a wide flat collar edged with lace, of which there is a frill down the front. The bottom of the nightgown has a wide flounce, also banded with the insertion. The corset cover which goes with this is in the shape of a blouse, banded with perpendicular insertions.

gle or triple flounces edged with insertions, and a broad beading through which satin ribbon is run and tied at intervals into small bows.

Pale tinted underwear is no longer so much the fashion as it was last winter. White is used by the best people.

The blouse corset cover in the illustration is particularly adapted to a slender figure. It is made of fine batiste and valenciennes lace. The upper portion consists of tucks outlined by insertions. The shoulder straps, also tucked, are edged by a wide frill of the valenciennes. The fullness is confined at the waist line by a ribbon run through a wide beading.

The Constitutionalist

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. ... Proprietor

THE NEW YEAR.

The opening of the second year of the Twentieth Century finds Plainfield one of the best governed cities of the east. The annual reports of the various city officials, which were presented to the retiring Common Council of 1901, show that the city affairs are, at present, in a highly satisfactory condition. It is also known fact that the men who are in charge of the administration of municipal affairs are of unquestioned integrity and that they are conducting according to their ideas of the best interests of the common wealth. While they are all liable to make mistakes, these mistakes will be in judgment.

During the last twelve-month, a number of important things have happened in Plainfield. The coming year promises to be even more eventful for Plainfield. As far as the city, itself is concerned, the present policy of administration will undoubtedly be continued. The year will probably see the start of the long talked of High School which is needed to adequately complete the local school system. It is an assured fact that Muhlenberg Hospital is to have new and up-to-date quarters.

Changes and enlargements in the trolley system will undoubtedly attract considerable attention during the year. The new management is now in complete control of the Elizabeth, Plainfield and Central Jersey Street Railway Company and promises improvements. There is promise of a line to South Plainfield before summer. All sorts of rumors concerning projected lines about this part of the State are rife and there is no telling what may develop. Certain it is that the year of 1902 is going to see a general extension of the rapid transit through the suburban and rural districts of central and northern New Jersey.

A number of changes have been inaugurated by the New Jersey Central with the beginning of the new year. Some are satisfactory to the public and others are not. There has been much complaint about that company's service of late but the railroad officials promise an improvement in the near future. It will be royally welcomed. There have been important changes in railway circles of late and the new year may see more which will directly concern the New Jersey Central.

Summed up, the past year has been a prosperous and generally satisfactory one for Plainfield. There is prospect that the coming one will be even more eventful while, at present, there is nothing in sight to check the continued prosperity.

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

While there was nothing unusual in the annual message of Mayor O. L. Jenkins, which was presented to the new Common Council at its first meeting, Wednesday evening, it contained much that was of interest to every resident of Plainfield, whether a property owner or not. Its full text was published in yesterday's Daily Press. It should be read carefully.

It contained, for one thing, some very important facts which were not generally known to the people of Plainfield. That he knows whereof he speaks must be taken for granted. He would not take public such important utterances unless he had considered the proper legal authority and knew that his statements would be backed up. In this case, it was probably Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh who was consulted regarding the subject.

According to Mayor Jenkins' message, the terms of office of all city officers, except justices of the peace, are by the provisions of the Meeker Election law extended for eleven months and a fraction beyond the time for which they were originally elected. Portions of the law are quoted to explain just what he means, and his authority for the statement.

Unless the Common Council or the Legislature takes some action, it will not be necessary next November to elect any city officials besides the justices of the peace. Mayor Jenkins thinks, however, that the Legislature is likely to pass some amendments to the present law this session and advises the Common Council not to deal with the subject until it has ascertained just what the Legislature proposes to do.

The Mayor also refers to the present negotiations with the Plainfield Water Supply Company but, as they have not yet been concluded, he does not go into details concerning what has already been accomplished or is likely to be done. The rest of his message is chiefly devoted to a summary of the local situation explaining that the city is, at present, in a prosperous condition.

MR. DUMONT'S WORK.

In regard to the changes in the Common Council which took place this noon, it is interesting to note that President J. B. Dumont, who retired, has probably served the city as a Councilman longer than any other member now serving, which is fourteen years. This has not been served continuously, but with short intervals.

Mr. Dumont has been a most valuable member of the Council, due largely to his financial ability. It cannot be denied that by his close watch of the city treasury many a dollar has been saved and the credit of the city maintained, when others have been inclined to go beyond the limit. In matters of conference, Mr. Dumont has also proved himself to be a man of wise thought and judgment. He has carefully guarded every interest, and more than once has refused to support measures which he felt confident would work disastrously to the best interests of the city.

He has been fearless and outspoken at all times, and while some of the members have at times thought him unreasonable, they have eventually been forced to believe that his words and actions were the best. It is the opinion of many Plainfielders that the city owes a debt of gratitude to Mr. Dumont or his faithful and efficient service as a Councilman that will be hard to pay.

There are several changes in the personel of the Common Council, this year, although the Republicans still continue in entire possession. President John B. Dumont has retired from public service and his place as a councilman-at-large is filled by Edward E. Pray. Of the ward councilmen, Charles B. Clifton, of the Third ward, retires in favor of Leslie M Daniel and James Craig, of the Fourth, in favor of Clarence L. Murphy. It is too soon to comment on the work of the new members as they have not yet had a chance to be heard from. Their official acts will be watched with interest, however, as there are many who wonder how they will fill the places of the retiring councilmen.

GOING TO USE TANK AGAIN

WILL KEEP WATER ALWAYS CIRCULATING THROUGH IT.

Water Company Decides to Utilize the Reservoir on the Mountain.

An interesting portion of the annual report of Chief T. O. Doane, of the fire department, was that part which referred to the improvements being inaugurated by the Plainfield Water Supply Company to increase its service, especially as regards the water for fire purposes.

Chief Doane mentions the reservoir on Johnston's Drive, which holds nearly a million gallons of water and is held in reserve. It will be remembered that complaints have been made concerning the water from this tank. To obviate this a roof is being placed over the tank and an electrical device installed that will tell the engineer at the pumping station exactly the level of the water in the reserve tank at any minute.

An arrangement is also being placed on the tank so that the water will be pumped in one side and will flow out of another opening. This will keep the water moving all the time and, it is believed, will obviate all heretofore existing trouble. It is also proposed to empty the tank frequently.

At the pumping station there are two pumps of large capacity. One pumps 3,000,000 gallons of water daily and the other 2,000,000. Another new pump with a daily capacity of 5,000,000 has been ordered and will soon be put in position. This will give a total capacity of 10,000,000 gallons daily. In case of an accident the company wants to be provided that there will be no question of plenty of water.

The Regent of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, has appointed the following committee to attend the funeral and prepare the necessary papers for the insurance of their late brother John Hallock Drake: D. W. Littell, Fred S. Green, Edward T VanWinkle.

The Regent of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, also appointed the following committee to attend the funeral and prepare the necessary papers for the insurance of their late brother John D. Titsworth: D. W. Littell, Edward T. VanWinkle and L. B. Woolston.

Set Tree on Fire.

Chief Doane and No. 3 hose wagon were called out early Saturday evening to Grant avenue and Fourth street, where a large chestnut tree had been set afire by boys. The blaze was extinguished with a few pails of water.

THEATRICAL.

Keith's Theatre, New York city, is experiencing a period of prosperity which is unprecedented in the history of the theatrical business. From noon every day in the week (except Sunday, on which day no performance is ever given) until 11 o'clock at night, this favorite playhouse is crowded from pit to the dome. There is but one reason, and it is no secret. Keith's always has the best show in town. The same principles govern in front of the footlights as do behind them. Every convenience that can be supplied is at the disposal of the patrons. Luxurious retiring rooms, uniformed attendants and trained servants [of both sexes are on duty at all times. Baggage and parcels are checked without cost; no fees of any sort are permitted; information regarding all points of interest in the city is cheerfully furnished; with nothing to offend and everything to please. The vaudeville entertainment for next week will include, among others, the following famous vaudeville stars: Homer Lind & Co. in "Gringoire, the Street Singer;" The Bissetts, comedy acrobats; the Galesbrough [Octette; John T. Thorne and Grace Carleton, in "The, Two Jesters," Martinetti & Sutherland, eccentric comedy and dancing act; Dillon Brothers, parody singers; Lynch & Jewell, comedy and dancing act; Barto-Gwande, Bijou circus; Zimmer, juggler; McIntyre & Primrose, black face comedians; and the great American biograph. Noon to 11 p. m. 50 cents.

"The Supper Club," with which the New York Winter Garden was opened, has been brightened up since its first production, and is winning the approbation of its many patrons. The new winter garden, which is the only one in America, has been voted the most unique and prettiest place of amusement in the country. The Messrs. Sire have spared no expense in the construction and decoration of the new resort, and it has already become popular with the theatre-going public. It is seldom that so many prominent people are secured to play in the one production as "The Supper Club" contains among them are such favorites as Virginia Earle, Thomas Q. Seabrook, Toby Claude, Geo. Fuller Golden, Ada Lewis, Josie Sadler, Al Hart and Eugene O'Rourke. "The Supper Club" is the work of Sydney Rosenfield and the melodious music is the composition of A. Baldwin Sloane, and Cole & Johnson.

Grace George has but two weeks more to remain at the Republic. She is forced to leave New York with a success that would have easily finished the season here to paying business. In "Under Southern Skies" this dainty little actress has secured a vehicle that will surely place her among the female stars who can lay claim to the distinction of being solid box office winners. There can be no questioning the fact of the growing popularity of this actress. Her sentiences like her, she has a winsome personality that appeals to all who see her, and being ambitious to a degree the day will surely come when she will be freely given the place she hopes for in the hearts of the theatre-going public. The closing performance of "Under Southern Skies" will be given Saturday evening, Jan. 13, after which Miss George and her company will go on tour.

LITERARY.

Are England, Scotland and Ireland, destined, ultimately, to become a part of "The United States of America and Great Britain?" is the startling inquiry which William T. Stead makes in the January Cosmopolitan. He has been one of the prophets of Great Britain, and has, at all times, been able to see in advance of his contemporaries—as events have proven. He has been studying the new conditions brought about by the industrial combinations and reaches the conclusion that England and the United States are destined to be more closely united and that as soon as the English people wake up to the absurdity and general foolishness, as has been shown in the Boer War, of a king and aristocracy, the trend will be immediate in the direction of a union with the people of the United States. However much one may differ from Mr. Stead, his speculations will be found vastly interesting. He is the first British subject who has had the courage to suggest such an outcome.

COUNCIL MET MONDAY EVENING AFTER ALL

Meeting Took the Place of the One Set For the Monday Evening Following.

A NUMBER OF PETITIONS

CONSIDERED THE QUESTION OF NEW QUARTERS WITHOUT ACTION.

Subject of Street Sprinkling by the City Was Brought Up and Will be Considered at a Future Meeting.

In view of the fact that at the first meeting of the Common Council for 1902, the rules for 1901 were adopted, it was considered wise and safe that that body should meet on the first Monday in January, thus abiding by the rules. This decision was transmitted to the Council by Corporation Counsel Marsh. Accordingly the Council met last Monday, contrary to expectations. The adjourned meeting scheduled for next Monday evening, as per resolution offered last evening, will not be held. All of the members were present except Councilmen van Herwerden and Buckle.

The first business considered was a petition received from W. C. Startup, in which he complained that a tax for a dog amounting to $2.83 with interest for the year 1900 was unjust. He claimed that he did not nor does he now own a dog. J. B. Coward, attorney for Mrs. Elizabeth Hyde, executrix of the estate of Charles Hyde, petitioned the Council to return $10 an amount overtaxed in 1900 on the property at 800 and 844 South avenue. The petitions were referred.

The bond of Constable Amos Moffett, having been approved, was ordered filed, and the bond of Constable W. R. Mattox was referred to the corporation counsel for approval as to form. The petition of the residents of Madison avenue asking for the widening of that avenue, which was referred by the Council of last year to the present Council, was referred to the proper committee.

Councilman Mellick at this time reported back several petitions wherein various amounts in taxes were in question. They were referred to the finance committee at the last meeting and last evening the committee reported adversely in all but one case. The petitions not granted were J. H. Harkness, dog tax; H. J. Martin, request for exemption of taxes, claiming same because he was an agent in business; F. C. Langhorne, asking for the return of $13.49, claiming the same was paid twice in 1897; W. T. Banks, asking exemption for a dog tax. In each of these cases, by advice of the corporation counsel, there was reported that no good reasons exist for granting the same.

Mr. Mellick stated that the committee has no way of determining whether J. H. Harkness and W. T. Banks did have or not have dogs, as claimed. They should have appeared before the Commissioners of Appeal and stated their claims. In the case of H. J. Martin, the same report was made, this is, that the fact that he was an agent did not furnish good reason for exemption.

In F. C. Langhorne's case, it was the opinion of Mr. Marsh that where the tax had been voluntarily paid it should not be returned by the city. In this connection it was reported that only in that one year, 1897, had Mr. Langhorne paid the sum mentioned. His wife paid a similar sum in that year and had continued to do so ever since. There was an argument in Mr. Langhorne's case, Mr. Lee claimed that inasmuch as the city has heretofore refunded tax paid on the property in question no exception should be made now. Mr. Tolles said that, if the tax was paid under protest, it should be returned. It was finally agreed that the finance committee should withdraw the report in this case and consider the matter further.

The one case reported favorably upon was that of John Christian, who like Mr. Langhorne, was represented by Nelson and Wm. N. Runyon. It was moved by Mr. Mellick that the tax in question, paid twice, should be properly adjusted.

A motion was made at this time by Mr. Mellick that the Council take a recess of ten minutes to consider the question of leasing new quarters for the Council and city offices. After a recess, the Council returned to its regular session and received a communication from J. B. Coward. This stated that the writer had received the notification regarding the vacating of the present quarters and he desired to say that in consideration of an extension of the lease for the same quarters, he would put the offices in first-class condition and lease the same for $700 a year. If the Council preferred to have the office now used by F. A. Dunham, giving a total floor space of 348 square feet, he would be glad to make such arrangements for a yearly rental of $630. Mr. Coward agreed to properly heat all offices after next summer. This communication, as well as the one from Smalley Brothers offering their rooms in the new building on North avenue for $1,000 a year, were referred to the finance committee for further consideration. They will be reported upon later.

In conclusion Mr. Mellick brought up the subject of street sprinkling under the direction of the city. In doing so he said that he wished to have the matter considered early and give plenty of time for any propositions that might be offered. Mr. Pray supplimented Mr. Mellick's remarks by saying that he had been obtaining data on the same subject and could assist the committee in considering the matter. This concluded the business and the Council adjourned.

SEALS HELD, OUT ON BAIL

City Judge Runyon Held the Motorman of Car That Killed Young Wiechers.

THE TESTIMONY TAKEN.

Hearing Took Place Last Friday Afternoon at Police Headquarters — Motorman Seals Charged With Gross Negligence—Cause Not Settled.

After two hours of testimony, taken before City Judge Runyon at police headquarters, on Friday afternoon, Frank R. Seals, motorman of car No. 11 which crushed out the life of George Frederick Weichers Thursday evening, was held without bail to await the action of the Grand Jury. The matter will then be probed thoroughly to determine whether or not the defendant is guilty of gross carelessness in causing the boy's death as alleged in the complaint preferred against him by Chief Kiely

At the hearing Friday, there were present Senator Charles A. Reed, counsel for Seals; Prosecutor N. C. J. English for the State; Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, in the interests of the bereaved family; County Physician F. W. Westcott and Dr. J. T. Fritts, of the street railway company.

In all nine witnesses, subpoened by Chief Kiely, were examined and gave their testimony. They were Joseph Krewson, of Plainfield avenue; Augustus Runyon, of Lafayette place; Nelson Giles, of Dunellen; John Hyler, of West Front street, conductor of car No. 11; Harvey Apgar, of DeKalb avenue; Robert Stryker, of Mariners avenue; Charles Callahan, of East Second street; George Waldron, of West Fourth street, motorman of car No. 15, which was going west at the time of the accident, and Chief Kiely. The defendant's counsel refused to allow him to testify.

Of those appearing the most important evidence was given by Giles, Apgar, Stryker, Waldron and Callahan, the first three being passengers on No. 13. All testified on similar lines, to wit: That the boy was riding alongside of No. 11 in the center of the two tracks, that he turned to the left near Plainfield avenue to avoid No. 15 which had stopped and was then forced to swerve sharply to the right because of a hay wagon which blocked his path; that the front wheel of his bicycle slipped on a rail (three were positive of this) and he was thrown to the ground within ten feet of the approaching car; also that Seals was attending to his duty and did everything in his power to prevent the accident.

The prosecution attempted to bring out that the fender striking the rear wheel of the bicycle was the cause of the boy's falling, but this was not proven by any of these witnesses. None of those testifying heard Searls sound a warning gong just previous to the accident but Callahan stated he had heard it rung a number of times when the boy remained ahead of the car on the way down from Grant avenue.

In summing up, Prosecutor English stated that the object in taking the evidence was to determine whether the facts justified the commitment of Seals to jail without bail or his exoneration. In either case, he said the matter would be considered by the Grand Jury but if the defendant was released at the present time there was a possibility of his being out of the State when his case was taken up.

Senator Reed maintained that the evidence given had showed that instead of being guilty of gross neglect, Seals had done all in his power to prevent the deplorable accident. It would not have happened, he said, but for the slipping of the bicycle. The boy took the chance and it cost him his life, therefore said Mr. Reed, where was the need of holding the defendant as a criminal?

In rebuttal, Counsellor Marsh averred that Seals should have rung a warning bell or shouted to the boy not to cross, also that it was his duty to immediately stop his car when he saw another car and a wagon preventing the boy from going to the left.

It was on this latter statement that City Judge Runyon, in rendering his decision, based his opinion that Seals should be held. There is a possibility, he said, in the defendant being negligent in not stopping the car when the blockade ahead was seen. If it was an ordinary question, he declared, he would not hesitate to discharge the defendant but it was a case where a human life was involved and for that reason it should be gone into carefully by the Grand Jury.

Seals, who is forty-five years old, has been a motorman only since December 5. He is single and came to this city from Glen Gardner, last November. He feels his position keenly and several times yesterday was in a state bordering on nervous collapse.

Accompanied by his counsel, Seals was taken to Elizabeth this noon, where application was, at once made to Judge Vail for his release on bail. The request was granted and the amount fixed at $500. It was furnished at once by a representative of the street railway company.

HOW DEATH WAS PICTURED

COMFORTING WORDS FOR FAMILY OF YOUNG WIECHERS.

Spoken by Rev. E. M. Rodman at Funeral Held on Sunday Afternoon.

A sorrowful gathering of relatives and friends assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Wiechers, of West Seventh street, Sunday afternoon, to hear the parting words pronounced over all that was mortal of little George Frederick Wiechers, whose young life was ground out beneath the wheels of a trolley car, Thursday afternoon. The impressive Episcopal service was conducted by Rev. E. M. Rodman, rector of Grace P. E. church.

The obsequies began with a solo, "Nearer My God," the boy's favorite, touchingly rendered by Charles L. Lewis. Dr. Rodman followed with Scripture reading after which he spoke at some length on the youth. "The young lad, of whom no one spoke but in terms of the highest praise," said he, "was on his way home. A sudden slip and he was beneath the wheels of a merciless car. The next moment his spirit fled and instead of returning to greet his earthly mother he departed to meet his heavenly Father. Rejoice that this young man has won life's fight and he that was the victim is now the victor."

At the conclusion of Dr. Rodman's remarks Mr. Lewis sang "Abide With Me" after which the friends were allowed a last look at the boyish face in a casket nearly hidden from sight with floral remembrances. About the room were huge pillows, wreaths and sheaves.

The remains were taken to Hillside cemetery Monday morning, where interment was made.

Miss Dobbins' Birthday Party.

Miss Erma Dobbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Dobbins, of Elmwood place, entertained a number of her young friends on the occasion of her third birthday Monday afternoon. The little ones enjoyed parlor games and afterwards partook of refreshments. Miss Dobbins received a number of handsome presents.

VISITED DISPOSAL BEDS.

Municipal Officers From Hanover, Pa., Looking at the Methods.

Former Sheriff A. B. Brodbeck and C. E. Mout, of Hanover, York county, Pa., came to Plainfield yesterday to make an inspection of the sewage farm. They are identified with the municipal government of Hanover and are seeking information along the line of sewage disposal. Street Commissioner Gavett accompanied the visitors to the farm and explained to them the workings of the system. They seemed to be greatly interested in the system.

A Profitable Investment.

"I was troubled for about seven years with my stomach and in bed half my time," says Mr. Dennick, Somerville, Ind. "I spent about $1,000 and never could get anything to help me until I tried Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I have taken a few bottles and am entirely well." You don't live by what you eat, but by what you digest and assimilate. If your stomach doesn't digest your food you are really starving. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure does the stomach's work by digesting the food. You don't have to diet. Eat all you want. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cures all stomach troubles. L. W. Randolph.

DIED WHILE ON THE TRAIN

Sudden Death of John D. Titsworth While Returning from New York.

WAS AN OLD RESIDENT.

Passed Away Shortly After Leaving Jersey City — Had Complained of Not Feeling Well, So Fred Hillmann Sat With Him—Shock to Family.

John Davies Titsworth, of Madison avenue, died Saturday afternoon while on his way from New York to his home.

He left the city on the 2:20 o'clock boat, making connections with the train which reaches this city at 3:20 o'clock. After arriving in Jersey City and just before entering the train, he hailed Fred Hillmann, of 633 West Seventh street, and asked him to remain with him. He complained of not feeling well and said that he had intense distress about the heart. The two sat in the same seat.

They had not ridden very far, when Mr. Titsworth sank back and soon expired. Just prior to that Mr. Hillmann had urged Mr. Titsworth to get off at one of the stations and secure the services of a physician. This he declined to do, saying that he wanted to reach home as soon as possible as he felt so bad.

The body was brought on the same train to Plainfield and when it arrived Undertaker Runyon was at the North Avenue station to receive it, word having been sent ahead. Nathan R. Titsworth, a son, was found and he was also at the station. The body was removed to the parlors of Undertaker Runyon and in the evening taken to the home in Madison avenue.

In the meantime, Nathan Titsworth went to the Seventh-Day Baptist church, where the Sabbath-school was in session, to tell his mother the sad news. John Meagle, the sexton, was asked to call Mrs. Titsworth and as soon as she saw her son she had a premonition of the news. She became hysterical and it was with difficulty that she was removed to her home.

Several weeks ago Mr. Titsworth was seriously ill with pneumonia. For a long time past he had a great sufferer with heart trouble and was being treated for the trouble. Members of his family, as well as relatives knew of his weak heart and while his death was a terrible shock to them, it was not unexpected altogether.

Mr. Titsworth was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Titsworth, of Cincinnati, and was born in the latter place fifty-eight years ago. He had been a resident of Plainfield over thirty years. Years ago he was engaged in the candy business in this city. Later he entered the drug business, he and his son, Alonzo Titsworth, conducting the business in Cedar street, New York, under the firm name of John D. Titsworth & Son. This business was continued for a few years, when Mr. Titsworth withdrew and his son remained for a time.

When Mr. Titsworth withdrew he entered the employ of Merck & Company, wholesale druggist, of University place and Eighth street, New York. He was placed in charge of the firm's downtown branch at 100 William street, and he held that position until the time of his death. He was highly esteemed by his business associates and all who knew him. He had a host of friends in this city who cherished his friendship.

He was a member of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., the Exempt Firemen's Association and the Congregational church and Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum. He was devoted to his home and his family and found great pleasure and comfort there. It is a strange fact that many of Mr. Titsworth's near relatives died suddenly with some form of heart trouble. He leaves a wife and two sons, Nathan R. Titsworth and Alonzo Titsworth.

In connection with his business relations in this city, Mr. Titsworth and M. D. Titsworth were the predecessors of Howard Prescott Reynolds. They kept a drug store, where A. M. Griffen's hardware store is now. Mr. Reynolds bought them out. John D. Titsworth then traveled for a drug house. When he and his son, Alonzo, were in business in Cedar street, they were resident buyers for out-of-town drug houses, and it was his keen judgment and shrewd business qualities that led to the position he held with Merck & Company for several years. He was unquestionably an authority in the drug business in New York and no one knew the market better than he. In 1866 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Rogers, daughter of Nathan Rogers, of this city.

LOCAL EXEMPTS HELD A PLEASING REUNION

Big Gathering of the Exempt Firemen's Association for Entertainment.

MANY VISITORS THERE.

A LETTER FROM PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT WAS READ AT MEETING.

A Programme of Music and Recitations Was Given—Then Followed Speeches by Prominent Plainfielders Present.

There was a happy reunion of the members of the Exempt Firemen's Association, last Monday, when an entertainment, supper and smoker was given for the purpose of bringing together as many of the members as possible. There was a large attendance, many veteran firemen being present for the first time in many months. The rooms presented an attractive appearance. In the centre was arranged several tables lavishly ladened with fruit, cakes, sandwiches and other good things.

Lewis E. Barkalow, president of the association, occupied the chair of honor and extended to all a cordial welcome. A very interesting part of the programme then followed when G. Thorn, secretary, presented a history of the association. The first meeting was held March 25, 1887, and July 25, 1887, an organization was completed with sixty charter members. Of this number thirty-five are still living and in good standing. The growth of the association was related.

Mr. Thorn read a letter from George B. Cortelyou, secretary to President Roosevelt, in which the latter declined with thanks the kind invitation to be present at the entertainment. The letter is as follows:

White House,
December 30, 1901.

My Dear Sir: The President requests me to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 26th inst. and to express his regret that owing to the pressure of his official duties he is precluded from accepting many of the kind invitations which come to him.

Thanking you in the President's behalf for your thoughtfulness and courtesy, believe me

Very truly yours,
Geo. B. Cortelyou,
Secretary to the President.

L. E. Barkalow,
98 Lincoln place.

B. A. Mumford, an old member of the association, presented to the members an old gong. This was made in 1870 by D. W. Littell and was used for many years on the old hook and ladder truck. The gong was received with the hearty thanks of all.

Then followed a programme of music and speeches. The first was a selection by an orchestra composed of Vincent Sokol, organist; Martin A. Korff, violinist; G. T. Dunham, trombone; and Morris Sorenson, cornet. The next number was phonographic selections by R. A. Mumford, after which Joseph Langhead entertained with selections on his banjo.

The committee in charge then served refreshments, while the orchestra discoursed popular selections. After the inner man was well taken care of, several speeches were made. The first speaker was Senator Charles A. Reed. He reviewed the old days when he used to run to fires in old Somerset and he said that he always felt at home among the firemen.

The Senator made reference to the matter of exemption and took occasion to say that the tendency of the legislators now is to make taxation as equal as possible. He said that he would be pleased if, at any time, he could use his influence for such legislation as would be a benefit to the exempt firemen.

Continuing, he said, that some localities there was a tendency among some people to join town organizations simply for the exemptions that would follow, and in the general movement toward abolishing such laws as tended to encourage this, he was not so sure but what a change would be beneficial and the Senator did not single out especially firemen in this class, but referred to other bodies as well, as coming under that head. He took particular pains to impress upon all that to the firemen who honestly won his exemption such deductions are fair and should be granted. The Senator's remarks were heartily applauded, as also those of James E. Martine, who followed.

Mr. Martine praised in no mean words the very high efficiency of the local fire department and the Exempt Firemen's Association. To the department he gave all honor for saving the home he now occupies and he referred pleasantly to the good that such gatherings, as that of last evening, do in the way of benefitting all, morally, socially and otherwise.

After an amusing recitation by John Becker, the inimitable John H. Carney was introduced. In his own peculiar way he convulsed all with laughter as he recited in Dutch dialect some touching and amusing selections. His local hits were thoroughly appreciated and one had only to look at him to laugh. The next speaker was Alex. Titsworth, one of the old-timers. He gave the boys a rousing talk on the old days.

President B. Frank Coriell, of the Common Council, was the next speaker. He paid a glowing tribute to the fire department and the old association. He believed that Plainfield's department, all things considered, is second to none in the State, and for this condition he gave Chief Deane great credit. He claimed that if it had not been for him, the city would not have as good a department.

Other speeches were made by F. A. Emmons, W. R. Sanbery, representing the Scotch Plains department, J. E. Flannery sang a ballad and Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan recited two very amusing poems.

Those having the entertainment and supper in charge consisted of President Barkalow and William A. Woodruff, Eugene M. Laing, Frazee Putnam, Frank Schenk, David S. Dunavan, D. W. Littell and George Clark.

DEATH OF JOS. SYMONS.

Former Plainfielder Passed Away at Brandon, Vt.

Joseph Symons, of Brandon, Vt., died from pneumonia, Thursday afternoon. He formerly resided in Plainfield and is well known here. His brother, Paul Symons, of East Third street, who hastened to the sick bed, arrived after Mr. Symons' death.

He was a prominent man in Brandon, being a member of the city council and also a leading officer in a militia company of that place.

HEAD NOISES CEASE IMMEDIATELY.

F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, SAYS:

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.

About five years ago my right ear began to sing, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in this ear entirely.

Understanding treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the most eminent ear specialist of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would continue, and the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.

Then saw your advertisement accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours, A. WERMAN, 1308 Broadway, Baltimore, Md.

NEW COUNCIL BEGINS WORK

B. Frank Coriell Chosen As President and Appointed His Committees.

MAYOR'S MESSAGE READ

Big Batch of Petitions Was Received by the Council—Most of Them Relate to Taxes—Organization Was Perfectly Harmonious—Committees.

After an exchange of New Year greetings, Plainfield's Common Council for 1902 assembled January 1 for the first time. At this time an organization was effected and a good start in this year's business begun. All of the members were present except Mr. Mellick. These included B. Frank Coriell, Frank DeW. Randolph, Edward E. Pray, Leslie M. Daniel, Jan vanHerwerden, Ralph I. Tolles, James F. Buckle, William L. Glosk, Robert L. Lee and Clarence L. Murphy.

The meeting was called to order by City Clerk James T. MacMurray. After the roll call he asked the members who they would have for president. Councilman Lee announced the name of Councilman Coriell and by a unanimous vote he was chosen for the position. Councilmen Pray and Murphy escorted the new president to the chair. Then followed the re-election of W. V. Mundy as janitor.

Mr. Lee moved that the rules of order for 1901 be adopted for 1902. He then gave notice that he would, at the next meeting, move that the rules of order be adopted as the by-laws of the Council for the coming year.

President Coriell at this time announced his committees for the year, and in doing so, said that so far as possible he had tried not to disturb the committees very much. He said that owing to the fact that Mr. vanHerwerden would be in Philadelphia a great deal this year, where he will be engaged in business, he had given the chairmanship of the finance committee to another member.

The committees, as announced are as follows:

Next in order was the reception of the annual message of Mayor O. L. Jenkins. This will be found in full in another part of the paper. After its reading copies of it were ordered printed for the members of the Council.

In the way of petitions the new members cannot complain. The first meeting brought to light a large batch. The one referring to municipal water works was referred to the committee now having the renewal of the water contract in charge. Among the petitions were a number complaining about being assessed for dogs which they do not own. J. A. Cullinane, of Prescott place, was one of these. J. A. Layton objected to a personal tax of $200 for 1900, also a poll and dog tax. He never owned a dog and as a soldier claimed exemption.

Nelson and Wm. N. Runyon, counsel for F. C. Langhorne, asked the Council to return $13.49, which had been paid twice as personal tax in 1897. The same counsel representing Mrs. Sprague, of Putnam avenue, claimed that most feet of property then was taxed had been removed, and a proper settlement was asked. J. A. Harkness asked to be relieved of a $300 personal tax, which he claimed he does not owe. P. Guinee was another complainant against a dog tax, claiming he does not own one. W. T. Banks asked to have $11.60 returned to him. This amount in tax he paid in error, he claimed. Harry C. Bush asked for exemption from a dog tax, claiming he never owned a dog.

E. D. Finch asked the Council to return to him fifty feet of property in the West End which was sold under the Martin Act in error in 1898. H. J. Martin asked for exemption from personal tax assessed in 1898, claiming that while doing business at 153 Park avenue, he was only acting as an agent. Again Nelson and Wm. N. Runyon, acting as counsel for John Christian, of Woodland avenue, asked that $25 paid in 1899 as tax and again paid last month, be returned to him.

A letter to A. J. Garrett, street commissioner, from Geo. Hoff, was read. This complained that the Gleason-Kiely Contracting Company had failed to pay him $64.20 which he claimed was owing him. He asked that the Council withhold the company's pay until this bill was settled. All of these petitions were referred to the proper committees.

The bonds of Constable Amos Moffett and Peter V. Weaver were received and referred to the corporation counsel for examination as to form. The communication from E. L. Finch and others asking for another location for the new hospital was referred back to the committee on streets. J. B. Coward, in a letter, informed the Council that if it intended to continue to occupy his offices, he would next spring thoroughly repair the same and put them in first class condition. This was referred to the finance committee.

Mr. Daniel offered a resolution appointing The Daily Press and News as the official papers of the city. Another resolution by the same member provided for the drawing of $2,000 for the street work until such time as the regular appropriations are made.

Mr. vanHerwerden called up the ordinance providing for the exemption of the books of the collector of taxes, but as Mr. Buckle believed that the ordinance should also cover the city treasurer and that the examination should be made every month or at least every six months instead of every three years, the ordinance was referred to the finance committee for further consideration.

Mr. Tolles moved that when Council adjourn it be to meet Monday evening, January 13, and after Mr. Lee called the clerk's attention to the absence of an 1903 calendar, and President Coriell instructed Mr. Wean to procure one for the Council rooms, the meeting adjourned.

Programme, Composed Mostly of Gymnastic Stunts, Was Given at the Clubhouse.

The members of the Boy's Club saw the old year out and the new year in and incidently gave their friends a meritorious entertainment. It was the first gymnastic exhibition which the boys have given in some time and it was enjoyed by a large number.

The programme was rendered under the direction of Superintendent Olaf Sangstad and was as follows: March, exercise and drill, entire club; log punching, Dominick Maldowney; wrestling, Thomas Kelley and Gabrielle Paoli; parallel bars, Bertram Hansen, Clarence Pope and Alex. Boyd; character song, Clarence Pope and Frank Shepherd; chin balancing, Alex. Boyd; Buck and wing dancing, Edward Condit; swinging trapeze, Clarence Pope.; swinging rings, Alex. Boyd; trapeze balancing, Frank Shepherd; combination act, Clarence Pope, William Hall and Bertram Hansen; character song, William Hickey, James Buckley and Joseph McGanley; slack wire, Frank Shepherd. Many of the numbers were very well executed and were longly applauded.

At the conclusion of the exhibition, the audience was dismissed and the members of the club gathered around the open fire place and were served with refreshments. In this manner the time was spent until the tolling bells announced the arrival of the new year.

THOMAS B. MINAHAN.

New President of the Federated Roman Catholic Societies of the United States.

Thomas B. Minahan, of Columbus, O., who has just been elected president of the American Federation of Catholic Societies at the Cincinnati convention, has won a national reputation as a worker in the field of organized lay effort in the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Minahan is a philanthropist who believes that the best results in social progress can be brought about by using the strength found associated in the churches in such manner as to effect practical social reform. He is especially interested in the temperance movement, and last summer originated the unique plan of pledging men not to abstain from drink, but to abstain from "treating" or buying stimulants for others. This idea has taken deep root, and although not officially indorsed by the various Catholic societies, is still said to have become very popular since he first made the suggestion.

It is believed by members of the executive board that the federation will have over 1,000,000 members in its affiliating organizations before the national convention is held in Chicago next July.

Choosing of Chicago as the next convention place is for the purpose of getting the Catholic societies of Illinois and the different states of the west and northwest into the federation. Heretofore, in spite of the active part taken in the plan by several western prelates and the delegates sent to the convention at Cincinnati from the different cities of the west and northwest, the movement which is to bind the Catholic societies into a national body has not received the full support it has in the east.

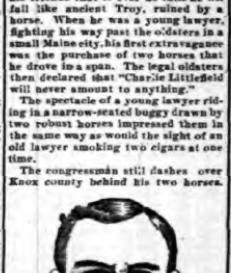
DELIGHTS IN HORSES.

Famous Maine Congressman, Mr. Littlefield, Is Impetuous in His Love for Racehorses.

Congressman Charles E. Littlefield, of Maine, is as impetuous in his love for horseflesh as he is in his treatment of the insular question. He declares to his friends that if ever he falls he will fall like ancient Troy, ruined by a horse. When he was a young lawyer, fighting his way past the oldsters in a small Maine city, his first extravagance was the purchase of two horses that he drove in a span. The legal oldsters then declared that "Charlie Littlefield will never amount to anything."

The spectacle of a young lawyer riding in a narrow-seated buggy drawn by two robust horses impressed them in the same way as would the sight of an old lawyer smoking two cigars at one time.

The congressman still dashes over Knox county behind his two horses.



CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD.
(Maine Congressman Whose Love for Horses Is Famous.)

"When I go out to ride," says he, "I don't want to fool with hills. I want to keep going until the time is up."

This same trait, says the Saturday Evening Post, applies to other activities of the Maine congressman, as his Washington associates can now testify.

Not long ago a local verse writer penned a poem in which the stalwart congressman from the Second Maine district was compared with a trotting horse. "He was held forth as "going without blinders, not afraid of the mare," and the poet enthusiastically declared that he didn't need a check-rein or a bit or curb, and that where you left him there would you find him, for he would stand without hitching.

This is said to be Congressman Littlefield's favorite bit of verse.

Christmas-Tide Celebrated by the Members of Franklin Council of Juniors.

OFFICERS INSTALLED

LAST PART OF EVENING DEVOTED TO THE PROGRAMME.

Visitors Were Present From a Number of Neighboring Councils—Financial Report Presented—The Programme.

The officers-elect of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., were installed Thursday, after which there was an entertainment in celebration of Christmas-tide. The affair was a little late owing to the fact that last week there was too much business. There were delegations present from Wm. G. Holton Council, of Dunellen; Friendship Council, of New Market; Twilight Council, of Scotch Plains, and Benevolent and Somerset Councils, of this city.

During the early part of the evening there was the regular order of business, when Ephraim Compton, financial secretary, presented his report for the past six months. This showed the total receipts to be nearly $200. In the last two weeks the receipts for dues amounted to nearly $100.

After the transaction of business the officers were installed by Past Councilor Harvey R. Thorn. The officers' names were published a week ago and the only addition was that of chaplain, Fred Winn being appointed to that position by the new councilor, Theodore Martin. He also appointed the following committees: Delinquent, William Young, John Bowlby and George Townley; good and welfare, Henry Krimey, Frank Putnam, Harry DeHart, Wesley Thorn. After the installation a handsome badge of the order was presented to Henry Kliner, a retiring officer, by David Bodine.

The rest of the evening was given up to entertainment. Harvey Thorn was master of ceremonies and announced the various numbers. There were banjo, mandolin and vocal selections by Joseph and Walter Randall, piano solos by Andrew Carpenter and S. P. Sandford, a humorous, of New York, entertained the members with funny sayings. He first appeared as a "coon," after which he removed his disguise and continued telling some of the best stories yet heard. Every number on the programme was well received by loud applause.

After the entertainment refreshments were serve by the good and welfare committee and a smoker was enjoyed. It was nearly midnight when the festivities were concluded and all agreed that a most pleasant evening had been spent.

It was decided by the members to offer a prize of $15 to the person bringing in eight or more candidates between January 1 and July 1, of this year.

FRATERNAL TREE.

Mizpah Lodge of Odd Ladies Had Its Festival and Tree.

The annual Christmas tree of Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, U. O. of I. O. L., was held, Thursday, at the home of Mrs. David Bush, of West Second street. Although it was one of the last, it was not the least by any means as it contained a remembrance for every one of the members.

During the evening a musical and literary programme was enjoyed consisting of vocal selections by Mrs. Agnes Randall and Miss Florence Pearson and recitations by Mrs. Lewis Mattox, Mrs. Andrew Cox, Mrs. David Bush, Mrs. Henry Angleman and Miss Try Mattox. Refreshments were served at the close.

The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. David Bush, Mrs. Samuel Terry, Mrs. Henry Angleman and Mrs. Andrew Cox.

On January 27, Mrs. Jones, R. W. L. G., of Boston, accompanied by her staff, will visit Mizpah Lodge and install the recently elected officers.

At a House Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Cutter, of East Second street, Miss May Mulford, Miss Carrie Mulford and William Townsend, of East Fifth street, were members of an old-fashioned house party at the residence of Lieut. H. V. C. Bell, of Brooklyn, on New Year's night. It was a delightful affair and all had a jolly good time.

Heptasophs' Rally.

Arrangements are being made for a monstrous demonstration by the Improved Order Heptasophs at Elizabeth, January 14. Large delegations from all over the State will be present as well as the supreme officers. Deputy Supreme Archon John V. E. Vanderhoef, of this city, has charge of the arrangements.

Augustus Sargeant, of East Second street, is detained from work by illness.

THE CAT CAME BACK.

All the Servants Liked Fussy Because They Could Hold Her Responsible for Cracked China.

A Brooklyn woman recently gave away her pet cat, an Angora of great beauty, although she was much attached to it. But the cat had broken many plates, two cream jugs, a teapot, several teacups, several handsome pieces of bric-a-brac; had drunk cream and milk intended for breakfast on several occasions, and had stolen several sweetbreads when the ice chest was left open. Nevertheless, this destructive cat was a great favorite with the cook, chambermaid and dining-room girl, who won their mistress' heart by almost crying when she sent it away.

"I DUNNO," SAID THE MAID.

Two days after the Angora's departure its mistress found a handsome hand-painted plate on the dining-room table broken in several pieces. She asked the maid about it.

"I dunno," answered the maid, "how it happened, unless puss came back and paid a visit. You know, mum, cats has a way of comin' back."

"Yes, so I understand, Mary, and I think puss will soon be with us again, so that she will not have to make us visits," replied the mistress.

That night she wrote a letter to the friend who had taken the cat, saying:

"Send puss back, for I think I have discovered the cat or cats for whose acts she has been blamed."

Puss was brought back, says the New York Times, and for a wonder the servants don't like her as much as they once did. She is not so welcome in the kitchen as she has reformed. Her mistress furnished the key to her reformation when she told the story to a friend.

"You see," she said, "she has quit doing damage since I told the servants that I would hold them responsible for all the damage she did and would take enough out of their wages to pay for the damage. Since that they have watched her so closely that she has neither broken any dishes, drunk any cream, nor eaten any sweetbreads."

And the owner of the cat smiled at her friend and actually winked.

HORSE CHEWS TOBACCO.

Owner of Alice Maud Admits That He Has Had to Place Cuspidors in the Stable.

A horse that chews tobacco is the remarkable recent acquisition of Benjamin F. Parker, a well-known real estate dealer of Kalamazoo, Mich. Stranger still, the horse is of the feminine persuasion, and her name is Alice Maud. She is a Fleetwood horse and Parker says she can go a mile in 2:30 or better.

Alice Maud was purchased about a month ago from John Weidmayer, of Washington avenue. Parker says he does not know how the young lady got into the habit of chewing tobacco, but she certainly chews it, and likes it.

"All the brands taste alike to Alice," says Parker. "I have not noticed any inclination on the part of the horse to smoke cigarettes as yet. Her taste seems to run simply to chewing. The habit does not seem to have had any bad effect on Alice, as can be perceived by her speed record."

Mr. Parker laughingly admitted that he had been compelled to furnish his stable with cuspidors to accommodate this habit of Alice Maud.

Victim of a High Collar.

High collars were thought to be becoming to Emanuel Daveler, of Sterling, Ill., and therefore he wore them. While out on his bicycle, with a band of linen three inches high adorning his neck, he fell from his wheel and landed in a ditch. The collar cut a deep gash in his throat, exposing the windpipe, but not cutting it. He has determined to abandon high collars.

MERRY WELCOME FOR SOCIETY'S NEW YEAR

In Fantastic Garb the Smart Set Greeted New Year at the Casino.

WAS A GREAT SUCCESS.

TWO ORCHESTRAS AND ELABORATE DECORATIONS AIDED EFFECT.

It Surpassed Any Previous Efforts—Fine Costumes—Some of the Best of Them—Others Who Were Present.

A show of dazzling brilliancy greeted the observer at the Casino at the moment the old year was ushered out and the new one born. A cosmopolitan crowd, representing a multitude of ages, had suddenly halted from a grand march and two orchestras, the one string and the other brass, played 'Auld Lang Syne." A bell tolled twelve strokes and as the last was sounded the figures 1901, in electric effect over the stage, suddenly changed and 1902, instead, shone brihgtly. "There Will be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" was played as the throng proclaimed the birth of the new year.

The affair was the masque ball, looked forward to with eager expectancy by the society folk of this city and the immediate vicinity. It was one of the series of the Casino dances and the committee on arrangements had cleverly planned to make it the major attraction of the season. Society had turned out en masse and, in the strikingly original costumes, had contributed a scene which surely surpassed anything of a like nature given at the Casino for some years at least.

One of the unusual features was the profuse decorations, which of course were in keeping with Yuletide. Great streamers of green were suspended from the centre of the ceiling and caught up about the four sides of the walls, which was also adorned with a multitude of masque faces. Pounds' combination orchestra was a happy arrangement and enhanced the delightfulness of the affair to no mean extent.

It was, indeed, amusing to see a typical circus clown waltzing about the floor with a spiritual looking nun and even more laughable was the appearance of wild eyed Chinaman with a meek, bashful quakeress. Some of the costumes which arrested the attention were: Colonial matron, Mrs. Leimuel W. Serrell; French maid, Miss Elsie Martin; squaw, Mrs. Clifford M. McGee; Spanish woman, Mrs. T. Day; Quakeress, Mrs. R. Blake; nun, Mrs. Frederick W. Yates; winter, Mrs. L. G. Timpson; trained nurse, Mrs. George P. Mellick; music, Miss Hammond; shepherd, Miss Ida Borsum; Colonial matron, Mrs. Lewis E. Waring; summer girl, Mrs. J. B. Drayton; queen of hearts, Miss Harriet Goddard; postal girl, Miss Long; Venetian girl, Miss Waring; stars and stripes, Mrs. R. H. Depew; Quakeress, Mrs. E. T. Barrows; Indian, Mrs. E. T. VanBuren; French maids, Miss Aynne McCready and Miss May Evans; English peasant, L. G. Timpson; Chinese mandarin, Elliot T. Barrows; sailor, Dr. Charles C. Davis; Chinaman, A. L. Otterson; English hussar, Harvey Fisk; French clown, Harry Munger; grand croix, Legion d'Honneur, Evarts Tracy; Mestopheles, H. Reeve Stockton; soldier, Theodore Wilson; farmer, R. Henry Depew; Chinaman, Frederic W. Goddard; policeman, Henry Finch; monk, George P. Mellick; Chinaman, Dr. Thomas Davis; Uncle Sam, W. R. Cock; Zulu warrior, Raymond A. McGee; clown, Augustus R. Fisk; disguised as a student, Charles W. Fisk; clown, Marion R. Ackerman; Indian, Howard Huntington; Chinaman of the sixteenth century, L. W. Serrell.

Leading the grand march were Mr. and Mrs. Lewis G. Timpson. Then R. VanBoskerck with Mrs. Edward M. VanBuren were second and they were followed by Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Barrows. The bell used to toll the midnight hour was brought from the old mill at Feltville, now Glenside Park, which is the property of Marion S. Ackerman. The caterer for the affair was Steward Ivamy.

Among the others seen gliding about the floor were the Misses Whiton, Kellogg, Conklin, Hammond, Cock, Otterson, Johnson, Davis, Rushmore, Thayer, Stiger, Monson, Davis, Agnes Mulford, Helen F. Bushnell, Ida C. Borsum, Rosabel Schroeder, A. Marianne, Elsie Burke, Maud VanBoskerck, Florence L. Huntington, Adelaide Elsberg, Edith Clapp, Mary B. Barrows, Frederick W. Yates, Laurens H. VanBuren, George P. Mellick and William R. Cock, and on the latter were Lewis G. Timpson, Lewis E. Waring, Thomas R. VanBoskerck, H. Reeve Stockton and Butherford M. Shepard.

WEDDED ON NEW YEAR'S DAY

MARRIAGE OF MISS ELLA TRIMMER AND WILLIAM WYMAN.

Took Place at the Home of the Bride's Parents Wednesday Evening.

The wedding of Miss Ella Taylor Trimmer and William Wyman, two popular young people of this city, took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Trimmer, the bride's parents, of West Front street, last Wednesday. Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck officiated and the ceremony was performed in the presence of sixty relatives and friends.

The parlor, where the nuptial event took place, was tastefully adorned with palms and potted plants. The young couple stood beneath a handsomely trimmed arch. Miss Minnie Trimmer, a sister of the bride, was the maid of honor. Henry Wyman, the groom's brother, acted as best man.

After the ceremony a wedding supper was served and Mr. and Mrs. Wyman received the hearty congratulations of their friends. They left on the 9:40 o'clock train for New York. After a honeymoon of two weeks duration at Monticello, N. Y., they will take up their residence temporarily at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride was gowned in white Swiss trimmed with lace and carried white carnations and the maid of honor wore white mulle and carried pink carnations.

Guests were present from New York, Elizabeth, Somerville, Readington and North Branch. The gifts to the bride were quite numerous and some were very elaborate.

CARD PARTY.

Marked the Beginning of the New Year at the Clubhouse of the Park Club.

The New Year was opened most auspiciously at the Park Club by the members and their friends, when a progressive euchre was given in the clubhouse in the evening. It was the most successful affairs ever given there, fully one hundred people being present. Everyone attending brought a prize valued at about twenty-five cents, and at the conclusion of the games those winning the most number, were given first choice.

The games were finished about 11 o'clock. Refreshments were then served, after which S. St. John McCutchen announced the prize winners. Among those winning the most number of games, which was eight, were Miss DeMaziere, Jan vanHerwerden, Adam Brown and Mrs. Samuel Townsend.

Hit In Eye by Wire.

James DeCamp, of Linden avenue, received a severe cut below the left eye, at Mt. Bethel, New Year's eve. He was tying a horse near a wire fence, when he was struck in the eye by a sharp end of a wire.

MESSAGE OF CITY'S MAYOR

Full Text of His First Formal Communication to New Common Council.

HIS RECOMMENDATIONS.

He is Greatly Pleased With the Present Municipal Conditions, Especially as to the City Finances—Changes in Terms of Office—Other Suggestions.

The following is the full text of the annual message of Mayor O. L. Jenkins presented at the first meeting of the Common Council for 1902, Wednesday evening:

To the honorable Common Council of the city of Plainfield.

Gentlemen:—The fiscal year ending at noon today has been the most prosperous year in the history of the city. When the Common Council of 1901 entered upon the work of that year, there was found a debt of $6,000, representing money borrowed for the general fund in anticipation of the collection of taxes. At the beginning of the year before, the amount previously borrowed, and then unpaid, was $35,000, and the year before that, $30,500. This Common Council will find the general fund entirely free from all floating debt, and in place of a debt, a balance of $17,657 in cash. The condition of the special funds is entirely satisfactory.

Taxes.

While this admirable condition of the city's finances is highly gratifying, it is important not to lose sight of the fact that the present surplus is in large part due to the success attending the city's efforts in collecting arrears of delinquent real estate taxes under the Martin Act, and that the future increment from that source in our annual revenues will necessarily be less than heretofore, hereby necessitating greater caution to keep liabilities within the limit of appropriations. There still remain large amounts of unpaid poll and personal taxes collectable under the statute put in force by this city during the last year under warrants issued by the collector and enforceable by seizure and sale of the personal property of delinquents, or in default of such property, by imprisonment of the delinquent. Directly and indirectly, it is believed that an amount of not less than ten thousand dollars has in this way been realized through the efforts of the collector during the last year. This statute should be vigorously enforced.

Of the twenty years arrearages of real estate taxes, re-adjusted by the Martin Act Commissioners, the city has collected all but $13,000 and for these uncollected taxes, the city holds certificates of sale. These certificates entitle the city to take possession and collect the rents from the property in question, and with that end in view notices have already been served. The city is also entitled to deeds in fee simple for all the property subject to payment of re-adjusted taxes, and I recommend that the Common Council direct the collector to give notice that deeds will be executed and delivered to the city for all such properties on which the re-adjusted taxes shall remain unpaid on the first day of February next.

School Taxes.

The embarrassment which has arisen in consequence of the declaration by the Court of Errors and Appeals that the School Law Revision of 1900 is unconstitutional, has happily been avoided in this city by reason of the wise measures adopted by the joint action of the Board of Education and the Common Council. Until the court shall have decided the application for the re-hearing of the cases in which the opinion in question was rendered, or the Legislature shall have taken action in the premises, it is necessary to deal with the delicate situation with the utmost prudence. So far as moneys are needed for the current expenses of the schools, there would appear to be no reason why school taxes should not be ordered, assessed and collected during the present year on the same plan which was adopted in 1900 and 1901.

Sewerage.

The city has been fortunate in having the assistance of thoroughly competent men, local and otherwise, in dealing with the difficult problem of sewage disposal, and owing to their united efforts, the result of last year's work is confidently believed to be the inauguration, at moderate cost, of a system which represents the latest discoveries and improvements in the matter of sewage disposal which are known to science.

Water Supply.

On the second day of May next, the contract with the Plainfield Water Supply Company, under which the city is now supplied with water for fire protection purposes, will expire. Strenuous efforts have been made on behalf of the city by the appropriate committee of the Common Council and other city officers, to induce the water company to make more favorable terms at the expiration of the present contract, both with respect to the public water supply and the terms under which water shall be supplied to private consumers. The Mayor has been kept advised of the progress of the negotiations, but since they have not been concluded, and those members of the Common Council who have been acting for the city in the premises are members of the present Common Council, it is not deemed wise that the particulars of the demands made by the city, or the reply of the water company should be made known until the committee shall submit its final report to the Common Council.

For the present, it must suffice to say that no effort has been spared to induce the Plainfield Water Supply Company to accede to the reasonable demands of the city, and that the city has been fully advised as to its rights and as to the several methods available to enable the city to build or acquire a system of water works of its own.

Fire and Police.

The departments of fire and police have proved themselves highly efficient so that there would seem to be no demand for any important change in either department.

In the police department, a change in the title of the officer now known as "captain" seems desirable in order to give that officer equal rank with the corresponding officer in the police departments of other cities of the State. It is not a matter of vital importance, but experience has shown that greater weight would be given to his official communications addressed to corresponding officers elsewhere, if his titular designation were the usual one of "chief."

I recommend, therefore, that the ordinance and rules and regulations of the department be amended accordingly.

Street Improvements.

A full and detailed report of the committee on streets was submitted to the Common Council on the thirtieth day of December last. For several years past this department of work has been conducted economically and well. I am opposed, however, to the method of providing funds for the improvement of streets by the issue of bond, even though of the most temporary character, and the appointment of commissioners except in those rare instances in which no other method is feasible.

Changes in the Law Governing Elections and Terms of Office.

The Legislature of 1901 enacted a general law concerning elections and the terms of city officials, which repeals all inconsistent provisions of the city charter and city ordinances. The city election for the present year having been held in conjunction with the State election in November last, it is not necessary to allude further to the alteration in the time and manner of holding the election. There are other far reaching changes brought about in this city by the act referred to.

The terms of office of all city officials now holding office (except justices of the peace) are, by the act, extended for the greater part of the year beyond the time for which such officers were elected or appointed, the words of the act being, that the term of every such officer "shall be and hereby is extended from the time when his term would otherwise expire until 12 o'clock noon of the first day of January next succeeding the date at which his term of office would otherwise expire." In this city, the term of elective officers now in office "would otherwise expire" on the first Monday in January, (that is, for this year, January 6) and the term of appointive officers now in office "would otherwise expire" on the first Monday in February. The term of the former are, therefore, extended one year lacking six days, and the terms of the latter are extended nearly eleven months. All these officers will, by force of the statute, continue in office until noon of the first day of January 1903, without further action by the Mayor or Common Council.

It will remain for the Common Council to consider whether the ordinances of the city shall be amended so as to conform to the statute. As it is possible that the next Legislature may, during the early months of the present year, make some further changes in the law, I suggest that the introduction of any ordinance respecting the matter referred to would better be deferred until the Legislature shall have adjourned.

Election for Mayor.

The act as it now reads, would continue my own term of office to the first day of January, 1904, and since I desire to enable the voters of this city to decide for themselves whom they will select to be their mayor from the expiration of the term for which they elected me, I respectfully suggest that your Honorable Body endeavour to have the act amended so as to make it lawful for the city to hold an election for mayor in November next instead of one year later as provided by the present law.

Last Year's Work.

Full reports of the several committees of last year's Common Council and the several administrative officers of the city brought down to the close of the year 1901, and now on file, render it unnecessary at this time to call your attention to any further public matters. That the record of the year 1901 has justified the expectations expressed in my inaugural message, that the high character and prestige so long established for the administration of the public affairs of this city would be maintained, is indeed most manifest. The way is now clear, during the next twelve months, to surpass that record and bring all departments of public work to a higher plan than ever before.

Your obedient servant,

Olin L. Jenkins, Mayor.

AWAITED NEW YEAR IN PRAYERFUL MOOD

Watch Meetings Were Held in Several of the Local Churches.

TRINITY ENDEAVORERS.

THE METHODIST CHURCHES UNITED AT VINCENT CHAPEL.

Another Service Was Held at Grace Episcopal Church—With Prayer and Song the New Year Was Welcomed.

The watch-night service held at Trinity Reformed church Tuesday, Dec. 31, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society was largely attended by Endeavorers from the various societies, as well as the home society. The service was a deeply spiritual one in which all joined heartily. M. Seymour Purdy, of New Brunswick, was in charge of the service.

After a brief song service led by Joseph D. Moon, Mr. Purdy offered prayer and read the Scripture lesson, St. John xix: 13-22. Mr. Moon then sang a solo, accompanied by Miss Randolph on the piano.

Mr. Purdy took occasion to make some remarks of a helpful and interesting nature. He referred to the past year and selected a verse from the Scripture lesson "What I have written I have written," as the basis for his talk. These were the words of Pilate, in reply to a request from the Jews to change the wording of his statement: "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews."

Mr. Purdy spoke of the many lost opportunities during the past year to work for Christ and of the influence lost. Then referring to the new year he offered some very helpful suggestions to the Endeavorers. He urged them to put forth every effort to serve Christ and to live the kind of a life He would like. He impressed upon all the necessity of accepting every opportunity to do good and to lift high the Cross for the cross.

At the conclusion of Mr. Purdy's remarks there was a season of prayer, during which several supplications were offered. This continued while the New Year was ushered in by the ringing of the church bell by Harry Crawford. After an earnest prayer by F. H. Andrews, there was the singing of a hymn, the dismissal with the Mizpah benediction, followed with a hearty exchange of "A Happy New Year" by all present.

The Methodists of the city and borough, comprising the congregations of Grace, Monroe Avenue and the First M. E. churches, united in a service, Tuesday evening, at Vincent chapel. It began at 9:30 with a song service in charge of Rev. G. W. Gardner and was followed by a service lead by Rev. G. W. Smith. He spoke briefly on an appropriate subject.

After a fifteen minute social intermission a love feast was held which continued until 11:55. The old year was watched out with a consecration service at which Rev. G. W. Smith was in charge.

A watch service was held at Grace Episcopal church New Year's eve. The vested choir under the direction of Mrs. William A. Freeman, the organist, rendered some appropriate hymns and Rev. Erskine M. Rodman delivered some timely remarks. When the midnight hour arrived the congregation spent the few moments in meditation and prayer.

PROGRESSIVE GAMES.

The Misses Blimm Gave a New Year's Eve Party to Friends.

The Misses Blimm, of Somerset street, entertained a number of their friends New Year's eve. Progressive games were played.

The first prize for the women was won by Miss Hallie Brown. It was a Renaissance lace collar. Raymond Smith won the first men's prize, a Greek ornament, while the booby prizes were won by Mrs. Maurice McGrath, of New Brunswick, and Arthur Knoll, of Elizabeth. One was a match safe and the other a frame for a picture.

After the games refreshments were served. Then followed dancing until the small hours of the morning.

OPEN HOUSE.

Warren Engine Company Gave an Entertainment and Oyster Supper.

Warren Engine Company held "open house," New Year's eve. There was a good sized crowd present to enjoy the occasion. Two vocalists and a guitar and a mandolin player, calling themselves the Black Diamond Quartette, furnished most of the fun. Before midnight an oyster supper was served. The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Charles Stahl, William Dehele and J. Higgins.

PRETTY YOUNG GIRL

Becomes a Tramp So That She Can Be with Her Husband.

Together They Walked from New York to Alabama in Search of Work—Dressed as a Man She Braved Hardship.

Ethel Wells, or Mrs. Robert Douglass, as she prefers to be known, a pretty young girl, is in jail in Birmingham, Ala., having been caught in the garb of a man. She had come all the way from New York city as a tramp, and her identity was discovered in St. Vincent's hospital, where she had gone to have a foot amputated.

The woman of nerve and adventurous spirit rode on freight trains, left her footprints on the muddy surface of innumerable country roads, counted a few thousand crossties, accepted lifts from kindly disposed drivers of farm wagons, slept on the ground sometimes and sometimes in barns, begged and did odd jobs for what she ate, and reached Birmingham with nothing worse than an abscess on her foot.

She endured all the hardships of hobo life in order to be with her husband. She says that Douglass could not get work at his trade of iron moulder in New York, so he resolved to seek it elsewhere. Her woman's heart rebelled at being left alone and she told him if she must go, she must go. Douglass provided her with an outfit of male attire. The work-hunting journey was begun. At place after place they were met by the crowded industrial conditions that make the unemployed. City after city, town after town, they have turned away from with heavy hearts, till at last they reached Birmingham. They had been tramping since October 20.

There followed the visit to the hospital, the discovery of her sex, and her arrest. Douglass was also hunted up and placed in jail.

The woman is 20 years old, of medium build, weighs not more than 110 pounds, has brightly colored cheeks, a small, pretty mouth and blue-gray eyes. She wore a checked suit of clothes, a black soft shirt, no collar, a crush hat of the slouch variety and No. 6 shoes.

Her voice was gentle, decidedly feminine, and her general appearance that of a well-bred young woman. While being questioned she would often hang her head and fidget and while the city physician, Dr. Charles Wheelan, was *dressing the wound, she shed tears be*cause of the pain.

"We are married," said she, to a New York World reporter, "and I did not want to stay in New York, where life was not as pleasant as I wished. So my husband started out to look for work. He went up in Maine and stayed two weeks. Then he returned to New York, and we started on this way. I could not stay there, though he wanted me to wait until he got a job, and made some money to send for me.

"So he finally bought me this suit of clothes, hat and shoes, and we started out. We have walked, rode freight trains and tramped as hobos all the way, passing through Washington, Baltimore, Richmond, Charleston, Savannah, Atlanta, Macon and Columbus, to say nothing of a number of small, sometimes larger cities. I have never been arrested before, nor even had anyone express a suspicion that I was not a man.

"I assumed the disguise because I could not accompany my husband otherwise, for he had but little money. I was willing to endure all the hardships and would be willing all right now if it was not for this bad foot. We have slept in all kinds of places and had all kinds of things to eat, but we have been together.

"This is the first trouble we have had and it certainly hurts me more than I can say. I was all right as long as I knew people did not know that I really was a woman. Now I cannot look at anyone without feeling ashamed and blushing.

"When they let us out of this little trouble I am going to a hospital and stay until my foot is entirely well. Then we will settle down as man and wife and send home for our trunks and clothes, if my husband can get a position."

Douglass told the same story. He had a dues book and card from local No. 25 of New York of the Iron Moulders' Union of North America. His dues were paid up to the week of October 18. He is anxious to secure a position and thinks he will be able to get one when he is released from custody.

GERMANS SAW OLD YEAR OUT

MERRY FESTIVITIES WERE HELD AT SAENGERBUND HALL.

Gesang and Turn Verein Entertained Members and Friends New Year's Eve.

In true German fashion the Gesang and Turn Verein celebrated the close of the old year and the birth of the new at its headquarters, Saengerbund Hall. Mirth, music and refreshments were the conspicuous features of the affair.

All night long dancing was kept up on the main floor, the music being furnished by Anthony Gash, violin, and Anthony Cooper, piano. During the evening the singing section of the society rendered a number of songs of the Fatherland, with A. Eichborn as leader. Otto Linke rendered a violin solo accompanied by his brother, George Linke. Duets were rendered by Charles Dressell and J. Hoffman.

In a raffling contest, Frank White won a large turkey. A handsome Morris chair was presented to A. Eichborn, the leader of the singing section.

The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Charles Dressell, John Wirth, August Wolff, Charles Meyer, Jr., and William Beiter.

THE COMING YEAR.

"Forgetting those things which are behind—press forward."
May the new year bring to these Days so bright and glad,
That the past has vanished be,
Ne'er to make them sad.
With the thought—"what might have been,"
Let the old year buried lie—
Daily better this.
Ages low the world has lived,
Years have come and gone;
But the mortal without faults
Has not yet been born.
Try to do some deed of love,
Say kind word or smile;
God will bless thee from above,
Watching all the while.
Man will reckon thee a friend,
Brother or kind neighbor;
Then heart and hand to others lend,
Laugh and sing and labor.

DECREASE IN LOSSES DURING LAST YEAR

Fewer Fires and Reduction in Losses to Property by Fire in Plainfield.

THE FIGURES COMPARED

WHAT DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS DECLARE IS STILL NEEDED.

Better Fire Protection at East and West Ends of City—Would be Needed in Case of Emergency—Other Things.

During the past twelve months the losses in this city by fire have been less than in some years previous. In fact, the losses per capita is decreasing proportionally with the increase of conflagrations, although in the last two years there have been more fires than ever before in the history of the city.

A record breaker was scored in 1900 when the losses approximated $40,000, but it should be remembered that this abnormal condition was due to the fact that there were two terrible blazes, one at Cadmus' mill and the other at the Chapot factory. This is the unknown quantity which cannot be reckoned upon and it is apt to make the losses foot up to big round figures at any time. In 1901, the total amount of damage done is estimated at $10,000. For 1902, the report shows that the losses, in toto, amounted to $20,000.

There were thirteen more conflagrations in 1900 than in 1901, the number being ninety-two against seventy-nine.

Here in Plainfield the danger is more from fires where $10,000 is involved than from those in which the damage might be $5,000. The opposite is the rule in many other cities. This is accounted for by the fact that there are many handsome residences luxuriously furnished within the bounds of the city. There are more fires here, as a rule, than in other places of a like size. Generally for a city with a population as large as Plainfield, it is declared, that there are not more than sixty-five fires during a given year.

For the apparatus at hand and the number of men in the service the local department obtains better results than the great majority of cities, where a comparison can be made. The one bad feature to be said to be that the city department has failed to grow in proportion to the increase of population. In the last five years the west end of Plainfield has grown wonderfully and is not, the department officials feel, protected as it should be. Should a big fire occur in that locality it would be necessary for the service at headquarters on East Second street to be called out, thus leaving the centre of the city exposed. This, it is claimed, should never be allowed as there is too much property in the heart of the city to be placed in danger while the entire attention is being paid to some so called suburban locality.

Again at Netherwood there is much valuable property, and this must be covered by the service at headquarters. It is claimed that there should be a fire house there in order that efficient service might be done. Of course the men at headquarters are able to reach the Netherwood district in five minutes, but it is said that a local station there would be much more satisfactory.

The appliances are said to be below what they should be in a city like Plainfield. What is alleged to be needed is more hoses and with them more apparatus to cope with big conflagrations. With these would come more men. In the past the want has not been sorely needed, but it is claimed that no one is able to tell just when such a condition will arise as would demand better service. It is because of this contingency that persons in a position to know declare that the city should see to it that steps are taken to improve the department.

Child Worth Millions.

"My child is worth millions to me," says Mrs. Mary Bird, of Harrisburg, Pa., "yet I would have lost her by croup had I not purchased a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure." One Minute Cough Cure is sure cure for croup, croup and all throat and lung troubles. A absolutely safe cough cure which acts immediately. The youngest child can take it with entire safety. The little ones like the taste and remember how often it helped them. Every family should have a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure handy. At this season especially it may be needed suddenly. L. W. Randolph.

BOY KILLED BY TROLLEY

Little Fritz Wiechers Fell Under Car Wheels and Was Crushed to Death.

WAS KILLED INSTANTLY

In Trying to Avoid Trolley Cars, on West Front Street He Fell in Path of Car—Motorman Held—Police Believe Him Blameless—Mother Prostrated.

The first fatal accident on the local trolley system, since its introduction in this city ten years ago, occurred at the corner of Plainfield avenue and West Front street at 4.55 o'clock Thursday afternoon, when the life of George Frederick Wiechers, familiarly known as Fritz, the oldest son of J. F. Wiechers, of West Seventh street, was crushed out beneath the wheels of car No. 11, east bound. He attempted to pass in front of it on his bicycle when he was thrown to the ground. Before the frantic motorman could reverse his car the fender passed over the lad and he was rolled along by the trucks. A few moments later his little frame was extricated from its resting place but life was extinct. Death was evidently instantaneous.

Fritz, who was a wonderfully bright boy and looked fully three years older than he was, left home Thursday with the intention of coming to town to perform several errands. He rode his wheel, as usual, and took his customary route down Grant avenue to Front street. He reached the latter street just ahead of car No. 11, also bound for town, in charge of Motorman Frederick Seals, of West Fifth street, and Conductor John Hyler, of West Front street. Boy-like he rode just ahead of it and laughingly responded to Seal's warning gong.

Just before he reached Plainfield avenue, car No. 16, west bound, stopped at the crossing and he started to go to the left. As he did so he saw a boy wagon blocking his path. Then he swerved to the right, directly in front of car No. 11 it is supposed that he was his intention to cross to the extreme right but the approaching car rendered it necessary for him to strike the rails at a sharp angle.

Whether his wheel slipped on the rail or was struck from behind by the fender cannot be determined, as on this point witnesses differ. At any rate, he was hurled from the saddle and fell face downward a few feet ahead of the car. The bicycle was uninjured. The fender, the police say, was at least twelve inches above the ground.

Hyler had already rung a full stop for the corner and Seals had shut off the power, consequently the car's momentum was comparatively slight. It all happened so quickly, however, that the boy had disappeared beneath the trucks without a cry before the motorman succeeded in stopping it.

A score of willing hands were almost immediately outstretched to release the body which could plainly be seen pinned down beneath a heavy motor box. The lifeless form was lifted tenderly to the curb and Dr. Boone, who chanced to be passing, was called. It needed but a glance from his experienced eye to see that his services were not required. The lower part of the body was crushed into a shapeless mass and the skull was fractured.

No one recognized the features at the time and Chief Kiely allowed those in the vicinity to look at them in the hope of establishing their identity. Scores scanned the boyish face, crowned with a wealth of golden hair, but all turned away without recognition.

At 7 o'clock the boy's name was known for the first. A little silver pencil, intended for a Christmas present to a friend, was found in the clothing. A card attached bore the name of the sender, Fritz Wiechers, written in a childish scrawl.

Dr. G. W. Endicott, the family physician, was called and on him devolved the task of informing the parents of the sad occurrence. Mrs. Wiechers was the only one at home at the time and she was prostrated by the shock. She had a premonition of some sad news when from a window she first saw Dr. Endicott approaching the house. On several previous occasions, when the boy met with slight accidents, he was the first to tell the mother. She hurried to the door, last night, with a vague fear, and queried, "Well doctor, what's happened to Fritz now?"

Immediately after the accident, Seals and Hyler were taken to police headquarters, where they gave their statements. They were corroborated by Harvey Apgar, of DeKalb avenue, as eye witness. At 10 o'clock, Hyler was released on is own recognizance. Seals was detained without bail and will appear before the county prosecutor sometime today. It is probable no action will be taken against him as the police believe he is blameless.

John F. Wiechers, the dead boy's father, has resided in Plainfield for many years and is well to do. He is a member of the New York Produce Exchange. There is another boy in the family, nine years old.

PROGRESSED FOR COURSES

NOVEL KIND OF A DINNER GIVEN BY YOUNG WOMEN.

Each Course Was Served at a Different House—Eleven in the Party.

What was termed a "progressive party" was given Thursday evening by several young women of the city. The affair was in the nature of a progressive dinner party, the plan being to enjoy a dinner in courses by visiting the homes of several members of the party. The trip was made in a wagonette, and the various courses were awaiting as the young folks arrived at the different homes.

Miss Edith L. Burt chaperoned the party of eleven, who were the Misses Marion Hall, Anna Garrigues, Alice Titus, Lucy Budlong, Edith Thompson, Norma Northrop, Helen Hooley, Louise Saunders, Bessie Flanders, Helen Stevens and Josephine La-Tourette.

The first stop was made at the home of Miss Hall, where oysters were served. Soup was served at the home of Miss Garrigues, while salads were enjoyed with Miss Alice Titus at her home. At the home of Miss Budlong, the turkey was served. The last stopping place was at the home of Miss Northrop, where dessert was served. After completing the dinner the entire party wended its way to the home of Miss Saunders, where for a time the young folks enjoyed a dance.

OLDEST MAP OF PLAINFIELD

FAC-SIMILE PRESENTED TO STREET COMMISSIONER GAVETT.

Shows Plainfield as It Was Thirty Years Ago—The City Pictured.

Engineer F. J. Hubbard recently completed and presented to Street Commissioner Gavett a fac-simile of the oldest known map of Plainfield. The original is in the possession of William M. Stillman and was made in 1832. At that time the population was 760.

The original and its reproduction show that Plainfield at that time boasted of ten streets, or roads. The most important, as it seems to have been pretty well lined with houses of some pretensions (the old style of map drawing being to represent buildings from an exterior view instead of a ground plan as at present), was called the "Main Road through Plainfield." It is still the main road only it is now Front street. Second street and the road to "Brooklyn" now South Plainfield, are also brought out prominently. The former street was the southern border of the village.

Green brook forms the northern border but at first glance bears no resemblance to the tracings of Plainfield's present tin can and waste paper lined stream. Hyde's, Tier's and two other mill ponds formerly between Grove and Washington streets and Girard and Grant avenues, are to be discerned. The one shown near the present Washington avenue bridge, was known some years ago as Wilson's pond. It was filled in and the Perin, Freres glove factory now stands on part of the made ground.

The fac-simile has been faithfully executed and Mr. Gavett takes pleasure in showing it to visitors to his office and comparing it with recently made maps of the Queen City.

WHY SEALS WAS HELD.

City Judge Runyon Wanted a Full Investigation So There Could be no Question as to Blame.

A general misapprehension seems to prevail regarding the action of City Judge Runyon in holding Motorman Seals, whose car killed little Fritz Wiechers, for the Grand Jury.

In holding the man, the Judge did not express his belief in the other's guilt but simply referred the case to a higher authority for investigation. In a case like this where a human life is involved, the Judge deemed that the best interests of the bereaved family and the motorman himself demanded the fullest possible investigation so that the blame might be fixed where it belonged.

An informal examination like that of Friday afternoon could settle nothing definitely and so he preferred that the Grand Jury should take up the case. It was not in his province, according to law, to fix bail in a case like that, but there was no trouble in securing it from the proper authority, Judge Vail, at Elizabeth.

While the subject would be brought to the attention of the Grand Jury anyway, as was stated by Prosecutor Englis, it was the natural preliminary course to hold the man, who has no family or other ties in this neighborhood, under bonds of reasonable amount as long as there remains the least shadow of a doubt as to where the responsibility for the child's death rests. It will now be for the Grand Jury to thoroughly investigate the case and settle, if possible, just who was to blame.

Business in Philadelphia.

Councilman Jan vanHerwerden, of South avenue, will have business interests in Philadelphia this year. He has associated himself with a banking institution of that city, where he will open a new department. This will be under his direction. He will, therefore, be absent from the city more or less of the time.

Convincing proof of the efficacy of Ely's Cream Balm, the greatest of catarrh remedies, is certainly cheap. A generous trial size costs but 10 cts. Full size 50 cts. Sold by druggists everywhere or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

M. After the business of the evening an excellent entertainment was provided under the direction of the social and welfare committee, of which Alfred Lacy is the efficient chairman.

The programme consisted of humorous recitations by Arthur E. White, vocal solos by Alfred Percer, of the Trans-Continental Vandeville Troupe, of Brooklyn. These artists entertained the members for over an hour, giving some of the latest selections.

After the entertainment refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed. During the evening the reports of the officers were presented, showing the council to be in a flourishing condition.

School Dramatics.

Arrangements are being made by the Athletic Association of the Plainfield High School to give a dramatic entertainment in the near future. The object of the affair is to increase the association's funds. The committee appointed in the matter consists of Hervey K. Done, chairman, Miss Bessie Moore, Miss Dorothy Waldo, Harold Normer, Harold Davis and Fred VanAuken.

Modern Dwelling.

A permit has been issued by Building Inspector T. O. Doane in favor of Mrs. Mary B. Walsh, of South avenue. Mrs. Walsh will construct a modern dwelling on the northeast side of McKinley place, near East Second street. Walter Wyckoff will do the mason work, while F. G. Walsh will do the carpentry work.

Mrs. Wittemore.

Mrs. E. M. Wittemore, of "The Door of Hope," New York, will address a meeting to be held the last of this month at Warren chapel under the auspices of the King's Foreign Mission Circle. She is so well known in her religious work that no doubt a large number of people will be pleased to hear her.

Coming Home.

A letter has been received from Corporal Fred W. Bowden, of the Second Cavalry Band, now at Matanzas, Cuba, saying that the band and four troops are about to be transferred from Matanzas to Fort Myer, Virginia. Mr. Bowden, who formerly was employed in The Daily Press office, adds that the boys are all glad that they are soon to return to "God's Country"

Recovered From Injury.

William Hartpence, of West Second street, an employe at the American Engine Works, Bound Brook, has been discharged from Muhlenberg Hospital, where he has been under treatment for a severe injury to his hand. It was crushed while assisting in some work about an engine and at first it was thought he might lose the hand.

Member of Committee.

Mrs. Anna R. Powell, of East Sixth street, is a member of the publication committee of The Philanthropist, a quarterly magazine, devoted to the promotion of social parity.

Doing the Right Thing.

The trouble begins with a tickling in the throat and a nagging little cough. Soreness in the chest follows and the patient wonders if he is going to have an all winter cold. Probably; if he does the wrong thing or nothing. Certainly not if he uses Perry Davis' Painkiller, the staunch old remedy that cures a cold in twenty-four hours. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

NEW SCHOOL BOARD MET AND ORGANIZED

President Probasco Was Re-elected and Appointed His Committees for the Year.

ONLY ROUTINE BUSINESS

NOTHING OF A STARTLING NATURE CAME UP FOR CONSIDERATION.

C. F. Abbott Elected to Fill the Place of Secretary Lounsbury Whose Term Has Expired—F. T. Woodhull the New Member.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education began last Monday, with the organization looking not at all like itself. Two members, Dr. Richards and Mr. Abbott, were absent while a third was a new comer. He was F. T. Woodhull recently elected to succeed Secretary Lounsbury. Mr. Woodhull took an active interest in the proceedings and showed by frequent inquiries that he intends becoming acquainted with his duties at once.

Before settling down to business the board re-organized itself as follows: President, Dr. J. B. Probasco; secretary, Charles F. Abbott. President Probasco afterward announced his committees as follows: Teachers and Abbott; books, stationery and supplies, Richards, Woodhull and Probasco; buildings and repairs, Abbott, Probasco and Lovell; fuel, Woodhull, Lovell and Richards; finance, Lovell, Abbott and Woodhull. This is practically the committees of last year with, of course, the exception of the new member. The remainder of the business transacted was purely of a routine nature. Mr. Lovell assumed the secretary's chair and read the various reports. Tax Collector Smith's report showed a total collection for the month of $2,165.47, including the interest, which had been deposited to the credit of the board. According to the medical inspector's report 135 pupils have been examined during the month. The custodian of school moneys reported the receipt of $50,611.95 while $35,439.14 had been disbursed leaving a balance on hand of $25,154.81.

Superintendent Maxson reported receiving $462 for the winter term of tuition by non-resident pupils. He also reported the receipt of $67.54 from the Junior and Senior classes of the High School and $61 from the pupils of the Irving school, the amounts cleared from entertainments. The money will be added to the library fund of the schools donating.

At a recent meeting of the board a request was received from the Board of Health asking that all pupils in the schools be vaccinated. Superintendent Maxson stated that this matter had been attended to and that in making queries he learned that in the High School 85 per cent. of the pupils were vaccinated, in the grammar schools, 90 per cent. and in the primary and kindergarden grades about 45 per cent. The parents of those unvaccinated had been asked to have the matter attended to.

On motion of Mr. Lovell, it was decided to prepare a definite form of rules governing the actions of the board at all times. This is a matter which has been brought up at odd times for the past two years but which has never been decided upon. In order to have it done at once President Probasco appointed Mr. Lovell and Mr. Richards a committee to prepare the rules.

The president reported that his invitation to Rev. Dr. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, of Morristown, formerly of this city, to deliver the address at the 1902 commencement, had been accepted. The board then adjourned.

Ward Stephens to Play.

Henry Wolfsohn, who is Josef Hofmann's manager, has engaged for his next concert to be given at the Waldorf-Astoria, Jan. 24, Mrs. W. Blake Upperman, Mrs. Magdalene Perry-Mac Bride, and Ward Stephens. The concerts are largely patronized and are considered as among the best musical events of the season.

Frame Addition to Store.

Building Inspector T. O. Doane has granted a permit to John Storm, of 218 Liberty street, for the erection of a frame addition to his butcher shop. The new building will be but one story in height and will be located at the rear of the present structure. N. C. Pennington will do the work.

Repeat Christmas Cantata.

It has been decided to repeat the Christmas cantata given at the First Presbyterian church Tuesday evening, Jan. 14. The music was enjoyed so much that many requests have been received for its repetition.

Social by Men.

The men of the Seventh-Day Baptist church are planning to give a social in the church sometime this month.

SENATOR REED FOR TREASURER

Somerset County's Senator Has Announced His Candidacy for the Treasurer.

HAS STRONG SUPPORT.

Announcement Was Made at Trenton Tuesday—Has Support Pledged in Both Senate and House—Considered a Strong Candidate.

"Yes," said State Senator Charles A. Reed, to a newspaper reporter yesterday, "I am a candidate for State Treasurer." His candidacy was first announced at Trenton, Tuesday, after a conference with some of the prominent Republicans of the State. Already most of the Republican members of the Senate are pledged to support him and many of the Republican Assemblymen have declared in his favor.

SENATOR CHARLES A. REED.

Former Mayor Frank O. Briggs, of Trenton, was appointed by Governor Voorhees to fill the place until the Legislature shall elect a new one for the full term of three years. While Mr. Briggs has support in the city of Trenton, the Mercer county organization has not favored his candidacy and will not support him for the full term as State Treasurer.

It is understood that the Mercer county delegation will be strongly in favor of Senator Reed's candidacy. Other friends in both north and south Jersey have signified their intention of backing Mr. Reed so that he is today the strongest candidate in the field despite the fact that his boom was only publicly launched Tuesday.

Senator Reed's name has, in the past, been mentioned for a number of prominent places but at no time by his sanction. He was regarded as a gubernatorial or perhaps a Congressional possibility and has been considered as available timber for a vice chancellorship. This will be his seventh year in the State Legislature. He was elected to the Assembly by Somerset county for one year and then went into the State Senate where he is now closing his second term. During the six years he has been in the Legislature, he has been president and Republican leader in the Senate and has held positions of importance on both Assembly and Senate committees.

Society Wedding.

Considerable interest is manifested in the approaching marriage of Miss Sue Milne, daughter of Mrs. Isabel Milne, of Willow avenue, to Edward T. Wilson, of Crescent avenue. Both Miss Milne and Mr. Wilson are well-known society people in the city and borough. The event will be celebrated in the First Baptist church Tuesday, February 4.

Results of Revival.

Since the commencement of the evangelistic services at Mt. Olive Baptist church last week forty-one persons have come forward. These services are held every evening and are well attended by the colored citizens. It is the intention of those in charge to continue the services during the remainder of the month.

INSTALLATION HELD AT WINFIELD SCOTT POST

Joint Ceremonies Held Publicly With the Woman's Relief Corps Tuesday Night.

VERY PLEASANT AFFAIR

LIST OF OFFICERS INSTALLED BY BOTH OF THESE ORGANIZATIONS.

Good Attendance of Members at the Meeting Last Evening—Meeting Was Followed by an Entertaining Programme.

The installation of the officers-elect of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. and the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, took place on Tuesday. While the affair was public there were not many outsiders present, the room being well filled with the members of the two organizations. As usual, the installation was attended with many pleasant features.

The officers of the Post were installed first by Past Senior Vice Department Commander Oscar F. Gifford, of Lincoln Post, No. 11, of Newark. The officers are as follows: Commander, Dr. J. F. The officers of the corps were installed by Past Commander James Atwood, of Trenton, as follow: President, Mrs. V. W. Nash; senior vice-president, Mrs. William B. Matton; junior vice-president, Mrs. Andrew Cox; treasurer, Mrs. Caspar Bolsterli; chaplain, Mrs. Anesta Corwin; conductor, Mrs. M. C. The installing officer was ably assisted by Mrs. Sadie Baptie, who acted as conductor.

After the installation there were short speeches by the installing officers and other members of the organizations. A feature was a delightful programme of music rendered by Martin A. Korff's orchestra of seven pieces. A number of popular selections were given interspersing the remarks by the veterans.

RELIC HUNTERS HERE.

Preparations Being Made to Dispose of Col. Scott's Collection.

During the past few days a number of prominent relic hunters from various parts of the country have been inspecting the collection owned by the late Col. Scott. As yet no arrangements have been effected for a sale of the articles. Several things have been sold, but it is the purpose of H. F. Scott to sell the Indian collection without breaking it in any way. Some persons want to make selections, but Mr. Scott will not sell that way if it can be helped.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA IS GIVEN OVER AGAIN

Successful Production of the Cantata "All Hail" at First Presbyterian Church.

GIVEN LAST TUESDAY

PRETTY SINGING OF CATCHY SONGS BY YOUNG PEOPLE IN COSTUME.

A Complete List of Those Who Participated in the Affair—Committees in Charge of the Different Parts.

In the repetition of the Christmas cantata "All Hail" which was given at the First Presbyterian church, last Tuesday, nothing was lost, in fact the cantata was enjoyed more, if that is possible, than when first given. The church was completely filled with an appreciative audience, every seat being occupied and many being obliged to stand.

The catchy music, the bright costumes, the happy faces of the participants and the fine singing, both solo and chorus, all combined to give an evening of exceptional pleasure. Every one of the parts were well taken and the full orchestra under the direction of Martin A. Korff, added much to the production.

The cast of characters and those assisting in the chorus were as follows: "Josie," Miss Helen George; "Lou," Miss Bertha Englehart; "Tom," Harold Lackey; "Joe," Howard George; "Dora," Miss Mildred Ulrich; "Agnes," Miss Ethel Boice; "Mattie," Miss Freda Grey; "Emily," Miss Leah Hammond; "Mrs. S. FOUND GUILTY OF ASSAULT

Salvatore and Lenonardo Verlardo Were Tried at Somerville Tuesday.

CHARGE OF ASSAULT.

Complainant Was Gietano Dantz, Who is Now on Trial for the Same Offense—Trouble Happened on Watchung Avenue, North Plainfield.

Somerville, Jan. 15—The indictment against Salvatore and Leonardo Verlardo for atrocious assault and battery on Gietano Dantz, who is a brother-in-law of the Velardos, occupied the attention of Judge Bekenck all of yesterday in the criminal courts here. Late in the afternoon the lawyers made their pleas. This morning, after court had convened, the Judge charged the jury, which went out at 11 o'clock.

All the parties are from North Plainfield and the case and the one to follow are both the result of a bitter quarrel.

Salvatore Valardo was employed by Charles M. Meeker, a contractor in North Plainfield, and was the foreman of a gang of Italian workmen. Leonardo Velardo was also employed by Meeker. A number of the men of the gang boarded at the home of Dantz. December 6 Salvatore and Leonardo met Dantz in a saloon in Plainfield. While there Dantz claimed that Salvatore had discharged a lot of men that boarded at this house. Dantz also contended that Salvatore owed him some money and demanded it.

When they left the saloon to go to their respective homes the brothers went down the east side of Watchung avenue and Dantz went on the west side with a friend. All were practically intoxicated. As they were walking down the street they talked back and forward to each other in Italian. When on the Somerset county side of the bridge Dantz crossed the street to where the Velardos were. They claimed he had an open knife in his hand.

After reaching the point where the Velardos were a fight ensued. Dantz claimed they had knifed him over to pay the money which he said they owed him. He said they attacked him, stabbing him in the side and beating him on the head with a stone.

It was admitted on the part of the defense that he was hit on the head with a stone, but the stabbing was denied.

The Velardos claim he attacked one of them with a stiletto, cutting through three coats, and what they did was only in self defense. They denied inviting him across the street.

Walter L. Hetfield, of Plainfield, was counsel for the defense and Prosecutor Griggs appeared for the State.

After the jury had gone out this morning the case of Gietano Dantz, charged with atrocious assault and battery on Salvatore Velardo was taken up. It is the result of the same scrap. John A. Frech, of this place, is defending Dantz.

After being out for an hour the jury in the case of the Verlardos came in with a verdict that both were guilty of simple assault.

HOPE CHAPEL WILL GIVE MINSTREL SHOW

The Young Men's Association Made Plans for It at Last Tuesday's Meeting.

TO RAISE NEEDED FUNDS

ARTHUR DENTON TEMPORARILY ENGAGED AS PHYSICAL DIRECTOR.

Other Business of Importance Was Discussed at the Meeting—Several Committees Were Also Appointed.

Preliminary arrangements were made at a business meeting of the Young Men's Association, of Hope chapel, Tuesday, for an entertainment to be given under its auspices Tuesday evening, March 11. The idea of the affair is to raise $150, pledged as an annual contribution by the association to the trustees of the Crescent Avenue church. This amount will be due in several months and these steps are taken as a means of discharging the obligation.

The first part of the entertainment will consist of a minstrel show and the other part of a one act play. The talent will be taken from the organization solely. City Judge William N. Runyon, the president of the organization, will act as instructor. James Murray, John H. Case and Gus Fiering, Jr., were appointed as a committee to perfect details. Practices will be held weekly, commencing Saturday night.

The report of the secretary showed that there are seventy-seven members in the association at present. A number of bills outstanding were ordered paid and when this is done there will be a balance in the treasury. Charles Smith, John H. Case and George McComb were named as a committee to stir up delinquent members with a view of increasing the funds of the organization. Several matters in the nature of routine business were transacted before adjournment.

Preceding the meeting Arthur Denton, who has been engaged, temporarily at least, as a physical instructor for the association, put the newly-formed class through a gymnastic exercise. There are fourteen young men in the class and this number will be increased it is believed at the next meeting of the class Friday evening. Mr. Denton will meet the boys regularly in the gymnasium twice a week for a period of one month.

NEARLY A CENTURY.

Mrs. Emily C. Connett Died at Her Home Tuesday in Her Ninety-Fifth Year.

In the death of Mrs. Emily C. Connett, widow of the late Benjamin Connett, which occurred yesterday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lambert, of Manning avenue, the borough has lost one of its oldest residents.

Mrs. Connett was in her ninety-fifth year, but despite her advanced age she was possessed of all her faculties and enjoyed excellent health to within a few days before her demise. It was then a simple complaint but the weight of years told.

She was the daughter of Samuel and Mary Dobbler, who formerly lived near Scotch Plains, where she was born in 1807. She became a member of the Scotch Plains Baptist church and sang in the choir when she was fifteen years old. On her marriage she moved to Alton where she always lived until a few years ago when she came to this city.

She was the mother of ten children but three of whom are living. They are Mrs. DeCamp, Mrs. Mary Stevens, of this city, and Frasee Connett, of Alton.

The funeral services will be held from her late residence, 94 Manning avenue, this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be made at Hillside.

Mr. Stephens' Organ Recital.

Ward Stephens, organist at the Crescent Avenue church, has been obliged to postpone his free recital until Saturday evening, January 25. As this may be the last opportunity afforded Plainfielders for some time of hearing Mr. Stephens render his choice selections, it is hoped the attendance will be large.

Car Collided With Wagon.

Shortly after 6 o'clock Monday evening a trolley car on the West Fourth street line collided with Howard D. Allen's delivery wagon, at the corner of West Fourth and New streets. The fender of the car was badly smashed.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR FROM BOERS' POINT

Former Field Cornet Hercules D. Viljoen Addressed Audience at Washington Hall.

WAS MUCH ENTHUSIASM

DECLARED THAT ENGLAND WILL NEVER WIN IN THE FIGHT.

Pointed Out Gold as the Original Cause of the Whole Trouble—Stereopticon Views of the Land of the Boers.

Hercules D. Viljoen, formerly field cornet of the Free State army, lectured Tuesday night in behalf of the Boer cause before an audience which completely filled Washington Hall. From the frequent applause accorded the speaker it was evident a Boer spirit was prevalent.

Mr. Viljoen was introduced by Cornelius vanHerwerden, who with James E. Martine, Frank M. Bacon, Robert Dahn and S. B. Wheeler, occupied seats on the platform. He at once entered upon his subject with much force and earnestness. The difficulties and disputes which the Transvaal has had with England every time gold or diamonds were discovered in the Free State borders since

HERCULES D. VILJOEN.

1854, up to the present contention, were thoroughly reviewed. Mr. Viljoen said that, leaving all else aside, the avarice of the English for the gold found in south Africa was the direct cause of the struggle now going on.

He pictured the Jameson raid as the outcome of jealousy on the part of Cecil Rhodes and his anxiety to annex the Transvaal to Rhodesia. Rhodes, he said, had declared the two spots on the African map, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State would be conquered or be painted red. "They have been painted red," said Mr. Viljoen, "but they are black spots on England's flag."

England, he said, commenced the war with the intention of conquering the Boers inside of six months at least. It has now lasted two years and four months and instead of approaching the close is going on with renewed fervor on the part of the south Africans. England now only controls the coast lines and the railroads and it is daily becoming a harder problem to hold these. The army is steadily becoming depleted while there are no recruits to fill up the ranks.

On the other hand, Mr. Viljoen said, the Boer army is steadily increasing, being daily added to by new men from Cape Colony. It now numbers 23,000 men whom the British are feeding, supplying with ammunition and furnishing money. This is done through the capture of British trains, carrying munitions for the invading army.

In summing up the reasons why England could not conquer the republics, Mr. Viljoen said her coffers have already been drained, she has made heavy loans in order to carry the struggle on and yet the Boers are firmly intrenched as ever and willing to fight three years more if necessary.

The saddest part of the whole war, the speaker declared, was the cruel treatment the Boer women and children suffered at the hands of the British soldiers. Their homes have been burned over them and driven to the open veldt without protection, they have suffered starvation and exposure. The only course left to them is the British camps and these they shun owing to the unspeakable indignities offered them. The martial law of the few coast cities the English control, he said, was almost as cruel and his own wife is penned up in one of them and being subjected to all manner of ill treatment.

LEGISLATURE IN SESSION

Both Houses Were Convened at Trenton Tuesday Afternoon at 3 o'Clock.

OFFICERS WERE CHOSEN

After the Receipt of the Governor's Message and the Appointment of Committees—Talk Regarding the Senatorial Election.

Trenton, Jan. 15—The one hundred and twenty-sixth session of the New Jersey Legislature was opened yesterday afternoon, at 3 o'clock. Bradley was nominated for speaker of the Assembly by Horner, of Burlington, the majority leader, and Tennant, the minority leader, nominated Dennis, of Hudson.

The officers of the House, selected in accordance with the Republican caucus, are:

Speaker, William J. Bradley, Camden; clerk, James Parker, of Passaic; supervisor of bills, George A. Grover, of Essex; sergeant-at-arms, Frank Tantum, of Monmouth; bill clerk, George P. Powell, of Essex.

The speaker announced that he had named Upton Jeffries, as his private secretary, and Charles R. Bacon, as assistant private secretary. Both are Camden newspaper men.

In the Senate the work of organization began at the same time. Mr. Carter, of Essex, the majority leader, was sworn in by Secretary Edge and, in turn, swore in the other senators. The caucus list of officers, which are as follows, was adopted:

President, C. Asa Francis, of Monmouth; secretary, Walter E. Edge, of Atlantic; supervisor of bills, Jesse R. Salmon, of Essex; sergeant-at-arms, John A. Garwood, of Cumberland.

Concurrent resolutions were adopted by both houses calling for the selection of a joint committee to make arrangements for the inauguration of Governor-elect Murphy on Tuesday.

In the appointment of committees the Union and Somerset county representatives fared fairly well. Senator Cross, of Union, is chairman of the committee on elections, municipal corporations, and public buildings and grounds. He is also a member of the committees on appropriations, public health and sinking fund.

Senator Reed, of Somerset county, is chairman of the committees on boroughs and townships and on corporations, and he is a member of the committees on judiciary, revision of the laws, and State library.

Assemblyman Miller, of Union, is a member of the committees on appropriations, elections, game and fisheries, and riparian rights, and he is also a member of the house joint committees on Reform School for Boys, School for Deaf Mutes and Soldiers' Home.

Assemblyman Hall, of Union, is a member of the committees on bill revision, labor and industries, and public health. He is also a member of the house joint committee on public buildings and grounds. Assemblyman Newcorn is a member of the committees on boroughs and borough commissions and revision of laws. He is also a member of the house joint committee on Industrial School for Girls.

Assemblyman Hoagland, of Somerset, is chairman of the committee on public health and is a members of the committees on agriculture, and unfinished business. He is also a member of the house joint committee on sinking fund.

The fight for the vacant seat in the United States Senate is being waged fiercely. Dryden's supporters are making big claims, but Republicans of prominence claim that the man entitled to be feated is the contestee in Former Senator Edward C. Stokes, of Cumberland. It is said that north Jersey in the event of not landing Griggs or Dryden would throw its strength to Stokes, in preference to Baird.

Addressed True Reformers.

Rev. E. E. Jackson, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, delivered an address at the annual meeting of the True Reformers, a beneficial organization, in New York. The meeting was held in the Wendell Phillips hall in that city.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For Week Beginning Jan. 28. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic—Caleb closing a bad thing.—Eph. xv, 4-11.

Caleb was the son of Jephunneh. Nothing is known of his early history. That he was a foreigner and a proselyte to Judaism is altogether probable, as he is called a Kenezite. He was one of the twelve men sent to spy out the land of Canaan when the Israelites first came to its borders. He and Joshua were the only ones of the twelve who reported in favor of entering the land, and they stood alone of those who left Egypt were permitted to enter the promised land. Once entered, the new land had to be conquered. Caleb asked Joshua for that portion of the land which the spies had visited and which Moses had promised him. It was a most difficult position to take. His request was granted, and he conquered it and possessed it.

The task that Caleb chose in the conquest of the land of Canaan was a most difficult one. It was not only a place of ease and of luxury, but those a hard thing. Hebron was naturally fortified. It was a mountainous country. It was also artificially defended. "The cities were great and fenced." The inhabitants were called Anakim (long necked). They were so large in stature that they were called giants. They were also warlike in disposition and courageous in action. The sight of these very people had filled ten of the spies with terror, and had so advised the Israelites not to enter the land of Canaan because of them. Joshua, then a man of forty years of age, was not afraid of them, and, now an old man of eighty-five years, he asks for the difficult task of driving out these warlike, courageous people. His example should be an inspiration to all young Christians. We should not fear the difficult tasks or the arduous duties, but should ever be ready and willing to serve God in the most difficult places. The soldier seeks the most dangerous and difficult tasks. Why should not the Christian soldier?

Caleb did not undertake his dangerous and difficult task in his own strength, but in the strength of the Lord. He was not a fool rushing in where angels feared to tread. He had taken his own strength and the strength of the enemy into consideration and also the necessity of having the presence and help of God. "If so be the Lord will be with me, I shall be able to drive them out, as the Lord hath said." Hard things are not to be chosen in rashness, but in faith. Trust in God will assure a victory over any enemy that it may be our duty to face or success in any task that it may be our duty to undertake.

Caleb's faith and efforts were crowned with success, and he received the land as he asked. Joshua also received. Success and reward always follow the faithful performance of duty. With the intelligent faith and courage of Caleb let us "wholly follow the Lord," and success and reward will be our portion.

BIBLE READINGS.

Ex. iii, 1-12; Josh. i, 1-7; Judg. vii, 15-25; Neh. ii, 11-20; Zech. iv, 6; Isa. xl, 31; Ps. xlvi, 1-5; Matt. xiv, 22-36; xxviii, 19, 20; John xi, 4; Phil. iv, 13.

The Reward of Prayer.

True prayer never fails to bring its reward. Prayer consists of supplication and thanksgiving. Petition is but an incident of prayer, and it may well be doubted whether that which consists of petition alone is true prayer. Prayer is communion with God. Spending a large portion of time in company with God, we become more and more like God. Intimate relations are established between our Heavenly Father and the man of prayer. He finds a resting place secure from the dangers and ills of life in the secret place of the Most High, and as he grows in likeness to Christ and is kept in nearness to God the almighty arms of the living God are around him. God's ministering angels have charge over him, and in God's ways he finds the peace which Christ left in His dying legacy to all His followers.—Christian Observer.

Toxic Effect of Severe Demands.

God never insults us by asking less than the best of us. At times we are tempted to think His demands too severe and exacting, as though He had forgotten that we are dust. But if He were to let down the standard and say that men were such poor specimens that He must compromise with their weakness we should feel that to be worse than His severity of demand. We should feel that He has given us a lower rank in the scale of creation and shut us out of the greatest glory—the possibility of sharing His holiness. It would weaken the self respect of mankind and cut the sinews of spiritual effort. God's severities is requirements are a real thing, and they carry with them the assurance of great purposes of good for us.—Sunday School Times.

The Spiritual Life.

The spiritual life is not a bright bel life. It has new impulses, new sensations, new deeds. It is a life which no longe goes its own way. It has surrendered its way to the Spirit's better way. By submission to the Spirit's direction it escapes the dominion of the flesh. The spiritual life is a life yielded fully to the control of the mighty Spirit of God. —Episcopal Recorder.

The Building of a Life.

Life is a building. It rises slowly, day by day, through the years. Every new lesson we learn lays a block on the edifice which is rising silently within us; every influence that impresses us, every book we read, every conversation we have, every act of our commonest days, adds something to the invisible building.—J. R. Miller.

The New Woman's Observations

By ELIZA ARCHARD CONNER

Much must be said for the National Civic federation on the score that its intentions are undoubtedly honorable. Its recent love feast to end the troubles between labor and capital and institute reconciliation and brotherly love is highly commendable. Labor delegates, clergymen and millionaires threw bouquets at one another so prettily that you could fairly smell the perfume as you read the story of their meeting. Meanwhile what of the 35,000,000 girls and women who are as vitally interested as any man living in the harmonizing of labor and capital? Certainly a fourth of the wage earners of this land are women, not counting the vast silent army of wives who work for their board and clothes. Yet not the name of one solitary woman is on the committees of labor, of capital or of disinterested citizens. This is certainly not for lack of suitable material. Where is there a man in America more directly connected with the employment of workmen, thousands of railway men, than Helen Gould? Where is there an employer who knows more about his workingmen? Where is there a capitalist richer or shrewder than Mrs. Hetty Green, also directly connected with railway management? And when it comes to the ethical side of the labor question, there is no man, be he layman or preiate, who has considered the matter more earnestly from the viewpoint of both head and heart than Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and there is not a man living who can sing so nobly and inspiringly as she to the workers of the human race. Her labor lyrics vibrate in the souls of a million people today, lifting them up to braver, happier lives.

Not everybody knows that the United States senate shows sufficient respect to the feminine citizens of this great country to include among its committees one on women suffrage. Senators Wetmore, Bard and Mitchell are the present members of the committee.

Mrs. Alice Moore McComas, the newspaper writer, formerly of Los Angeles, is now the chaperon of one of her two gifted and handsome daughters, "Carroll the Whistler" and Alice, the pianiste. Mrs. McComas has thus far been very successful in her enterprise, though she says it involves a steady grind of hard work. She and Miss Carroll have gone to London, where the girl whistler will conclude the season. Miss Alice, the pianiste, is meantime touring this country with a well known theatrical company.

Women whistlers are now the vogue, and they are more popular than men performers in the same line. Their whistle seems somehow sweeter and more birdlike than that from masculine lips.

Women scare at mice, do they? Listen. When the boys of a public school in central New York were marching down stairs in the middle of a fire drill, a boy saw a mouse in front of him. It scared him so that he gave a leap forward and knocked down the boy ahead and injured him seriously.

The proposition has been made by the wife of a rector of the English church that women curates be appointed to assist in the duties which usually fall to men curates, and the suggestion is meeting with considerable favor, perhaps because men are scarce in Great Britain.

Girls and women ought to be trained in the use of firearms for their own protection. Hunting has become a highly fashionable amusement among society women, and some of them are expert and cool headed marksmen.

A New Jersey woman is asking for her third divorce from the same husband. She ought not to get it. A woman who is so reckless as to marry for the third time a man she had tried twice before to live with and could not deserves to be made to live with him the rest of her days, and maybe then she will learn some sense.

NEW THINGS TO WEAR.

Remarkable Wraps For Dressing and Carriage Wear—The Latest Mode.

Just see how there are new things to name strange these that are made up, and I think that each day could be numbered on one's fingers as far as novelty is concerned. The principal novelties are seen in the trimmings of the full gowns and the rare double wraps for evening and carriage wear. The automobile coats are rarely long and are usually in modified box shape. Naturally they are made to be warm, and where the outside is not of fur the lining is. Not infrequently there is fur on both sides. But they are made for use and less for ornament. The long evening and carriage cloaks are fearfully and wonderfully made, looking as though the wearer had got into some other person's coat, and that one three sizes larger. The sleeves are long and entirely cover the hands, and the length and amplitude of the garment hide all the rest of the costume.

In one sense of the word it is well that these wraps are so very ample, for the evening dresses make them necessary. But some of them are almost ridiculous. One, for instance, has a dark puce velvet cloak, formed with a deep shoulder cape of superb old point de venise. This cape reaches quite to the elbows, and above that is a wide shawl collar of rich dark fur. The wrap is draped across the front to the left side, and there is a long cord and tassel arrangement of gold thread. The sleeves are long and gathered at the cuff, from which they fall in a bell shape, with a row of black silk netting over white satin. At the edge there is a band of fur, with a little animal's head on the sleeve. The garment reminded one of some picture, but it must be very uncomfortable to wear.

There is much that one might say about the hats. First and foremost there are soft felt hats in exactly the same shapes as those the men wear, and they are simply pinned on with a plain stickpin. Dark gray and smoke pearl are the two shades most affected. The shape is not unlike the fedora, only it is not accentuated quite so much. They are very becoming to young faces. Derbys are still proper for horseback, though a few conservatives think they look better in the stovepipe hats and in consequence put them on. Next comes the short backed flat shape, and, all things considered, these are oftenest seen. They can be trimmed in so many ways and made to conform so well to them so that it is no wonder they are so popular. I saw one white woolly felt yesterday without any crown, and it was held on the head by having a roulean of violet velvet. On the outside was a basketful of velvet pansy violets with scarcely any foliage, and these were piled up high on the front and left side. Along the right side there were several flat bows and ends of violet velvet ribbon. The bow at the back had no loops, and they hung down quite to the neck.

I should mention a novelty, and that is the new style of embroidering some of the homespun cloths. The material in appearance is much like the common woolen stuffs made by the women of Bulgaria, and the embroidery is done in colored Berlin wools, the stitch being rather more like the showy outh stitch done by the Italians. The colors are rather bright, and the whole is more curious than artistic; still it is seen quite often on walking suits. As a general rule, the design is not more than two inches wide and is set along the top of a shaped flounce.

The change in the way of dressing the hair is very decided, and few are now seen with the hair in a pompadour. There are so many ways of arranging the tresses that all may be suited, but the general style is to have the front waved and curled and the back brought down low on the neck. Some wear cottages braids, but more are in favor of a few short and large curls starting from each side of the head. Others have the hair in a series of soft puffs. A flower at the side is frequently worn.

The Destructive Boy

By JANE STORY

Half a dozen boys were on their way home from school along a city street. They were from six to fourteen years old. A few blocks away from the schoolhouse was an empty shop. The sign "To Let" was posted inside the show window. It was very handsome plate glass; could not have cost less than $60.

"Let's smash that sign," said one of them. They looked up and down the street. Then one of the large boys hurled a stone with all his might through that beautiful plate glass, crashing it into a hundred fragments. Then the young savages took to their heels and ran away out of sight lest a policeman catch them. And all the boys laughed as at a good joke.

Boys the world over are untamed young cubs, with the savage instinct of destruction fierce and rampant within them. It is the instinct of the naked barbarian to pound a watch to pieces to see what makes it tick. It sometimes hard to believe there is not considerable pure devilry in boys and barbarians. What else, for instance, could make a little boy take his hat, brand new, hurl it in the air, wallow it in the dust and then use it as a football for himself and his comrades? Why should it be impossible to keep the glass in street lamps in the vicinity of schoolhouses unless there is an element of original sin in the untamed boy nature? In country places the instinct of destruction displays itself more openly than in cities because there is less restraint. Boy marauders, every one of whom can probably say the multiplication table backward and draw from memory an outline map of his own county, roam through farmers' fields, taking a hatchet along to chop and pry apart wire fences that are in their way, destroying fruit and vegetables, burning down trees and sometimes farm buildings, though there were no such thing as law or moral sentiment in this life. If there be an empty house in their track of destruction, there will be not a window left in it or scarcely a whole board in its fence.

The hoodlums who thus leave ruin in their path are as often as not the sons of the most respectable citizens of a community.

Now, mothers and teachers are the ones responsible for this savagery, and we are to recall that three out of four public school teachers are women. There is a great cry at present for the teaching of manners in public schools. Is that all we are willing to put out at our boy boors on the world in respect to politeness and common courtesy, especially toward women. But there is a matter far more vital than that a boy should take his hat off when addressing a lady and answer "Yes, ma'am" and "No, ma'am," and that is the inculcation of the respect due to property and to the useful and handsome things.

A higher ethical sentiment and increased refinement are what the growing influence of women in modern times means, if it means anything, and this must show itself first in the betterment of the rising generation. Let the teacher assemble her boys and girls in the schoolhouse and lay down to them stories of how, for instance, window glass is made, the interesting and really wonderful transformation the crude materials go through to become the crystal pane of glass which lets light into houses. Let her tell them of all the labor required to perfect the farmer's products and the boards and wire used in fencemaking. Stories will always be said to catch the attention of her pupils. Mothers and teachers can lay it before boys how they themselves must one day be workers and employers of labor and that serious loss will be entailed on them through wanton destruction of their property.

LONGER COATS.

Three-Quarter Length Coats and Fashion Hooks Popular.

Now that the weather has become more severe the coats belonging to tailor suiting are longer. Three-quarter lengths are soon very much at fashionable gatherings, and where the short Eton front is preserved it has either lost it a postillion back. The full fledged Russian blouse is very handsome for those whose height will permit them to wear it. These blouses are made of rich velvets and trimmed with bands of fur. The linings are of white satin, and they usually have one large lapel of white lace or embroidery. They are belted in with stitched satin girdles having jeweled buckles or slides.

Broadcloth tailor mades will always be popular on account of the fine figure they give a woman. Black broadcloth suits are relieved with stitched bands of colored cloth or velvet. Persian trimmings figure as the most handsome imported costumes, and a fluffy front of chiffon or lace is a necessity for dressy occasions.

Bias bands of velvet, braid and stitched strappings of peau de soie figure on all the more ordinary suits.

Today's cut shows a black broadcloth tailor made. The jacket has an Eton front and a postillion back. There is a triple collar, the middle one being of Persian panne. The fluffy front and stock are of chiffon, and the vest is of Persian panne. The skirt has a gradulated flounce.

SKATING COSTUMES.

They Are Elaborately Trimmed With Braid and Fur.

Skating costumes are of great interest for the moment. Never have they been so chic. It is considered the proper thing to make them of frieze and trim them with bands of fur, velvet or braid. A costume recently made of this material had a short Eton jacket cut very sharp all the way around in order to show a wide belt of folded panne. From this in the back depended smart little postillion tails of the goods. There was also a tucked blouse front of the velvet, and around the bottom of the ankle length skirt there were three bands of it cut on the bias and stitched. This costume was brown, and its somberness was relieved by buttons of turquoise and silver.

Today's picture shows a child's dress made of old rose cashmere. The little waist is bloused both back and front, and the fullness at the neck is laid in tucks. For trimming there are small strappings running horizontally and two wide straps which reach from the shoulders to the waist. The little bishop sleeves are laid in tucks and the fullness confined into a narrow cuff. The belt is of black velvet. The skirt is short, reaching only to the knees.

When A Woman Calls

By MAUD ROBINSON

"Look at that fat!" Polly Benedict heaved a huge sigh and let herself fall back lazily among the cushions of her divan. The slip of paper she handed me was filled with names and bore the legend, "People I must call upon."

"Why didn't you make some of those calls today? It would have left you more time at the end of the week," I began.

Polly glanced at me scornfully.

"What! On this horrid, cold, gray day?" she cried. "No, indeed, child. I'm not such an idiot. They'll all be at home. Tomorrow, if it's particularly pleasant and attractive out of doors, I shall start out in a limousine with about a bushel of cards. If I have the luck I expect, not more than three of those twenty people will be in, and I shall get through with every call on the list. Twenty calls in one afternoon—that won't be bad either!" Polly commented softly to herself. "I think I shall have broken the record."

"Then there's a record for making calls as well as for everything else?" I asked.

"Certainly," she returned. "Flossie Van Tyne is ahead just now. She made nineteen calls in an afternoon. But it wasn't fair. She simply sent around the empty victoria and had the footman leave cards. Now, she should have gone in person and taken her chances of finding people in."

"It is rather like a game," I admitted.

"Yes, only some people play it so badly," Polly went on. "Last Wednesday, for instance, Lucy Bennet came to call, and a little while afterward that nice boy Phil Arkwright dropped in. Now, any girl with the smallest particle of sense would have left within five minutes. Not a bit of it! She stayed on and on, gabbing foolishly and trying to make herself interesting until we both thought we would go wild. Catch me staying after a man comes to call on my hostess! There are certain unforgivable social sins, and that is one of them."

"It's no worse than for the same woman to come every week on your receiving day for the purpose of seeing how many people you have"—

"And of eating your refreshments," Polly put in.

"That's so. I positively have to hide the dish of candied violets every time old Mrs. Jones calls. She stoops them up by the handful."

"Isn't it fun to call first on Bessie Jones and then on Phyllis Carleton?"

"Yes, they are both social climbers, and at the house of one you will be informed pretty accurately about the mishaps of the other. It is as good as a comedy to hear the two versions."

"Doesn't it make you furious when a fat woman comes to call and after coolly looking about her at your substantial furniture she deliberately plants herself in your littlest gilt chair?"

"And every time she moves you stop in the middle of what you are saying and a cold chill creeps down your spine."

"Then there's the woman who keeps saying, 'Now, I really must go,' when your not keeping her at all"—

"And then when she does leave the room she keeps talking over her shoulder and repeating, 'Well, goodby?'"

"Speaking of goodby, the society victoria, what do you think of the cool way many society people have of sitting in their victorias outside the door and making the footman run up the steps with cards without even inquiring whether the people called upon are at home?"

"Oh, it's plain that we all find calls a bore!"

"Then why, for goodness' sake, do we make them?" I ventured.

But Polly gave a pippant smile, "Because every woman who respects herself must have a long visiting list," she remarked sagely.

And I found this bit of truly feminine logic unanswerable.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 19, "Intelligent Piety"—Text, Acts xvii, 10, 12.

"They searched the Scriptures daily, therefore many of them believed."

Our Object.—The object of the League is to promote intelligent and vital piety in the young members and friends of the church and to aid them in the attainment of purity of heart and in constant growth in grace and to train them in works of mercy and help."

Our aim is clear cut. We purpose to be truly Christian. This means growth in all inner graces of the spirit, all outward efficiency in helpfulness to others and fuller understanding of all knowledge that is elevating. The best Christian is many sided. Habits of devotion and benevolence are balanced by practical wisdom, study and thinking.

Never before was so much reading matter available as now. Never was the quality so excellent and the nature so varied. The price of the best literature places it within the reach of the poorest of the people. Only a few choice articles of a single month, if carefully culled, are often of great value. If one has the taste for reading, there is no lack of material of the very best for its satisfaction.

Herein lies a danger. The mass of matter is so great that careful selection is required to get that which is adapted to personal needs. Unless a plan is formed and adhered to there is an inevitable drifting into careless ways. Work never completed and is read indiscriminatingly. The result is a confused condition of mind where many things are heaped together. Little is properly sorted, less is well understood, and almost nothing is fully mastered. Still worse, the mind becomes dissipated and shrinks from solid work, craving mere amusement or distraction of attention from serious work.

Some reading should be always in progress of a solid sort, so that when the fragments of time occur they can be at once taken up where it was left the last time. Some work for information, to increase the knowledge as well as to discipline powers of the mind.

The League reading course has been selected specially for meeting the needs of our average young people. The price of the set is very low, and in no chapter will it be found difficult to get at least a few who will club together for its purchase and then for its study and discussion.

Much of value lies in getting together and discussing the subjects and their special treatment in the books read. Points which are obscure to one person are plain to another, and all minds are stimulated to greater activity by contact with others and comparison of views.

In no particular is this more clear than in the matters of Bible study. Frequent interchange of opinion and united study will result in marked improvement in the grasp of Scripture truth and also in relish for it.

Some light reading will be helpful, but too much is harmful. It is a serious mistake to read stories more than anything else. It is not a mark of culture to have read many of the popular novels, but to have read discriminatingly what is worth reading does show a trained mind.

God's Plans.

God has His plans in providence and grace. They do not develop in a day. They ripen by degrees. This does not suit the human mind. Men call for the speedier processes. They become discouraged and doubting at seeming delays or slow processes. But this does not help matters. Our God takes His own time. He makes no mistakes. He will not be forced; neither will He force His creatures. He will not deviate from His ordained operations. He will not change the steps between the beginning and the end of His purpose. Every man must live out his appointed life. Between his birth and the grave lies an interval of preparation, discipline and development, and, whether the period be long or short, there is no escaping it. The intervening process is as much decreed as are the beginning and the ending. It stands related to the final outcome. It forms an important part in God's great scheme in regard to time and eternity. At times the experience may be very trying, but the Christian will recognize God's hand in it and abide the issue with patience, resignation and hope, assured that "all things work together for good to them that love God, who are called according to His purpose."—Presbyterian.

Sorrow.

O Sorrow, thou art only a gateway to Joy, only a hand to lead us to light! Thy cups are hard to swallow, yet when bravely lifted and swallowed they bring us deeper and purer joys. Let us never grieve because of sorrow, but let us take it and go straight to God with it and make it turn out to be for us the greatest blessings of our whole lives.—Bible Reader.

The Bright Side.

More than half of the unhappiness in the world comes from a perverse unwillingness to look on the bright side so long as a dark side can be discovered.—United Presbyterian.

The Sunshine of Gladness.

Take thy self denials gayly and cheerfully and let the sunshine of thy gladness fall on dark things and bright alike.—James F. Clarke.

Before We Sleep.

Like tasks an infant's restful span
Would we, Lord, operate our eyes in prayer;
Resting the spirit, quiet the mind,
Focus will bring us visions clear and fair.

Were we such, we pray, before we sleep;
Guard us as we linger nigh to death;
Let our heart thanks endlessly to Thee
Higher rise with every laboring breath.

Sec. Root Would Create a National Reserve

Strength of the National Guard and Its Need of Uniformity in Administration and Equipment

PRACTICALLY every president since the days of Washington has had some ideas for the utilization of the militia of the country. The president's message, with each succeeding year, carries with it to the halls of congress some recommendation for a change in the organization and armament, or both, for the national guard. Throughout each session of congress for the last third of a century the officers and men of the national guard have watched eagerly for the hoped for change that would render more efficient, and give a national standing to, the great body of citizen soldiers.

But up to the present time their hopes have been vain, and to-day, so far as national legislation is concerned, the citizen soldiery of the various states are operating under the antiquated laws passed by congress in 1792. Since that time, and under that law, congress has passed appropriations for the equipment of the guard of the various states, but the appropriations have been inadequate, amounting in recent years to some $400,000 per annum.

While congress has taken no steps for the organization of a national reserve the several states of the union have organized state forces as a reserve for the suppression of organized lawlessness. For years we have looked upon this state reserve force as a sort of national reserve, though the men comprising it were bound in no way by their enlistment oath to serve the national government. It was this force that comprised the greater part of the first volunteer army called upon in the war with Spain in 1898, and it was at that time that its possibilities and its short-comings as a national reserve were first fully realized.

In his recent annual report Secretary Root adds another to the long list of recommendations for the improvement and nationalizing of this reserve force. He says:

"It is very desirable that congress should now exercise the power conferred upon it by the constitution to provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia. The organization and armament of the national guards of the several states, which are treated as militia in the appropriations made by congress, should be made the same as those provided by congress for the regular and volunteer forces. The relations of the national guard organizations to the national forces, and the obligations and duties of those organizations in time of war, should be clearly defined, so that the confusion and distress regarding their action which accompanied the outbreak of the war with Spain may not again occur."

The constitution grants to congress the right "to provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by congress."

This extract from the constitution gives an idea of what Secretary Root would have congress do at this time. In this connection it is interesting to investigate the present conditions and strength of the force which he would create into a national reserve, and in connection with which he recommends:

"That the war department be authorized to arm the national guard with the present service small arms used by the regular army, navy and marine corps, and that the national guard of the several states be treated as a first reserve, to be called into the service of the United States to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, the term of service under any call to be limited to the number that the president be authorized, on the request of the governor of any state, to detail officers of the regular army for instruction, staff and inspection duties with the national guard of such state; that the war department be authorized to furnish transportation, rations, and tentage to officers and men of national guard organizations that shall take part with the forces of the regular army in annual encampment and maneuvers of national military range; that the department be authorized to allow travel pay, commutation of rations and quarters, or commutation of quarters, to officers of the national guard attending encampments or part in the courses of instruction at the general service and staff college at Fort Leavenworth. Both of these provisions should be within reasonable limits, proportional to the number of additional guard organizations in the several states."

The total strength of the state forces generally known as the national guard varies from 112,000 to 115,000. Under the various state laws upon the subject there is an authorized strength of more than 185,000. This difference between the enlisted strength and the authorized strength shows the difficulties encountered in securing desirable recruits for the service as at present administered. These difficulties are encountered in every state. Nor are the difficulties confined to either the larger or smaller cities. In practically every place where a state military organization is maintained the commanding officers find it a hard matter to keep the strength of the organization up to the authorized maximum. True, there are a few instances where social prestige makes enlistment desirable that the maximum strength is maintained without any great trouble, but these cases are the exception rather than the rule.

This state of affairs is accounted for, not so much because of a lack of military enthusiasm on the part of the young men of the nation, as because they are averse to entering a service where the necessary equipment for an efficient organization is not provided; they are averse to entering a service that is not necessarily a part of the national defense force, but is generally accepted as a state police to be used on occasions of labor or other local trouble. In point of equipment they compare the well-clothed, well-armed regular with the half-clothed, poorly-armed guardsman. Practically two-thirds of the state in the union do not provide their state troops with many of the essentials to a complete equipment for active service. Overcoats blankets, mess equipments and many of the minor details, such as leggings, campaign hats, haversacks and canteens are either not provided at all or furnished in insufficient quantities. Regimental organizations in many of the larger cities of the country provide these details of equipment at the expense of the organization treasuries in order to make recruiting among desirable classes easier.

In point of armament the guard is seriously defective for war purposes. The national government provides the antiquated Springfield, breech-loading, single-shot rifles, while to the army is given a modern repeating weapon of small caliber and using smokeless powder. The difficulties of getting two forces armed so differently to act together in time of war is amply illustrated by experiences in Cuba in 1898. The majority of the invading force consisted of regulars and the rough riders, equipped like the regulars, but with three were a few of the state volunteers equipped with Springfield rifles. These troops were forced to lie in the trenches under fire, to accept the dangers of exposed positions, but were not permitted to reply to the fire of the Spanish force, as the use of their antiquated armament would betray the position of the besieging force to the Spaniards. In other words these poorly-equipped troops were of the invading force, but of but little value to it.

At the present time there are no less than four different varieties of rifles in use by the national guard of the different states. Different varieties of rifles are found in the hands of the different organizations in one state, as is the case in New York where the Seventh regiment is equipped with repeating rifles while the remainder of the state force are using the Springfield. With this variety of armament it is easy to imagine the confusion that would result in the attempt to supply ammunition in the event of war.

The difference in administration and the paper work of the various forces created another difficulty that it was hard to overcome during 1898. In many states there are practically no property returns made at all. In scarcely any two states are the forms provided for requisitions for supplies, for returns of property accountability and for any kind of official returns the same. Nor do they conform to those in use in the army. For this reason there was the utmost confusion among the volunteer organizations. I know personally of one regiment, in one of the great camps in the south, whose enlisted men went without fresh meat for the first six weeks they were there because the commissary officer did not know how to draw it.

The lack of training of the men of the national guardsmen has been of an organization that should be national in more than name. He has asked for no financial remuneration for his services, but for government recognition and government equipment that would put him upon the same plane as the regular soldier in time of war. A general officer in the New York guard outlines the wishes of practically the whole organization not only in his state, but in all states as follows:

"We want a form of enlistment that will make us subject to the direct call of the president in time of war; we want an armament and equipment identical with that of the regular army; we want a form of administrative machinery identical with that of the army so far as that is practical with a reserve force of unpaid troops; we want an annual appropriation by the state and national government that will make it unnecessary to continually solicit financial aid from the public to maintain our respective commandships. We do not want to be relieved of our duty to the state, but we do want to be relieved of the necessity of being "tin soldiers" which is attached to us by the unthinking class because we are not subject to the national reserve. This can be done by making such a reserve of the guard, and it will at the same time give to the national government a valuable force, fully and perfectly equipped, and subject at all times to the call of the president without the formalities, delay and confusion attendant upon a reorganization. National recognition along these lines would mean greater enthusiasm, greater ease in recruiting and greater efficiency in time of need."

In these words this officer expresses practically the views of general and regimental officers of more than a dozen states whom I have interviewed, or with whom I have had correspondence upon the subject, and at the same time he expresses the views of the broad-minded element among the officers of the army.

THE BEAR WAS AT HOME.

But It Was the Wrong Spot on Which to Interview the Animal.

A woman traveling abroad narrates the following experience, says London Truth:

She had occasion to go to the British embassy at a certain spot, which shall be nameless, to see the ambassador, who, though proved to be away with his wife at a neighboring health resort. The visitor asked for the first secretary, who, unfortunately, was on leave in England. The woman said that the second secretary would do as well, but he happened to be in attendance upon his wife, who was in a hospital. Was the third secretary there? No, he was on leave, too. The bottle washer might be in, perchance? No, he was shooting in England. The second bottle washer? He, unfortunately, was an invalid, and rarely came to the embassy. The military attaché? He was on leave. The archivist? He was fishing in Scotland. The visitor was tired of the junior secretaries, whose custom it was to transact their duties in company with a pet bear. "Did they happen to be in? Unfortunately, they were away playing polo. And the bear? Yes, the bear was at home. The visitor, however, did not feel equal to interviewing the bear single handed and left. Not for any consideration would I reveal the name of the embassy where this incident is situated. I will observe, by way of remark, however, that a bear is quite the last animal to which British interests ought to be confided at this particular spot.

At the Bath.

To the Romans the public baths were a necessity of daily life, and the bathing of Pompeii will enable us to say behind those of greater cities in the tumultuous variety of the scenes enacted there. A quotation from Seneca gives a vivid illustration of what went on in such places.

"I am living near a bath, writes the philosopher. Sounds are heard on all sides. Just imagine for yourself every conceivable kind of noise that can offend the ear. The men of more sturdy muscles, when they exercise and swing their hands heavily weighted with lead. I hear their groans when they restrain themselves, or the whistling of labored breath.

If one is rather lazy, he has himself rubbed with ointments, and I hear the blows of the hands slapping his shoulders the sounds varying as the masseur strikes with flat or hollow palm. Meanwhile there is a sudden brawl, as a thief is caught, or there is some one in the bath who loves to hear the sound of his own voice, and the bathers plunge into the swimming-bath with loud splashing.

Over all the din you hear the cry of those who are selling cakes, sausages and sweetmeats.—Youth's Companion.

CHEATS A BLIZZARD.

Man Works as a Horse to Save His Wife and Children.

Hitches Himself to a Sleigh and Draws Loved Ones to Shelter in the Face of a Blinding and Cruel Snowstorm.

From Goshen, N. Y., comes the report that, to save his wife and two children from certain death by freezing, Elgin MacLaren harnessed himself to a sleigh and drew them over desolate roads through the darkness and in the face of a blinding blizzard of wind and snow to a place of shelter.

MacLaren, with his wife, their little boy, Tom, aged six, and Agnes, the baby, started late in the afternoon to drive from Smithfields to Haverstraw. The journey was in the teeth of the wind, the weather was far down toward the zero mark, and it was snowing hard. The road was hardly distinguishable in the gray darkness of the storm, and when night fell MacLaren discovered that he had made a wrong turning and that he was lost.

MacLaren, in his desperation, urged his horse to renewed efforts, but the animal, exhausted at last, fell, and, in falling, broke its leg.

There was not a house in sight—nothing but the darkness and the broad sheeted expanse of snow. Mrs. MacLaren and the children, in spite of heavy robes and blankets, were freezing.

MacLaren stripped himself of overcoat and muffler, wrapped them around his wife and children, arranged parts of the horse's harness over his shoulders and around his waist, placed himself between the shafts of the sleigh, and, with a cheery shout, started along the road.

He made good progress at first, but was soon compelled to stop and restore his wife and boy to consciousness. This he did by making such a reserve of the guard, and it will at the same time give to the national government a valuable force, fully and perfectly equipped, and subject at all times to the call of the president without the formalities, delay and confusion attendant upon a reorganization. National recognition along these lines would mean greater enthusiasm, greater ease in recruiting and greater efficiency in time of need."

ones. Then he took up the part of horse again, and the sleigh went forward for another hundred yards. But every few minutes he was forced to stop and give more of the cordial to Mrs. MacLaren and little Thomas.

He didn't know it then, and now he says he must have been delirious, but in his wild dash for liberty he passed several houses where he might have found succor.

Whenever a down grade was reached in the crazed rapid time was made by the sturdy Scotchman, who whistled and sang to cheer the drooping spirits of his half-frozen wife. Once, in descending a hill, he fell and the sleigh ran upon him. If it had not been so the chances are that all the occupants would have been killed in the dash down the steep decline, but it was the fall served to rouse MacLaren.

He was met near Bradley Mines, four miles from his starting point, by Charles Carson, who stopped him and tried to ascertain what was wrong.

MacLaren's statements were not altogether clear, and Carson took the almost frozen party to the home of Mr. Cooper, farmer, where they were resuscitated. They did not learn for some time how far MacLaren had dragged his family, and could scarcely believe it when they found out.

All of the party were more or less frost bitten, especially the little boy. Mrs. MacLaren's ears, unprotected except for her hair, were badly frozen. Her husband's hands and feet were in the same condition. He may lose a finger or two, and his nose, ears and chin were frostbitten.

House Built of Buttons.

A house built of buttons is the latest thing in architecture, and a certain French musical celebrity is building it. The walls, the ceilings, the floors, the exterior and the interior are all ornamented with buttons of every description, from the very origin of the invention up to those of the present day. These dating from the lower Greek empire are of the most curious shapes and sizes. Many curiosities have been ransacked and some very curious specimens are reported to have been brought to light.

The Rain and the Dust.

A Boston schoolteacher had been reading to her pupils about the rain. Asking one of the boys to write a little composition on the rain he, after declaring his inability to do so, upon the teacher's insistence, produced the following: "What does the rain say to the dust? 'I am on to you, and your name is mud.'"

WATERLOO MONUMENT.

Site of Napoleon's Downfall to Be Marked by Sculpture of a Gigantic Dying Eagle.

France has at last, after a lapse of 88 years, decided to mark the site of Napoleon's downfall. Waterloo is to have a monument.

A short time ago M. Henri Houssaye, an eminent historian and noted member of the French academy, together with Count de Mauny and M. Gustave Larroumet, bought a plot of land at the junction of the high road from Brussels, and that from Planchenoit near the famous farm of La Belle Alliance, which was the center of Napoleon's position in the great battle.

This ground has been offered to the military society "La Sabretache," which has opened a subscription for the erection of a monument. Already the response has been so generous that M. Jean Leon Gerome, the illustrious French sculptor and artist, has given carte blanche, the only command issued being that the memorial must be of the finest materials.

WATERLOO MONUMENT.

He has promised it for the early part of 1902, but the unveiling will not take place until the spring days come and the weather is warm enough to permit of a lengthy and elaborate ceremony.

The monument is a striking piece of work. The principal figure represents a dying eagle with one wing broken and drooping by its side, and the other extended but pierced with bullets; one claw firmly grasps the French flag, while with the other the mortally wounded bird defends the colors on which are inscribed the words: "Austerlitz" and "Eylau."

The eagle is of bronze, and stands on a huge bowlder of marble over which the flag droops on one side, and on the other will be carved an inscription, the exact text of which has not yet been decided upon, but it will contain the date of the battle of Waterloo, and in a few brief sentences tell the results of the strife and also state that the monument is lovingly dedicated to the greatest general France had and to the noble men who so courageously and gallantly followed their leader.

The eagle measures two meters in height, and the existing wing three meters, 25. The entire monument, with pedestal and bronze, is 15 meters high and is very impressive.

HONOR FOR MULDOON.

Created Coadjutor Bishop of the Archdiocese of Chicago by Order of Pope Leo XIII.

Rt. Rev. Peter J. Muldoon, the brilliant young bishop of Chicago, who was consecrated July 25 last and named as auxiliary bishop of Chicago, has received a further signal distinction that seldom comes to one so young, of being made bishop coadjutor of the diocese.

By this new appointment, which has been made by Pope Leo XIII., he has coordinate jurisdiction in this great diocese with the venerable archbishop, Most Rev. P. A. Feehan.

The greater significance of this new honor is that it confers upon him the right of succession to Archbishop Feehan.

In naming him as bishop coadjutor of the holy father designated at the same time the title of bishop of Ortagro.

Bishop Muldoon was born a little less than 35 years ago in Columbia, Cal., of Irish parents.

His early education was obtained in the public schools of Stockton, Cal.

Weeds That Petrified Wood.

A strange thing about petrified forests down near Tucson, Ariz. Weed and vegetables and other soft substances thrown into it become petrified. It is customary for visitors to leave potatoes in it for a few weeks inclosed in air receptacles, and then find them turned to stone.

HOPI FLUTE DANCE.

Beautiful Ceremony of a Purely Religious Character.

More Attractive Than the Better Known Snake Dance—Meaning of the Sacred Rites Is Quite Poetical.

[Special Arizona Letter.]

THE wonderful Snake dance of the Hopi Indians of Arizona has often been described, and such is its thrilling attraction that hundreds of people from all parts of the world have witnessed it. But many of those even who have been present at the Snake dance ceremonials are not aware that at other villages of the Hopi (there are seven of these villages) a similar, but series of ceremonies occur, equally impressing, far more beautiful and attractive, and, to the religious Hopi, equal in importance to the better known and more exciting dance with the snakes.

It must not be forgotten that to the Indian in his normal condition a dance is never anything less than a religious ceremony. He may get pleasure and enjoyment from its exercise, but, primarily and chiefly, it is purely a religious act, and is always associated with worship in one or another of its aspects. The Snake dance, for instance, is a prayer for rain and all the consequent fertility of crops, etc., that come from the latter, in a country which is otherwise a thirsty desert land. The Flute dance is closely allied to the Snake dance. It is performed every alternate year with it. This year the Snake dance ceremonies were performed in the two villages of Walpi and Washongnavi. The Flute ceremonies were at Oraibi, Shipaulovi and Shongopavi. Next year the Snake dance will be performed at the three latter villages, while the Flute dance will be given at Walpi and Washongnavi.

Now, while at Walpi, this year, there were, perhaps, 200 to 300 spectators at the Snake dance, but few persons saw the chief portions of the Lelenta or Flute dance at Oraibi. Of these, three were of the family of that Mormonite missionary, Rev. H. R. Voth, who has already made himself famous by his wonderful reproduction of Hopi altars and groups in the Field Columbian museum at Chicago. The other was a Denver gentleman, and the fifth the writer. To see the ceremonies cost me 13 miles of weary, hot walking over the blasted desert, carrying a heavy camera and my provisions. But its beauty, grace and charm far more than repaid me for the weariness of body.

After the secret Kiva ceremonies (rites in the underground chambers of the fraternity of the Flute) the first public rites of the day took place at a spring near the home of Lolokami, the chief of the Oraibi pueblo, and about five miles west of the town. Here in one of the pitiful springs upon which the people depend for their meager supply of water. Just before noon men, women and girls might have been seen wending their way from the village on the mesa height, down the steep trails, over the sandy very trodden for centuries by their forefathers, towards the location of the spring.

Every face was as serious and wore as grave and earnest an expression as that of a novice about to be confirmed in her holiest vows. Arrived at the spring, an eminence just above it to the southwest was the chosen site for the preliminaries. Here an hour or more was spent in prayers, sprinkling of meal before and upon the altar and the painting of the bodies of the clan upon the participants.

Other priests during the whole time were on their knees or in other postures of reverence, praying, singing or chanting, and sprinkling the sacred meal on or before the altar. A large number of babos or prayer sticks and plumes were used. These are a feature of all Hopi and cognate peoples' ritual.

At this time the chief priest left the altar and solemnly marched down to the spring. It is circular in shape, and with a rude wall built around it. At the opening in the circle three small gourd vessels were placed, two of which held sacred water from some far away springs, and the other was for use on the spot. A singular thing occurred about the filling of this honey jar. A nest of bees had located in the wall of the spring, and the chief priest, taking it for granted that this was a good sign, had the nest removed along with the water contained from the comb, for his sacred purposes. After he had prayed for awhile the priests and women from above all marched down, except the flute players. As they stood around the spring they sang and prayed, while the chief priest stepped into the water, bowing his face down over it, and waving his tiponi (the sacred palladium of the ceremonies) in and through it. Soon it was a slimy, muddy mass, instead of a water spring, and when it seemed mixed up enough he began to dip his face deep into it while the men and women around continued their singing and worship.

Then he came forth, and now began a most beautiful processional march around the spring, in time to the weird playing of the priests above. After three times circling around, the group stood facing the west, and at certain signals sprinkled large handfuls of sacred meal in the direction of the water. This was followed by a most profuse scattering of babos in the same manner. Literally hundreds of them were thus thrown, and I gathered (after the celebrants were gone) scores of them for my collection. The babos used on this occasion were mere downy feathers to which cotton strings were attached. The effect as the meal and the feathers were thrown was remarkably beautiful, and the scene was most impressive; none the less so for its strangeness and peculiarity.

These concluded the ceremonies at this spring. In the meantime the chief priest had gone to his house over the hill, and from there had started out a group of young men who were to race to the spring near the mesa—four miles away. It was a scorching hot day—as I had found out to my own cost—and yet these young men bounded over the sandy trail like hunted deer. It was a glorious sight to witness them. Ten or a dozen athletic youths, clad scantily, their bronzed figures in perfect proportion, revealing their strength and power, their long black hair waving out behind them, darting off like strings from a bow across the desert.

Slowly we followed them, and when we arrived at the other spring found they had long ago passed it, and the victor received his reward. Racing constitutes a large part of the sacred ceremonies, for it is a religion to them dance is a prayer for rain, which, according to the Hopi's ideas, is stored in vast reservoirs in the heavens. He also believes that there are vast water supplies under the earth, and so, every other year, he petitions the powers that govern and control these subterranean reservoirs to loosen the waters and let them flow forth into the springs. In one of the dances they symbolize the water from above and the water from below by linking the Hopi mind as the cross has to the Christian. This is an interesting fact that writers on the origin of this symbol have not yet noticed.

AN EXAMPLE.

There are some who have characterized our advocacy of the general introduction of water meters as the senseless support of an impractical theory. There is evidence to be found on every side, however, that it is far from impractical. An excellent example of the efficacy of the water meters is to be found in the city of Camden.

Camden, which has a population of 78,000, controls its own water works. Water meters were installed and there was an immediate reduction in the amount of water used while the receipts to the city were increased. The burden came off those who were using but little water and went where it belonged, on the shoulders of the largest consumers. The situation there is summed up in the Camden Courier, as follows:

"Under the present management the city Water Department has improved greatly and during the past year, despite the fact that the daily pumpage has fallen off, the receipts have greatly increase, and at same time there are fewer delinquents than ever.

"The receipts for 1900 were $100,-662.31. The receipts for last year were $170,375.08, making an increase in the collections last year of $9,722.-98.

"The delinquents for 1900 amounted to $1,043, while last year it was only $696.

Chief Toms gives out the following figures showing the average daily pumpage each month during the past year:

January, 13,487,906; February, 12,-465,667; March, 12,455,620; April, 12,005,526; May, 13,530,972; June, 12,-349,230; July, 12,695,301; August, 12,-365,691; September, 10,934,457; October, 10,807,731; November, 10,574,633; December, 11,354,135.

"For the year this is an average daily pumpage of 12,195,580 gallons compared with 14,110,915 gallons each day during 1900.

Clerk Fithian credits the increase in receipts and the decrease in pumpage to the meters that have recently been introduced."

THE CITY OFFICES.

It is not surprising that a report should gain credence that the contemplated change of the city offices is the result of politics. There are many who believe that public officials never act unless they have some political reason for so doing. In this case, however, the persons concerned would lead to strengthen the belief.

J. D. Coward, in whose building the offices are now located, has been a member of the faction in the First ward which has fought that of which City Clerk J. T. MacMurray is the dominant spirit. David C. Smalley, one of the owners of the Smalley building, has been a firm adherant of Mr. MacMurray. In many cities, there would be nothing strange in the faction in power taking patronage from the opposition and conferring it on its friends.

It so happens that the members of the Common Council are men who can be trusted not to injure the city's interests for their own gain. By their past acts, they have proved that they have conducted the city affairs on business principles. If they find that they can favor their friends and protect the city at the same time, they will probably do so. One member of the Common Council has said that the decision which the Common Council will reach will be strictly on business lines and there is no reason to believe differently.

Both sites for the city offices have their advantages and disadvantages. The question seems to have settled down as to whether or not the gain to the city coming from a change to the Smalley building will be equal to the increase in the cost. While the new offer made by Mr. Coward has put a different phase on the situation and may possibly result in a continuation of the city offices in their present quarters, the impression prevails generally that the decision of the Council is likely to be in favor of the Smalley building.

MUST OBEY THE LAW.

The fact has been brought out in police court that some of the local saloon keepers have been singularly forgetful of the provisions of the city ordinances which prohibit the sale of liquor to minors. In some cases, the mistake is somewhat excusable as the young person may look much older than they really are. In others, however, the slightest glance would tell that the would-be purchaser was under age.

One of the acts of the Common Council at the regular February meeting will be to consider the applications for licenses for saloons in this city. Considering the fact that the voters of Plainfield have, by their ballots, only recently testified to their belief that licenses should be granted, it is not to be supposed that the members of the Common Council will do otherwise than obey those instructions. It will be perfectly in order, however, for the Council to refuse to renew any licenses when it can be shown that the proprietor of the establishment has been neglectful in his observation of the city ordinances.

When the subject of licenses comes up, the Common Council should not fail to look into this subject of selling to minors and close up any saloon where there is evidence that the law is being repeatedly broken. While it may be extremely difficult to secure conviction for offending that part of the city law, the Common Council has the right to refuse any application and is not compelled to give any reason therefor. If the city officials are convinced the law is being violated, the time to act will be when the licenses are before the Common Council.

Of the fifty years which have gone to make up the career of the parish of Grace Episcopal church, thirty-one of them have seen Rev. Erskine M. Rodman as rector. He has spent the best years of his life laboring for the spiritual and material welfare of the people of the parish. He has brought it from a small and unimportant parish to be one of the most influential, if not the most influential parish in the diocese. During those thirty-one years, the people have learned to love and to admire the man who has worked so well in their behalf. Outside of his parish, Rev. Mr. Rodman has a host of friends who know his worth.

Eleven yeras ago, the Salvation Army first made its appearance in Plainfield streets. Since that time it has kept steadily at its work, slowly but surely overcoming the various obstacles in its path. It met a severe set-back when the division in that organization, led by Gen. Ballington Booth, took away nearly every local worker. The Army has gradually recovered the lost ground and is today showing as it ever was in this vicinity. The public celebration of its anniversary, which took place Sunday, is likely to further increase its strength and efficiency.

The Common Council passed an ordinance permitting local barbers to keep open only six days in the week. It was done at the request of the barbers themselves who feared that merely a mutual agreement would not be sufficiently binding. The first arrest under the provisions of that ordinance was made Sunday at the request of the other barbers. The only excuse given was that the offending barber did it for the accommodation of his customers.

City Judge Runyon is going to try a new scheme to keep the offending hackmen in line. While arrests among the hackmen are frequent, there are countless violations which the police do not see. If the present ordinance does not serve the purpose for which it was intended, let the Common Council provide one that will.

WORKS ON CHARITY.

Some Valuable Volumes Just Added to the Public Library.

Valuable to all philanthropic workers especially, and to all students of sociology is the set of the Proceedings of the National Conference of Charities and Correction, recently added to the Public Library, the gift of Col. Mason W. Tyler. These volumes are made up of contributions of specialists in all lines of social work and there is nothing better to which to refer students of these subjects. Dr. Canfield, librarian of Columbia University, says of them that they "constitute the very best source of information on charitable subjects which we possess in this (Columbia University) Library." In order that they may be of the greatest help, they have been placed in the circulating department.

As soloist, he is one of the best known concert and oratorio singers at all the leading musical festivals of the country. W. Paulding DeNike, 'cellist, will also appear at this concert, which promises to be one of the most interesting affairs of the season.

MARRIED MEN WON AGAIN

VICTORIOUS IN SECOND OF SERIES AT "COCKED HAT."

Rolled on Park Club Alleys With the Bachelors Saturday Evening.

The Benedicts downed the Bachelors Saturday evening in the second of the series of "cocked hat," arranged to take place on the bowling alleys of the Park Club. They won by a margin of thirty-three pins, but the victory put the married bowlers in high feather for they had won the series.

In the straight game the Bachelors had outbowled the Benedicts and the excitement ran high on that account in this match. Many of the members of the club gathered Saturday evening and they made lots of noise in urging on their favorite team.

This was the cry of the unmarried men as they tried to put enthusiasm into the play:

Bachelors, Bachelors,
Hear us yell.
Bachelors, Bachelors,
We bowl like ——

Suffice it to say the last line was not finished and the silence was made more impressive than the missing word. The Benedicts also made constant use of a call like this:

One, two, three,
Who are we?
We are the Benedicts,
Hully Gee.

THEATRICAL.

From the rise to the fall of the curtain the interim of three hours is literally jammed with feature after feature, dramatic, musical and spectacular, superbly novel and original, which appeals to the intelligence, enchants the eye and charms the ear. There is romantic drama, comedy, musical specialties, ballet, processions and a marvelous blending of dazzling color effects in scenery and costumes. A stronger response to the artistic in the American mind was never made than that in the ballet of "The Four Seasons" and in the wonderfully graceful gyrations of the flying Grigolatis. These features are a whole entertainment in themselves. Viola Gillete, who plays Prince Charming, has made a great hit in this character. The management of the Broadway Theatre will promptly respond to all orders for seats sent by mail, accompanied by remittance, directed to Jacob Litt, proprietor.

A NEW PRESIDENT.

John O'Keefe Elected as Head of Benedical Society.

At a meeting of the Aluminum Press Company's Benedical Society, held Saturday evening, John O'Keeffe was elected president in the place made vacant by the resignation of Alex. Muir. Reports for the past year were read by the secretary and treasurer and showed the organization to be in a flourishing condition, both financially and numerically.

Not As Bad as Pictured.

John S. Johnston, of Norwood avenue, who recently received a letter from a friend in Hackettstown, says that the small-pox at the latter place is not near as bad as pictured in the New York papers. His friend informed him that most cases were very light and that there has not been any spread of the disease for some time past.

Attractions at Park Club.

The entertainment committee of the Park Club announces that there will be music for dancing at the club Saturday evening, and that on Tuesday evening Jan. 28, there will be progressive hearts. The date for the Easter dance has been changed from Monday, March 31, to Thursday evening April 3.

LITERARY.

The Century's "Year of American Humor" continues to present fresh contributions in this department from writers both well known and new. Two brand-new contributors to magazine literature in this field to be introduced in the February Century are Miss Beatrice Herford, who has been induced to print one of her well-known monologues, "The Book-Agent," and John Charles McNeill, a new writer of negro dialect from North Carolina. Other humorous contributions in the same number are "The Don't Harry Club," by Albert Bigelow Paine; "A Government of the People," a story of Oklahoma, by J. W. Piercy of Indianapolis; "An Irish Mother," by Elene Foster; a delightful glimpse of Artemus Ward as a lecturer, by Charles J. Woodbury; and contributions by Guy Wetmore Carryl, Charles Battell Loomis and others. The illustrations for these sketches are by Justice, Kemble, Keller, Steele, Herford and Blaisdell. New accessions are announced to the already advertised list of contributors, including among others, Thomas Nelson Page.

Scribner's Magazine has seldom a better union of a great subject with the right man to treat it than in the series which begins in the January number on "The American 'Commercial Invasion' of Europe." Frank A. Vanderlip on resigning his position as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury last Spring went to Europe with letters from the highest American officials to the Ministers of Finance and other leaders in industry and commerce in all the great nations. Fresh from an intimate association with the industrial and financial problems in this country he was peculiarly fitted by aptitude and training to appreciate the bearings of this problem abroad. The key-note of his article is that "The industrial world is as yet by no means prostrate at our feet. We have before us a long campaign of hard work." It is the aim of Mr. Vanderlip's articles to point out the directions in which this hard work must be done. They have been written with unusual clearness and vivacity so that the general reader will find them as entertaining as the capitalist and manufacturer will find them instructive. Illustrated short fiction has a prominent place in this number. The story of the return of an artist from Paris to the "Pennyrile" district of Kentucky is most amusingly and even pathetically described by Ewan Macpherson. The illustrations by Keller are reproduced in color. F. Hopkinson Smith's serial gives "Oliver Horn's" experience while looking for a job in New York. The amusing Bohemians who are to figure in the story make their first appearance. Artists of distinction furnish illustrations for many of the articles. Among them are Walter Appleton Clark, Otto Bacher, Rene Lelong and Will H. Low. Peixotto furnishes beautiful illustrations accompanying the first of Mrs. Edith Wharton's charming articles on Art Impressions of Italy. This one is about Parma.

A Benefit Planned.

A number of friends of Robert Wood, of South Second street, who has been ill for some time past, are arranging to give a dance for his benefit. He had only recovered from many weeks sickness when his wife was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital, where she is now undergoing treatment. A committee has been appointed to arrange details consisting of John Dixon, Thomas Kane, Fred Beekman and George Babcock.

MUSICAL EVENING AT CASINO A SUCCESS

Fine Array of Vocal and Instrumental Artists Gave a Delightful Programme.

MISS WARE'S FINE WORK

POEMS OF LANIER AND MARKHAM WERE SUNG AND RECITED.

Affair Given for Benefit of Congregational Church Choir Under Direction of Alfred E. Holmes.

For the benefit of the Congregational church choir, its "First Musical Evening" was given at the Casino, last Monday, and it was greatly enjoyed by a large audience. The affair was given under the direction of Alfred E. Holmes and to him is due the credit for a successful evening's entertainment.

A number of vocal and instrumental artists appeared and took their parts exceptionally well. The programme was divided into two parts. At the outset of part one, Miss Cora E. Guild, a soprano of rare ability, rendered a number of original compositions from the songs of Sidney Lanier. She was followed by Miss Aimee Gertrude Emmons who recited several selections from the same source. Miss Edith Roberts, a violinist of much merit, varied the programme by playing Romance from the second Concerto of Wienawski and Serenade Andalosia by Godard. Some compositions, written for Edwin Markham's poems by Miss Ware, were rendered in a fine tenor voice by Charles Kaiser.

The second part opened with Verdi's Rigoletto Quartette sung by Miss Guild, Mrs. Worcester, Mr. Kaiser and Mr. Holmes. Miss Edith Roberts then again favored the audience with Mendelssohn's Andante and Finale Concerto. Mrs. Worcester, of Westfield, who was formerly Miss Katherine Krymer and well known here, gave a contralto selection from Mignon. Decidedly popular with the audience was Miss Emmons who appeared as a reciter in a clever little selection. She was followed by a baritone solo, "The Serenade," by Alfred E. Holmes. Miss Harriet Ware appeared and gave as a piano selection an original waltz. Closing the programme was Faning's "Song of the Vikings," arranged as a quartette selection and sung by Miss Guild; Mrs. Worcester, Mr. Kaiser and Mr. Holmes.

Miss Ware acted as accompanist in all instances where the poems of Lanier and Markham were sung or recited, the settings being of her own composition. She demonstrated that she is an artist of a high standard and her work was fully appreciated.

In all other selections Miss Rosetta Wiener acted as accompanist and she achieved much success.

A PARISH FOR FIFTY YEARS

Grace Episcopal Church Celebrated Its Semi-Centennial at Sunday's Services.

BISHOP WAS PRESENT.

Four Services Were Held During the Day—Many Visitors in Attendance—Elaborate Musical Services—Bishop Scarborough Preached at Morning Service.

An epoch in the history of Grace Episcopal church was marked Sunday with services impressive and beautiful. It was in the nature of a jubilee, the occasion being the semi-centennial of the parish. The highest dignitary of the church in the diocese, a large number of priests and the fine vested choir made the celebration a memorable occasion.

Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, the venerable rector, who for over thirty-one years has ministered to the spiritual welfare of the parishioners, had the hearty co-operation of a faithful vestry in planning the jubilee, and it was a crowning effort in the life of the church. There were four distinct services. First there was an early celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 7:30 o'clock. The 10:30 o'clock service consisted of litany, sermon and a second celebration. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the children of the parish had their exercises. The closing service was at 7:30 o'clock in the evening.

At each service the body of the edifice was crowded for not only did the congregation of the particular church itself take an interest in the jubilee but all Episcopalians in this vicinity, rejoicing in the achievements of the parish, joined in the jubilee. No little factor in the splendid services was the well rendered church music, under the direction of Mrs. William A. Freeman, the choirmaster and organist. The edifice had been specially adorned for the event. The Christmas greens were still in place and added to these were bright flowers, masses of lilies on the high altar being a striking feature in this connection.

Rev. Mr. Rodman officiated at the plain celebration at 7:30 o'clock in the morning. He was assisted by Rev. J. H. Wilson, the curate. A large number of the members of the parish received communion. At 10:30 o'clock there was a procession preceding the service. The choir, led by the crucifer and acolytes marched down the right aisle, followed by the priests and bishop, Rt. Rev. Dr. Scarborough. Before the clergy was raised the choir banner. As the body moved up the main aisle, a pause was made at the chancel steps where the bishop blessed the new litany desk, given as a memorial by the Pittis family. It is particularly ornate, being of brass and oak, wrought in a rich ecclesiastical design. Rev. Mr. Rodman acted as gospeller and Rev. Mr. Wilson as epistoler. Rev. Dr. W. H. Neilson, of the diocese of West Virginia, was the litaner. The sermon was delivered by the bishop, who chose as his text Leviticus, xxv, 10—"It shall be a jubilee unto you." The prelate mainly dwelt upon the advance of Grace church during the fifty years of its existence, and made reference to the progress of humanity, the State and the Episcopal church at large during this period. Incidently he spoke on the importance of setting apart one day for the worship of God, and emphasized his belief, not in an American nor in a Continental Sunday, but rather in a God's Sunday. In closing he paid a glowing tribute to the work of the rector.

The full vested choir sang magnificently. In the litany hymn, "Saviour when in dust to Thee," Miss Cornelia Miller, soprano, and William Tallamy, tenor, rendered solos and in the brilliant offertory anthem, "The heavens are telling," there was a trio part taken by Miss Miller, Mr. Tallamy, and Arthur Pennington. Miss Beatrice Minor, also, Miss Miller and Mr. Tallamy also rendered solos in the Agnus Dei, as arranged by King Hall in C. In the communion office the Bishop was the celebrant. Rev. Mr. Rodman acted as deacon and Rev. Mr. Wilson as sub-deacon, Rev. Dr. Neilson also assisting.

In the afternoon the Sunday-school children assembled in the parish house and marched in a body to the church, where services were held. Both the rector and the bishop made appropriate addresses. The remarks of the bishop were at once eloquent and timely. Assisting in the service were the curate and Rev. Dr. Neilson and Rev. W. Bryce Morrow.

Another procession marked the commencement of the choral evening service. The wardens and vestries of the Church of the Holy Cross, the Church of the Heavenly Rest, and St. Stephen's, all of Greater Plainfield, and delegations from All Saints', Fanwood, Trinity, Cranford, and St. John's, Somerville, attended the service. In the chancel were the bishop of the diocese, the rector and curate of the parish, and Rev. W. Montgomery Downey, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross; Rev. R. G. Quennell, rector of the Ascension Memorial chapel, New York, now the only surviving former rector of the parish; Rev. W. R. Mulford, rector of All Saints', Fanwood; Rev. J. Edgecumbe, rector of Trinity, Cranford; Rev. H. B. Wright, rector of St. John's, Somerville; Rev. Dr. W. H. Neilson, of the diocese of West Virginia; and Rev. W. Bryce Morrow, of the diocese of Pennsylvania.

GRACE P. E. CHURCH.

The opening of the service was taken by Rev. Mr. Wilson. Rev. Mr. Wright was first lector and Rev. Mr. Downey second. The creed and prayers were intoned by Rev. Mr. Morrow. Mr. Freeman and Miss Miller rendered solos and they together with Miss Beatrice Miner and Mr. Tallamy sang as a quartette, "While All Things Were in Quiet Silence." Rev. Mr. Quennell preached. His text was Romans i, 12—"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." He impressed his hearers with the fact that their gifts to God should not be limited to gold, but that they should offer themselves unto the Heavenly Father. In the offertory anthem, 'Holy Art Thou," Mr. Tallamy and Miss Miller, took the solo parts. Stainer's sevenfold amen to the benediction said by the bishop, was particularly effective.

The present officers of the church are: Rector, Rev. Erskine M. Rodman; curate, Rev. J. H. Wilson; wardens, DeWitt C. Ivins and Marion S. Ackerman; vestrymen, Edward H. Booth, William T. Goughm, Lewis G. Timpson, Charles E. Brooks, Orville G. Waring, Arthur Masters and Julius E. Erickson; organist and choirmaster, Mrs. William A. Freeman.

The alms basin contained $1,543 as a result of the golden offertory, and it is expected that it will be increased to $2,000 when all the contributions are received.

The history of the parish dates back to Sunday, Jan. 11, 1852, when Rev. Philemon E. Coe, then living at Westfield, ministered to a little flock. At first he became minister-in-charge and subsequently he served as rector for a period of six years. He advanced the money to build a modest church edifice.

The church was consecrated March 21, 1870, by Bishop Odenheimer, the corner stone having been laid July 13, 1854 by Bishop George W. Doane. Shortly after the date of consecration, the edifice was enlarged and while the addition was being made, the congregation held services in Laing's hall. Upon the resignation of Rev. Mr. Coe, in 1858, Rev. W. W. Sever was chosen rector. After a short rectorate, he was succeeded by Rev. J. Le Grand Finney. Rev. R. G. Quennell came to the parish in 1863 and was followed by Rev. S. C. Thrall. Three years later he was succeeded by Rev. Charles M. Fox, who remained until 1870. Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, the present rector, entered upon his duties November 1, 1870.

The original church edifice occupied a site on East Front street, near Richmond street. In 1875, it was decided that the needs of the parish called for a more central location of the church property. On May 18, 1876, the last services were held in the old building and it was taken down and removed to the corner of Sixth and Sycamore streets.

Plans were perfected for an imposing church building to be erected at the corner of Seventh and Sycamore streets. The corner stone of this structure was laid by Bishop Scarborough July 12, 1876. This old building is now used as a parish house. It served the purpose of a house of worship again from October 15, 1876, until the new church was ready for use in 1892.

On Easter day, 1892, the first service was held in the present edifice. On that occasion Bishop Scarborough was present and he acted as celebrant at the Holy Communion office as he did yesterday morning.

From a struggling band of thirty members the parish was grown until now it is a congregation of wealth and influence for good in the community. In the diocese it occupies an important position. In the church councils it is prominent and has always contributed largely to the various funds of the diocese.

PARK CLUB'S ENTERTAINMENT

A MONOLOGUE, A SYMPHONY AND A ONE ACT SKETCH.

The Entertainment Committee Has Arranged It For Friday Evening.

That heretofore the Park Club has been very liberal in its provision of free entertainment is well known. Some of the members think that the management has been too free in this respect and to change this programme a little, the entertainment committee, of which Mrs. Charles A. Reed is the able chairman, has arranged for a symphony concert, together with a dramatic entertainment and other attractions. This will be given Friday evening, January 17, at the Park Club.

The entertainment will open with a monologue by that well-known resident of the borough, William L. Saunders. The former Mayor is equal to the occasion and his introduction will be a source of pleasure to all. Following this part the symphony will be given by twenty members of the club. Mrs. Reed will have charge of this and Mr. Guilford will be the leader. The symphony will depict a sleighing party and there will be no end to the fun.

After the symphony there will be a one-act play given by Miss Grace E. Overton, Miss Edith L. Burt and Morgan T. Townsend. Those who have enjoyed similar performances by these young women, are assured of a pleasing production. It is proposed to charge an admission fee and the entertainment committee has no doubt whatever that the clubhouse will be too small to accomodate all who will want to attend. This need not deter persons from purchasing tickets, however, for all who attend will be made comfortable.

Following Mr. Viljoen, James E. Martine made a brief address and an appeal for funds to which the audience responded liberally. Mr. Martine also stated that petitions would be presented the citizens during the next few weeks to be signed, requesting Congress to intercede in behalf of the Boers.

The lecturer closed with a display of stereopticon views which greatly enhanced the interest in the subject. Pictures of the Boer country and famous officers of the Transvaal and Free State Republics and their officers were shown.

SALVATION ARMY HELD ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

Sunday Marked Completion of Eleven Years of Its Labor in Plainfield.

A DECIDED SUCCESS.

LIEUT. COL. GIFFORD AND NATIONAL STAFF BAND WERE HERE.

Band Festival Saturday — Four Services Yesterday—Big Demonstration at Y. M. C. A. Hall in the Evening.

Special services, marking the eleventh anniversary of its establishment, in this city, were held Saturday evening and at intervals throughout yesterday by the local corps of the Salvation Army. The Plainfield corps was assisted by Lieutenant-Colonel Gifford and the principal staff and the national staff band, composed of sixteen pieces.

The anniversary was a decided success. The attendance at all the services was very large and many announced their faith in Christ after hearing the impressive discourses given by the leaders.

Saturday evening the attraction was a band festival, taking place in Reform Hall. The musical organization, which consists of skilled players on brass instruments, discoursed familiar hymns, while the members also sang. The band was in charge of Major Gooding, while Major Wilder, division officer, of Newark, assisted.

Sunday's programme began in the morning at 7 o'clock with a knee drill, another term for an hour of prayer. It was followed at 11 o'clock by a holiness convention conducted by Colonel Gifford. In the afternoon there were two meetings, one in the large hall at the Y. M. C. A. and the other at army headquarters. Major Atkins was in charge at the latter while Colonel Gifford was the other leader. Other speakers at these services were Majors Gooding and Harris, Staff Captain Pike, Adjutants Black and Durand and Brigadier Reinhardson.

The concluding service was held last evening and was probably the most interesting of the several given. It took place in the large hall of the Y. M. C. A. and was led by Colonel Gifford. He gave a stirring talk which was followed by A. change has been made at the Sterling-Worth Sanitarium at Dunellen. Dr. Benton, of Buffalo, who has been in charge for some months, is no longer connected with the establishment. Another physician, who hails from New York, is now superintending the affairs at the institution.

Dr. Benton left suddenly one day a week ago. It is said that before his departure he gave out the statement that he intended to visit private patients at Atlantic City, N. J., and Allentown, Pa. Since then he has not been heard from. Before leaving he packed up several trunks and had them shipped away to Allentown. In explanation of this act it is said that he declared that his housekeeper intended to leave. She went with him, according to the story afloat.

A discovery was made just after Dr. Benton had gone. The water in the cellar had been turned on and over two feet of water flooded the basement. Dr. Benton's storerooms are now known. Mrs. Lucy Childs, of Plainfield, is the owner of the establishment.

PUBLIC RECEPTION BY GRACE CHURCH'S RECTOR

Closing Event of the Jubilee Celebration Marking Semi-Centennial of That Parish.

AT THE PARISH HOUSE.

DELIGHTFUL AFFAIR GIVEN BY REV. AND MRS. RODMAN MONDAY.

Musical Selections Were Rendered During the Evening—Members of Parish Assisted in Receiving the Guests.

As a fitting climax to the jubilee celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of Grace Episcopal church, a public reception was held by the rector and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Erskine M. Rodman, in the parish building last Monday. In many respects it was a brilliant affair and served to tighten the bond of unity existing in what is one of the foremost parishes of the diocese of New Jersey.

The guild room and the Sunday-school room as well were elaborately decorated, much good taste being shown in the pleasing arrangements. Herbert Harold's orchestra rendered a fine programme of a varied nature throughout the reception, which lasted from 8 until 11 o'clock. All evening long a steady stream of parishioners and friends in general passed by the reception committee, offering congratulations and wishes for the future success of the church.

The reception committee consisted of Rev. and Mrs. Rodman, Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt C. Ivins, Mr. and Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Booth, Mr. and Mrs. William T. Gough, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis G. Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Masters, Mr. and Mrs. Julius E. Erickson, and Orville G. Waring.

Various refreshment tables were scattered about the rooms. Those at the ice cream table were Mrs. Hugh Hastings, Mrs. Thomas Minford, Mrs. Electa S. Craft, and Mrs. Louis Borsum; those at the lemonade table were Mrs. R. H. Depew, Mrs. Charles King, Mrs. William Pelletier and Miss Jennie Hazlett. Pouring tea were Mrs. O. T. Waring, Mrs. J. W. Rinehart, Mrs. C. L. Innes, Mrs. E. M. Brickson, Mrs. E. L. Finch and Mrs. Burgess.

A Profitable Investment.

"I was troubled for about seven years with my stomach and in bed half my time," says E. Demick, Somerville, Ind. "I spent about $1,000 and never could get anything to help me until I tried Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I have taken a few bottles and am entirely well." You don't live by what you eat, but by what you digest and assimilate. If your stomach doesn't digest your food you are really starving. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure does the stomach's work by digesting the food. You don't have to diet. Eat all you want. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cures all stomach troubles. L. W. Randolph.

Children Especially Liable.

Burns, bruises and cuts are extremely painful and if neglected often result in blood poisoning. Children are especially liable to such mishaps because not so careful. As a remedy DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve is unequalled. Draws out the fire, stops the pain, soon heals the wound. Beware of counterfeits. Sure cure for piles. "DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cured my baby of eczema after two physicians gave her up," writes James Mock, Mt. Wesner, Ind. "The sores were so bad she scilled two to five dresses a day." L. W. Randolph.

BETTER SERVICE IS COMING SAY THE CENTRAL OFFICIALS

Delegation From the Local Board of Trade Presented Plainfield's Present Grievances to Them January 8.

CONFERENCE HELD IN NEW YORK.

A FEW CHANGES AT NORTH AVENUE STATION MAY BE EXPECTED VERY SOON.

Tickets Will Continue As At Present—Vice President Warren and General Passenger Agent Burt Received the Visitors—Mr. Warren Did the Talking—No West-Bound Ticket Office—Mr. Warren Favored the "White Fence"—All Plainfield's Kicks Were Outlined for Official's Benefit.

Better train service in the near future is the sole bright prospect which Plainfielders may anticipate as a result of a prolonged conference held Wednesday, January 8, between officials of the New Jersey Central Railroad Company and a committee of the local Board of Trade. The meeting took place in the directors' room of the company's building on Liberty street, New York, and the many grievances received a thorough airing.

Vice President Warren and General Passenger Agent Burt were the men who listened to the complaint and I. B. Woolston, Charles W. Runyon, Charles W. Eoff, and J. F. MacDonald were the delegates from the Board of Trade. In some respects the discussion was unsatisfactory. Vice President Warren showed a decided disposition to evade answering pertinent questions, but was quite anxious to hear what the general public thinks of the road. All through the conversation he made light of the items in the bill of complaint. Mr. Burt had little to say. In fact he only spoke when direct questions were put to him by members of the committee concerning the change in the rates of transportation.

One at a time all the various faults which the people have to find with the present management of the road were enumerated but as a rule no answer was made until after the committee had finished. To sum it all up in a few words, the citizens may rest assured that the company will not grant a request for a ticket office at the old station. Neither will it make any changes in the prices of tickets now in use. Some improvements will be made to the old station and the unsightly condition presented by boarded up windows will be remedied.

The committee was ushered into the directors' room by a clerk, and at 3:55 o'clock Mr. Warren, followed by Mr. Burt, entered and greeted the Plainfielders. Immediately Mr. Warren unfolded a communication setting forth the complaints received from the Board of Trade and signed by its secretary, Harry C. Runyon. He at once asked for "Mr. Runyon" and Charles W. Runyon responded but explained that he was not the writer of the letter.

"Well he's the only gentleman I made an appointment with," said Mr. Warren. "Who are you, gentlemen?" he continued.

Mr. Woolston volunteered the information that he and his friends appeared on behalf of the Board of Trade, and that the secretary was unable to be present. Quickly Mr. Warren intimated that he had nothing to discuss with the committee. "What's the Board of Trade of Plainfield got to do with New Jersey Central Railroad affairs?" asked the official with an apparently surprised air.

"Why, we've got this to do with it," responded Mr. Woolston, "we're all interested in our city. If we didn't take action, who would? People come to us with complaints and we want to see Plainfield have good service."

In a polite manner, Mr. Warren stated that he thought the matter beneath the dignity of a Board of Trade. "What you are doing is hurting Plainfield more than our company could in ten years. Agitating the matter and stirring up newspaper notoriety is harmful to the city." He added that it was not his affair, but he merely took the liberty of expressing an opinion. The result was that he would consent to listen to the grievances. In a friendly spirit he explained that it was not in the jurisdiction of the board to take up the matter, for the commuters and other passengers should come direct to the company with complaints.

"If they did," retorted Mr. Woolston, "you would have to entertain the whole of Plainfield." Mr. Warren appeared to think it strange that the people should be so dissatisfied and yet not formally state their grievances in person.

Taking up the letter before mentioned, Mr. Warren read the first count, which drew attention to the unsightly appearance presented by the boarding up of one end of the old station. This he wanted explained, particularly as he suggested that it was natural for anyone to protect valuable property when stored.

"Why aren't curtains drawn down before the rough boards?" he asked. The official thought they should be, but he was informed that there were no curtains. The appearance to strangers was what the committee found fault with, and Mr. Warren agreed that there was ground for complaint in this particular matter. He professed ignorance in the matter, claiming that he had never noticed the boards. From his attitude it is safe to predict that those boards will disappear in the near future.

The second complaint was confined to an attack on the management of the passenger and freight departments. He did not read the entire sentence but broke off inquiring what the people had to do with the manner in which the company transacted its business. After a little explanation he was set right by reading the remainder of the paragraph and found that it was the service given by these departments which was brought in question. He requested full particulars.

Mr. Woolston declared that so far as he was concerned there was no fault to be found with the freight department, but he had something to say in regard to the passenger service, which he stigmatized as poor.

Mr. Eoff drew attention to the taking off of trains, especially the east bound train leaving here at 3:37 o'clock in the morning. Many persons suffered inconvenience by the withdrawal of this train he said, as it left people without a train from 2:17 o'clock until after 5 o'clock on many occasions. The 3:37 o'clock train, said he, is generally very late and it is a hardship on the community. Other trains which are still on the time table are generally delayed. The 3:37 o'clock, he declared, gave good service because it started from Dunellen and was always on time.

Mr. Warren would not answer any question put to him by Mr. Eoff and seemed somewhat angered at the inquiries.

"Is that all, gentlemen?" said he. It was made very clear that it was not all, and each member of the committee in turn cited instances of bad service. Mr. Eoff, who was very forcible in his manner, asked why it was that when a passenger reached Jersey City a boat would leave just a few seconds before, thus delaying the man for some time. "Put yourself in the shoes of the fellow who is left at the ferry, how would you feel? That's the way to look at it," added Mr. Eoff. This was subsequently dwelt upon by Mr. Warren.

"What else have you to say?" put in Mr. Warren impatiently. Several members of the committee spoke up at once, but all gave way to Mr. Woolston. He cited the condition of the tunnel at the North Avenue station, which, he declared, is a dangerous place at night on account of its poorly lighted condition. There are but two small electric lights in that tunnel, said he. This Mr. Warren did not discuss, for he appeared anxious to hear more.

Then attention was called to the wretched condition of the pathway at night, from the intersection of Byron more street, on East Fourth street, to the new station.

"There is not an electric light on that path and it's a dangerous place," said Mr. Woolston.

"Why don't you place lights on the path?" he responded.

"We did ask the Council to do it, but were told that there was a light on the street and that your company had changed the path and further it belonged to the company."

"Well I think it should be lighted and I will look into it," was Mr. Warren's final remark.

No sooner was this part of the argument concluded than the matter of the condition of lights at the station itself taken up. "It's as dark as a dungeon," said Mr. Woolston with emphasis. Mr. Warren thought he was exaggerating the condition, but Mr. Runyon, who had brought up the subject, declared that his fellow committeeman was not far wrong for he had witnessed the state of affairs himself.

"They turn on the lights outside the station when they see the headlight of the incoming train and turn them off just as soon as the passengers get abroad," said Mr. Runyon. The official explained that this was simply business and that all the lights could not be kept continually lighted. What Mr. Runyon objected to was the apparent meanness of the company in allowing the lights to be lit for so short a time. "You must remember the passenger who gets off as well as the one who gets on the train," said he. Continuing he explained that place was so dark that the man getting off was in danger of falling.

Mr. Warren did not think that it could be possible that the lights were lighted for so short a time, and he jotted down a few notes apparently with the intention of righting this condition of affairs.

Mr. Eoff drew attention to the fact that on the south track the ground has not been properly levelled off and a person alighting from a train was in danger of sustaining a severe fall. He cited one case where a friend of his did fall. This also was news to the Vice President and it can be taken for granted that this will be remedied.

Mr. Woolston brought up the subject of ticket offices. He declared that the public suffered much inconvenience in having to cross under the tunnel to the south side to purchase a ticket when taking a west bound train. This is especially inconvenient, he declared. He had understood that the company would place a ticket office in the north station as well. Mr. Warren made it understood that the company had made no promise in this respect and from his manner it is evident that there is no prospect whatever for the restoration of the old ticket office.

It was pointed out that the public is as badly off as in olden times in this respect and even worse. In the old ticket office there were two windows and at the beginning of each month there were two ticket agents there to avoid any inconvenient delays. It was shown that under the present condition of affairs there is but one window in the new station and that as a result people are packed thirty deep sometimes trying to obtain tickets. "If a man gets on the train without a ticket," said Mr. Eoff, "he has to bear the consequences." "Sometimes men miss their trains in this way." Several notable instances were cited, one being of a business man who missed an important engagement on this account.

Then again Mr. Eoff said that some strangers were deceived by the appearance of the old ticket stand. They would wait there, thinking the windows would be opened, and in consequence miss the train. "Well," said Mr. Warren, "I can avoid that by removing the building altogether."

Then Mr. Woolston broke in and said that he had thought it not a bad thing to do away with the old structure and have the ground for a park. "That was exactly what we were considering at one time," responded Mr. Warren. The official then gave it out that the old station would be remodelled to conform architecturally with the new station. This he said would be done by removing the second story of the structure and taking away the projecting roof.

Mr. Warren was certainly diplomatic in handling the committee. As soon as a question would be put to him the official would turn the subject and fire a counter-question at the committee. Mr. Burt would sit quietly by and only smile occasionally.

Both Mr. Woolston and Mr. Eoff addressed the General Passenger Agent in regard to the change of the tickets. They asked why the company practically charged ninety cents for a round trip ticket. They explained that the new ten trip ticket sells for $4.50, which is at the rate of ninety cents a round trip, while the regular fifty trip ticket sells for $18, or in other words seventy-two cents for the round trip. The excursion ticket is $1.

Mr. Burt explained that really no change had been made but that a new inducement had been made for families to buy the ten trip ticket. Mr. Eoff declared that it meant a raise of at least ten cents, and that in his opinion the road should sell the ten trip ticket for $3.60, being at the rate of seventy-two cents for the round trip.

"The people of Plainfield think the officials have no sympathy for them," declared Mr. Eoff, with force, at this juncture.

"That is false," said Mr. Warren with no little amount of vehemence. "I won't permit you to repeat that statement again."

"Well that's the impression," retorted Mr. Eoff.

The official repeated his declaration, whereupon Mr. Eoff said that probably his statement was a trifle broad, but anyway the people think the company is against them. This Mr. Warren disclaimed, and said that the company is not responsible for impressions. No satisfaction was given the committee in this matter, Mr. Warren explaining that he was not there to discuss the merits of that controversy.

Mr. Woolston called the official's attention to the fact that some people wanted to move out of Plainfield because of the bad service. He recalled to Mr. Warren's attention the fact that he had expressed the desire two years ago that people would be able to set their watches by the arrival of trains. In this connection he referred to a former conversation in which Mr. Warren had told him of a western road "where the people kept account of time by the trains."

The official explained that there was a reason for not being able to have the trains on time and that he would state the reason. He then reviewed his connection with the road, from 1897 down to the present date. At that time the company was not in a position to improve its rolling stock, but that in 1899 it commenced to do so. In the spring of 1901 there was a strike, which commenced in May and lasted for eleven weeks. It was confined to the machine shops and the road was tied up for repairs. Not a repair was made to the engines and when the strike ended it was impossible to get the engines repaired at once or to buy or hire new engines.

As soon as possible orders were placed, but some delay was caused since the type of the engine was new and the steps taken were taken with caution. Sixty locomotives were ordered. The whole trouble is with the engines so far as delays of trains were concerned. Forty-five of these new engines are for passenger use and the remainder for freight. Fifty new passenger cars were ordered. The passenger service being given over to the use of Plainfielders are the best the company has and the people who use the local trains are protesting. On this ground there has been no protest by people of this city.

The first engine of those ordered will be ready in the spring, probably in May, and the others will be put in service at various intervals thereafter. When these new engines are in use, the company hopes that the service will be as it was of yore and no one will have reason to complain. Mr. Warren explained that this trouble was not confined to the New Jersey Central Railroad. The strike was the direct cause and since then the road has been handicapped. The officials are all anxious to do their best to straighten out matters.

As for the delay caused by the ferries leaving before the train arrives at Jersey City, Mr. Warren declared that he had to suffer this inconvenience himself but was compelled to put up with it. Instructions were given the engineers, as well as all others in charge of the ferries, to leave precisely on time and to make the best possible speed across the water. Those in charge of the boats are the best men in the business. The only reason they leave precisely on time is that there are other passengers on the other side waiting to come in the other direction to meet trains. Sometimes, in his own opinion, he thought that the boats should wait a few seconds but the men know their business and are responsible for the results.

Reference was made to the protests of the people of Plainfield. The Vice President declared that a woman friend of his had said after a visit to Plainfield that she would not live there where there is so much agitation. According to his statement she was utterly disgusted with the way people "kick" in this city. Fault finding here, according to his statements, is chronic. He also declared that business men had signified their intention of removing from Plainfield on this account.

He decried the agitation of the newspapers and deplored the notoriety given the road by the daily papers. The action of the committee in taking up this matter, he said, only had the effect of stirring up the newspapers, which he seemed to dread. Vice President Warren appeared to have no love for the way the newspapers act in championing this matter.

Before the talk ended, Mr. Woolston made mention of the dangerous condition presented at night by the fence between the tracks. He suggested that it be painted a light color so as to be easily distinguished. The Vice President seemed to be favorably impressed with the idea. He declared he had no knowledge about the fence but that had he known it at the time the fence was painted he would have seen that it was coated with a light colored paint.

The total result of the ninety-minutes talk which the committee had with the officials is that in the near future Plainfield will receive better service and the commuters, especially, may live in hope that "before the robins nest again" the trials and tribulations of the daily passengers will be at an end.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST CRUELTY

S. P. C. A. HAS BEGUN ACTIVITY IN UNION COUNTY.

The Legal Provisions Under Which the New Jersey Society Is Working.

The New Jersey Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals proposes to commence an active campaign against those who abuse the dumb beasts. E. P. Edwards, the president of the Union county branch of the society, intends that there be no violations of the law so far as respects this county. The work will be extended to Plainfield.

It is the aim of the society to "prevent cruelty more by inculcating the necessity and benefit of kindness than by vindictive prosecution." For hunting comes under the provisions of the law and a watch will be made to stop any violations in this regard. Another object will be to make an end to the practice of allowing horses to stand uncovered in cold weather. The society believes that "gross abuses should always be prosecuted, and also all cases of wilful or careless neglect of warning."

The act of March 23, 1883, of the laws of New Jersey, has this to say:

"Section 13. And be it enacted, that any person or persons who shall overdrive, overload, drive when overloaded, overwork, torture, torment, deprive of necessary sustenance, or cruelly beat or otherwise abuse, or needlessly mutilate or kill, or who shall by their agents, servants, employes, or otherwise, cause or procure to be overdriven, overloaded, driven when overloaded, overworked, tortured, tormented, deprived of necessary sustenance, or to be unnecessarily or cruelly beaten, or otherwise abused or needlessly mutilated and killed, any living animal or creature, and any person having the charge or custody of any living animal or creature either as owner or otherwise, who inflicts unnecessary cruelty upon the same, or unnecessarily fails to provide the same with proper food, drink, shelter or protection from the weather, and any person who shall keep or use, or in any way be connected with or interested in same, shall forfeit and pay such sum, not to exceed $100, together with costs, as the court shall determine."

FUNERAL OF I. W. PRICE.

Services Were Held From the Residence January 8.

The funeral services of the late J. Wilbur Price were held Wednesday, Jan. 8, at 2:45 o'clock from the home on Sherman avenue near Clinton avenue. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends from New York, Staten Island, Newark and Trenton, including members of the firm of the Spool Cotton Company, where Mr. Price was employed. There was a large and beautiful display of floral tributes from relatives and friends.

Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, where the deceased was an attendant, conducted the services. In the course of his remarks he referred to Mrs. Price, who died but a short time ago, of her patient character and influence in the home. He paid a rich tribute to the deceased, referring to his great devotion to his home and family. During the services Mrs. H. McBride, of the Crescent Avenue church quartette, sang impressively, "Abide With Me," and "Nearer My God to Thee."

The interment took place in Hillside cemetery, the relatives and intimate friends accompanying the remains to their last resting place.

WHO'S IN THE GRAVE?

Oran M. Fletcher Returns to His Home Just One Month After He Had Been Buried.

Oran M. Fletcher startled his parents, who live near Greenville, Pa., by walking into their home when they thought him dead and buried. He had been mourned for almost a month. That he is their son they do not doubt, but they wonder who it was that they buried.

On September 2 William M. Fletcher, who lives about two miles north of town, received a telegram from Cleveland announcing that his son, Oran M. Fletcher, had fallen dead in a restaurant. The telegram was signed by the son's wife.

Upon his arrival in Cleveland he saw the body at the morgue, and, although there was a suspicion in his mind that it might not be his son, the identification by the widow was so positive that he became satisfied. He brought the body here and the funeral was held at the family home.

After the funeral Fletcher's wife and three children came here to live with the parents. This week Mrs. Fletcher received a letter from a sister in Cleveland saying that her husband was alive. She left at once and was not here when her husband arrived.

Fletcher refuses to tell where he had been. He says that the first he knew of the affair was when he received an answer to a letter he had written to his wife's sister asking where his wife was, as she had not answered letters he had sent to her in Cleveland.

The resemblance of the dead man to Fletcher was remarkable. There was a patch on the clothing, neatly sewed, which Mrs. Fletcher said was her work.

CAMEL VERSUS TROLLEY.

A Ship of the Desert More Than Holds Its Own in a Unique Street Race at Cincinnati.

A Cincinnati special says that one of the zoo's big double-turreted camels had a race with a Vine and Clifton car on Vine street early the other morning. The complete discomfiture of the motorman, the unwieldy "ship of the desert" beat the electric car the length of several camel necks, was witnessed by a great crowd. The camel appeared before seven o'clock off Erie with an Arabian complexion. The camel went along well enough until the car threatened to knock a few blocks of fat off his slanting roof. Evidently this made the animal angry, for with a carelessly executed shriek of rage he—or she— gave a grotesque four-legged simultaneous kick at the on the thoroughfare in charge of a son vehicle. The keeper mounted the rear platform and the car buzzed down the street. The camel's feet seemed to meet at a common center, fly out four ways at the same time, his tail went up and so did his head, and the car was losing ground. A little more current was met by a little more current.

The wheels were going like mad, but the old camel lifted his tail still higher and elevated his facial expression of solemn dignity to a one-story height, his knees scarcely hopped like the curtains of an old stringy bonnet and his well-padded feet projected 40 feet jumps with absolute ease. When the car stopped at Vine and Seventh this bit of brick-a-brac from the zoo had taken up all the slack in the lead line, he had hopped past the car and was first over the crossing in a race two blocks long.

Capt. Bernier, of Quebec, is planning an expedition to the north pole. He will take with him large kites fitted with cameras. These will enable him, even if he fails to get to the pole, to take photographs of many points which he cannot reach.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS HELD LARGE BANQUET

Given in Honor of First Anniversary of Watchung Council of This City.

SPEECHES WERE MADE.

MAYOR AND OTHER DISTINGUISHED GUESTS WERE PRESENT.

M. J. Cashin Served as Toastmaster—The Other Speakers—An Elaborate Menu Was Enjoyed by Over a Hundred.

The first anniversary of Watchung Council, No. 852, Knights of Columbus, of this city, was observed in a fitting manner, January 8. A banquet, to which there were many friends bidden, was held in the dining hall of the Hotel Kensington. Over 100 knights and their friends attended the affair, which proved a big success.

The menu was particularly elaborate and everyone did it full justice. As soon as the banqueters had appeased their appetites, formal speechmaking began. Rev. Father P. E. Smyth, rector of St. Joseph's church, Jersey City, the chaplain of the council, invoked the Divine blessing. Grand Knight John A. O'Keefe made a short address of welcome, introducing the toastmaster, Chancellor M. J. Cashin. Mr. Cashin's introduction of the speakers of the evening were all in a happy vein. District Deputy John G. Coyle, of New York, made a ringing address.

Mayor O. L. Jenkins responded to the toast "Our City," and incidently he scored the New Jersey Central Railroad and the Elizabeth, Plainfield and Central Jersey Street Railway Company for the poor service rendered the public. William Holmes sang several songs and Past State Deputy James Byrnes, of East Orange, made a rattling address. A storm of applause greeted City Judge William N. Runyon, who made a speech eulogizing the aims of the order. Supreme Grand Knight Edward L. Hearn, of Boston, Mass., took the crowd by storm with his eloquent remarks. Some witty remarks were made by Charles Ward and Joseph F. O'Keefe. William J. O'Keefe spoke on "The Ladies."

Informal remarks were also made by Rev. Father Andrew M. Egan, rector of St. Mary's church, Rev. Father William Miller, rector of St. Joseph's church, City Clerk James T. MacMurray, Councilman James F. Buckle and John H. Dillman. James Stewart and William N. Runyon sang.

One of the dishes at the banquet was a sixty-eight-pound striped bass, furnished by Foss & Jeter.

Among those present at the affair were Grand Knight William Harkins, of New Brunswick, District Deputy White, of Perth Amboy, District Deputy McNamee, of Atlantic City, President of Common Council B. Frank Coriell, Councilman Frank De W. Randolph, Chas. Dunham, Dr. P. J. Zeglio, Rev. Father McGeary, curate of St. Patrick's church, Jersey City, and Rev. Father Morrison, of New Brunswick.

ALL NATIONAL GUARD GOES TO INAUGURATION

Company K, of This City, Will, Therefore, Participate in the Inaugural Parade.

HELD ON JANUARY 21.

GENERAL ORDERS ISSUED BY BRIGADIER-GENERAL WANSER.

The Troops Will Reach Trenton Not Later Than 11 o'Clock, and Will be Fed—Parade Follows Ceremonies.

It has been definitely determined that the entire National Guard of the State will participate in the ceremonies attending the inauguration of Gov.-elect Franklin Murphy at Trenton. Orders to this effect have been issued by Gen. P. Farmer Wanser, of Jersey City, the present division commander.

The First Troop, of Essex, Mr. Murphy's own county, will act as his personal escort upon that occasion. The troops are expected to arrive at Trenton not later than 11 o'clock on the morning of the inauguration, and will be fed before the parade, which follows the ceremonies in the Opera House.

Further details are contained in the orders of Gen. Wanser, which follow:

Trenton, Jan. 7, 1902.

General Orders No. 6.

1. The division of the National Guard will parade at Trenton on Tuesday, Jan. 21, 1902, on the occasion of the inauguration of Hon. Franklin Murphy, as Governor of the State of New Jersey.

2. The troops will wear undress uniforms, viz., leggings, overcoat, white gloves.

3. Companies will be equalized so as to parade sixteen files front.

4. The commanding officers of brigades will arrange transportation so as to arrive in Trenton no later than 11 a. m.

5. The Quartermaster-General will furnish transportation and subsistence.

6. First Troop Cavalry is hereby detailed as escort to the Governor, and will report to the Adjutant-General at the State House at 11 a. m.

7. The division headquarters will be at the Trenton House.

By Command of

Brig.-Gen. Wanser.

Thomas Chambers,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The probable route of the parade will include a march of about two and one-half miles, of which all but half a mile will be over vitrified brick pavement. The route of the parade and manner of formation is proposed as follows:

The National Guard will form on Clinton avenue, with the right resting at the Swamp Angel, while the civic part will form on East State street, with the right resting upon Clinton avenue and facing west. The civic part will also rest upon Southard, Ewing and Carroll streets, facing Perry.

The line of march as proposed is down Perry to Broad street, to the Battle Monument, to Pennington avenue, to Willow street, to Spring, out Spring to Prospect street, down Prospect to West State street, and back to the City Hall.

This will allow of good streets for marching, all the way through, and will permit those desiring to see the parade from a vantage point to have the choice of good positions along the route.

Winter Quiet.

The Councilmanic street committee will not do any special work until spring. There is a little repair work to be looked after, providing the weather permits, but no great amount of work will be planned at present. In the near future the committee will begin planning for the spring and summer work.

WHO CAN USE NEW TICKETS

OFFICIAL EXPLANATION BY GENERAL PASSENGER AGENT BURT.

Vice President Warren Says Report of Interview With Bayonne's Mayor Was False.

An official explanation of the use of the new ten trip tickets was made by Vice President Warren, of the New Jersey Central Railroad, Wednesday afternoon, during the course of the talk with the Board of Trade committee. It is intended for the use to the person to whom it is issued and for his family, servants and visitors. It is not intended to be for the benefit of the members of a business firm nor for the firm's employes.

As concerns the distinction between a servant and an employe no definite statement was made, except that it was intimated that a servant meant a domestic in the household and an employe one who is regularly hired in a business concern. General Passenger Agent Burt declared that in issuing these tickets at the rate of ninety cents per round trip, no advance in price was made, because the excursion ticket is still $1. It was also pointed out that the opportunity given to obtain a fifty trip ticket for ten round trips, from the holder, was an abuse of the rights of the owner of the ticket and that the company is not responsible therefor.

During the conversation, Mr. Warren, in speaking in condemnation of newspaper notoriety given the road, declared that the published account of an interview between himself and Mayor Seymour, of Bayonne, as contained in a Bayonne paper, was utterly false. The great majority of the statements published were never uttered. He said with much emphasis that the outline of the talk was purely imaginary.

FORMER PLAINFIELDER.

Rev. G. N. Karner Has Resigned His Charge at Albany.

Many Plainfielders will be interested in the following which appeared in a recent issue of the Albany Journal, concerning a former resident of this city. He is Rev. George N. Karner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Conover, of Bradford avenue and son-in-law of Abram Cadmus, of Plainfield avenue.

"The Rev. George N. Karner, pastor of the West End Presbyterian church, has resigned. In his letter of resignation, which he read to his congregation yesterday he asks that the matter be considered at a congregational meeting to be called for that purpose on Monday, January 20, at 8 p. m. It is understood that the meeting will be presided over by the Rev. David O. Mears, D. D., of the Fourth Presbyterian church. In all probability the resignation will be accepted, as it is said by intimate acquaintances of the pastor that he has received a call to a church in one of the New England States and has practically decided to go.

"The West End Presbyterian church under Mr. Karner's charge has steadily grown in membership and church influence, and today is one of the best institutions of its kind in the city. Mr. Karner was installed as pastor of this church on November 15, 1899, and in the eleven years of his pastorate he has been the church membership grow from 230 to 450, or nearly double. It is today free from debt and in good financial condition.

"In an interview this morning with a Journal reporter Mr. Karner said that his plans for the future were not yet matured. He said that his pastoral relations with his people were satisfactory but he felt that a change once in eleven years was perhaps the best thing for the church."

SECOND LECTURE.

Dr. J. H. Buchanan Will Give Illustrated Talk on Bacteriology.

The second in the series of free lectures given at the Somerset street school building under the auspices of the borough Board of Education takes place Friday evening, Jan. 17.

Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, the school physician, will give an illustrated talk on "Bacteriology." F. E. Kinsman, who was to have taken this date for a lecture on "Electricity," will not deliver his address until a fortnight after Dr. Buchanan's talk.

This postponement is due to the fact that Mr. Kinsman is busily engaged advancing the interests of a patent automatic train stopper, which prevents two trains colliding. He is endeavoring to have the arrangement adopted by the New York Central Railroad.

Named for Speedway.

Mayor Newton B. Smalley has announced that Mountain avenue may be used as a speedway by the lovers of horse-flesh. It is a well built road and is well adapted for the purpose.

New Schedule.

According to the new schedule on the Middlesex and Somerset Traction Company the last trolley car now leaves New Brunswick for Somerville at 11 o'clock.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

Present Styles Will Remain Through Rest of the Season.

Dress Goods Exhibited Now Are as Nearly Perfect as Good Taste and Human Ingenuity Can Make Them.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

SPEAKING in a very general way of the changes in the world of fashion within the past month have been very few indeed, and with all due respect to the vagaries of that fickle lady, Dame Fashion, I cannot help but think it safe to assume that the present styles, pretty and becoming as they have proved themselves to be, will remain as they are throughout the remainder of the winter season.

The charm of many of the handsomest garments at present is to be found in the material. Never have the manufacturers put more lovely stuffs on the market, and never have the colors been more beautiful and harmonious. But, though glorious fabrics and wonderful colors are to be seen on all sides, the woman who has to study economy must keep her wits well in hand and choose with exceeding care. I mean in this wise: Certain fabrics have come to stay and will be in general demand all through the coming season, while others are the mere passing fancy of a few weeks at most. To invest even a considerable sum of money in the former is money well invested, while only those to whom cash is a secondary consideration can afford to buy the latter.

In the matter of color there are most wonderful browns, royal blues, dull reds, and soft grays to be obtained at the present moment, but none of these can be attempted with any degree of satisfaction in any but a high-priced fabric. Stone grays of every kind are extremely fashionable, just now, and those high in authority in such matters say their popularity will be rather than wane, and throughout the spring season they will be the most sought after shades.

There is a delightful new fabric on the market for teagowns, namely a stamped cotton velveteen. It does not sound at all nice, I know, but it has been produced in fantastic Japanese designs and is really charming. The plain velveteens now so much in vogue make ideal lounging robes, but must be finished with chiffon and as much lace as the purse can buy or else they will not prove at all satisfactory.

Not many women desire, or can really afford, to change the style and cut of their gowns with each passing whim of fashion, but she who would be considered particularly swell and up-to-date can only be reckoned so by closely following the almost daily changes in what is commonly known as the fads of fashion. For instance, one day it is the peculiar manner of wearing a chain, next a fanciful belt, a certain style of collar, a jaunty-looking hairbow and a thousand and one trifles, the omission of any particular one from the toilette instantly proclaiming my lady as being not one of fashion's devotees, to say the least. For example, no woman, no matter how rich and costly her costume might happen to be, would be considered fashionably or smartly dressed for the street, if her fur coat did not boast either a cravat of lace or embroidered chiffon, or an entire collar of cream lace. Neither can the strictly tailor-made gown be called complete these days without some softening touch of lace or chiffon at the throat. A decidedly pretty kink of the moment is the neat turnover hand-stitched white muslin collar, with a black or black and white spotted satin stock. However, the decorative value of this fad'al and others of similar description depends solely upon daintiness and fresh appearance.

Another delightfully charming novelty is the new Japanese belt, delicately wrought in silver and gold, seen for the first time within the week. It shows to perfect advantage when worn with exactly the right gown, but I cannot call it a desirable addition to a dowdy serge gown, an example of which I saw yesterday. Incongruous mixtures of this description very often run into exceeding bad taste, and that, you know, is unpardonable in this day and generation.

So small but important details, let it be remembered, as shoes, gloves, cravats, veils, etc., make or mar a costume. The veil of the moment is of soft white or cream tinted chiffon, embroidered in black, put on very full, and drawn up into a kind of curtain in the back, where it is held in place by small jeweled pins, joined together by tiny gold chains. Hosiery varies very little, if any, from that worn last season. The best style of stocking for winter wear is a heavy silken one, finely ribbed, while for evening wear the inserted lace fronts, in both black and fancy colorings, are very much in vogue. The Biarritz glove, in all shades of tan and red, is much sought after, while the dainty suede is as popular as ever, particularly in all shades of soft gray. For cold weather and general rough wear a heavy kid glove, fastened with two enormous pearl buttons, is considered quite the proper caper. A few exclusive women are wearing fanciful knit white silk mittens with stunning cloth and fur street costumes.

Jet and spangles have been restored to all their old time popularity, but the kind used now is of the very best quality—that is, the jets, even the very smallest ones, are all sewed on by hand. These jetted trimmings and jetted allovers are beautiful in the extreme, but in the very nature of things are as costly as they are beautiful. The handsomest patterns seen thus far have the jets hand-embroidered onto a heavy silk net foundation, while their beauty, and cost, too, for that matter, is further enhanced by means of tiny velvet appliques put on with a somewhat sparing hand.

Other desirable patterns both in trimming and allovers have the appliques work done in white velvet, thus producing the ever popular black and white combination.

Lovely indeed is the Empire gown of the moment, whether fashioned of jetted lace or soft oriental satin. But with the exception of the jetted lace ones no gown of this description, whether intended for day or evening wear, is considered complete in any sense of the word without the soft finishing touch of the old-fashioned berths of rare old lace.

Bearing in mind that Dame Fashion is a jade of very changeable moods, I cannot but be impressed by her faithfulness to the charms of lace and chiffon in combination. Although it has been "in" for several seasons, it is just as popular as when first introduced, and as it is both pretty and becoming, let us hope this delightful state of affairs will continue for many seasons to come.

A leading costumer on the avenue is showing motoring costumes of goatskin which must be reckoned among the novelties of the season and will be much sought after by the automobiling members of the sex. These costumes are, of course, invincible in any wind and any weather, and are fashioned with a nattiness and charm of outline truly delightful. Each costume is accompanied by a hat and veil, the former being somewhat different in construction from any yet seen. It is cut to form a sharp point in front and fits the head with such snugness that the strongest wind can not dislodge it. The natty little veil is of white chiffon, of double thickness and finished around the lower edge by a narrow frill of lace.

The millinery of the moment is charming, with the exception of the fur toque of huge proportions, which at the present writing is having a wonderful reign of popularity among a certain few. However, I suppose when we see freaks of fashion like this we should not blame the authorities, but rather those women who demand the "latest," no matter at what cost to personal appearance.

KATE GARDNER.

CANINE MIND-READER.

Master Sy Selecting Cards and Other Signs Shows That He Has Power Like Telepathy.

Allinace, O., boasts of a dog with telepathic powers, which residents believe to be the only one in the world. His name is Tom and his species bull terrier. He is the property of Jack Myers, who has resided there for years.

Prof. Charles Marmaduke Lumley of the London psychological institute, London, England, after witnessing Tom's remarkable feats, offered $1,250 for him, but the offer was promptly refused by Mr. Myers, as he firmly believes that if Tom were separated from him the dog would pine away.

The first demonstrated his mind-reading qualifications unexpectedly to his owner, by means of a pack of playing cards. Mr. Myers had finished a game of solitaire and had carelessly slapped his dog on the nose with one of the cards. Mr. Myers noticed that the card was the ten-spot of the hearts. The card was placed in the pack and laid upon the table and Myers left the room.

On returning some time later he was surprised to see ten-spot of hearts lying apart from the deck of cards and in front of the dog.

Attorney William Rosche, of Alliance, hearing of the incident, one day ran in the hall where Jack and his owner live put the dog's powers to an extreme test. He stacked the cards face downward and simply thought intently of a particular card. Here came in the dog's greatest achievement, for each time he was tested in this manner he picked out the right card. Following this incident, hundreds from far and near have thus tested the canine and have been unable to fake him.

Some time since, while a deal was pending for the sale of the animal, Jack went about bowed down with grief. When a messenger arrived with a telegram declaring the negotiations off he is reported to have grabbed the message from the carrier's hand and, carrying it to his master, leaped for joy before the contents of the little envelope had even been read by Mr. Myers.

FORGOT GRANDMOTHER.

Little Miss Bessie Apologized for the Omission, However, as Soon as She Could.

She is a dainty little blue-eyed girl of five, with long yellow curls and that innocent, fearless expression which is one of the most beautiful things in the world. Though her father is a Methodist minister with a small salary, little Miss Bessie is always beautifully dressed and is the pet and pride of all her family.

WOULDN'T THAT FREEZE YOU?

Recently, says the Chicago Tribune, Bessie has been sent to kindergarten and in that sheltered retreat she has picked up strange words and a number of slang phrases which sound amusing and at the same time shocking as they fall from her lips.

Ever since she could lisp little Bessie has said her prayers regularly, night and morning. In her petitions she invariably mentions each member of her family by name, going back to include her grandparents on both sides of the house.

The other evening her mother had tucked her in bed, after her prayers were said, when she suddenly sat up and said: "Mother, I forgot part of my prayer."

Out of bed she clambed and knelt down again like a little white cherub in her pretty gown.

"O, Lord," she began, with a most serious and anxious tone of voice, "I forgot to pray for dear grandmother. Wouldn't that freeze you?"

When she got up again and with happy eyes climbed back to her little bed.

Those Who Assisted in Receiving the Guests—Prevailing Color Was Pink.

The second and last "at home," attendant upon the debut of Miss Helen Sprague Martin, daughter of Mrs. Frank Sprague Martin, was given last Thursday afternoon from 4 to 7 o'clock at the home on Hillside avenue. Like the previous events it was a charming one and was very largely attended by society folks of the city and borough.

The prevailing color scheme was pink, these being pink carnations in the library and pink roses in the dining room. The decorations in the latter room made especially attractive through the use of broad bands of pink satin ribbon.

The debutante was assisted in receiving by her mother and her sister, Miss Martin and Mrs. William Myers, Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell, Mrs. W. L. C. Glenney, Miss Mary E. Wilson, Mrs. Craig A. Marsh and Miss Sarah Drayton. The young women assisting were the Misses Mary E. Tracy, Ethel Strong, Juanita Machado, Mary Anderson Reinhart, and Alice L. Barlow, of this city, and Miss Kathryn Dohan, of Philadelphia.

There were no evening festivities arranged this time, the affair bringing to a close a series of delightful social gatherings.

LIQUOR OPENLY SOLD TO THOSE UNDER AGE

Fact Brought Out in Court at Trial of Young George Gardner Friday.

POLICE WILL NOW ACT.

BOY CHARGED WITH TRYING TO BEAT HIS FATHER.

Mrs. Gardner Complained That Saloon-keepers Continued to Sell Drinks to Minors—Sentence Suspended.

Through the arrest of George Gardner, an eighteen-year-old boy, for drunkenness, Thursday afternoon, Chief Kiely learned the next day that the city ordinance in regard to selling liquor to minors is openly disregarded by a number of local saloon keepers.

The young man, who works only at odd times, secured a little money yesterday and spent it all for drink. He went to his home on West Third street very intoxicated and began abusing his father. The latter has but recently passed through a severe illness and when the boy approached to strike him he was unable to defend himself. The interference of Mrs. Gardner was all that saved him from a beating at the hands of the intoxicated youth.

The mother then sent for Patrolman Watson and preferred a charge of disorderly conduct against her son who, at the time the officer arrived, was in the hall daring his father to come out and be "licked."

When he was arraigned in the city court, Friday morning, Mrs. Gardner stated that the main object in having the boy arrested was to make him tell where he procured the liquor. It was a frequent thing for him to come home intoxicated, she said, and she had tried to prevent it by personally calling on the saloon keepers and asking them to refrain from giving the boy liquor.

When questioned by City Judge Runyon the young man substantially said that he could buy drink at any place in town.

Yesterday's drunk, he said, was secured at a saloon on Park avenue, where his age was not questioned.

The boy was given a reprimand by the court after which a heavy sentence was placed over his head. If he is arrested on a similar charge within the near future it will drop in the shape of $100 and fifty-nine days, the heaviest that can be imposed by the City Judge.

On the completion of Gardner's case, Chief Kiely sent for the accused saloon keeper. When the patrolman approached he observed a boy in disguise. He discovered a well known young man, also below twenty-one, standing at the bar and drinking. The proprietor was informed of both cases but pleaded ignorance of the young men's ages. He promised his bartender would be instructed to watch for minors and that no young men below twenty-one would be served with drink. Other saloon men who have also been selling to boys will be brought to account and, if the practice is not abated, arrests will follow.

MEETING CLOSED WITH SUNDAY-SCHOOL RALLY

Last of the Methodist Union Week of Prayer Services Held Friday Night.

A LARGE ATTENDANCE.

MEETING WAS HELD IN THE MONROE AVENUE M. E. CHURCH.

James H. Joy Told of the Difference Between the Original Sunday-School and That of the Present Day.

The last of the series of prayer meetings which have been held in the local Methodist churches during the past week, took place in Monroe Avenue church, last Friday. It was in the nature of a Sunday-school rally and was attended by many Sunday-school workers from various parts of the city.

James H. Joy, of the First M. E. church, was in charge of the meeting and spoke at some length on the Sunday-school of today in contrast with its beginning 100 years ago. At that time, he said, it was merely a place made attractive enough to keep boys from the streets and where they were taught letters or recited the catechism. It had no other mission. Today it has many and is an indespensable part of the church.

The speaker pointed out the difference between the Sabbath-school and the public school, dwelling on the difficulties to be overcome by teachers in the former. But they are always successful, he said, because it is a God given task and in the Bible, the instructors have the greatest text book in the world.

At the close of Mr. Joy's remarks, the meeting was thrown open and many availed themselves of the opportunity to testify to the worth of the Sunday-school. Among them were Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, of the First M. E. church, Rev. G. W. Gardner, of Grace M. E. church and Walter Mc Gee, superintendent of the Monroe Avenue church school.

Dr. Snodgrass's remarks were especially interesing. He made strong the point that the Sunday-school is but too often looked upon merely as the nursery of the church and not given all the credit it deserves. Its influence on young men and women, he said, who have never joined the church, has been such that the impression made upon them has remained all through life.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Dr. Hoty, of Cincinnati, O., who is visiting relatives in this city.

The Band is much pleased with the success attending the sale, thus assuring them a good profit for the work carried on by that worthy organization.

U. S. MARINE BAND.

Famous Musical Organization Had Small Beginning.

Francis Scala, an Italian Musician of Note, Was Its Founder, and Sousa Added to Its Great Renown.

[Special Washington Letter.]

CHARLES EGAN, born in Ireland, now grizzled and gray, served as cornetist in her majesty's service, came to this country when near his majority, and was band master of the Second infantry during the civil war. For several years he has been a clerk in the surgeon general's office, but still he revels in memories of his musical days.

"John Philip Sousa's father was a tuba player in the Marine band," says Mr. Egan, "and the boy heard nothing but music at home and music at the barracks. His mother was also a musician, a vocalist, and young Sousa was a born musician. I have watched his development with considerable interest and a degree of pride, for I was one of his instructors for awhile. He was always a good boy and always ambitious.

"In those days I also knew Francis Scala. I suppose that you never heard of him, did you? Well, he was the leader of the Marine band before the civil war, and for some time afterwards. Sousa's father played in the band under Scala's leadership, and the present popular Sousa took many a lesson from Scala, who was in his day celebrated as a composer as well as a band leader. He was born in Italy and enlisted in our navy as a third-class musician while the ship was lying in the harbor in the bay of Naples, about 20 years before our civil war. Within a month after his enlistment he was playing the clarionet solos, and inside of a year he was bandmaster of the frigate.

"Francis Scala used to be called the founder of the Marine band, and I believe that he is entitled to that distinction. When he arrived in this country in 1842 he enlisted in what was then known as the Marine band, and he soon became leader of the little organization. No provision had ever been made by congress for a Marine band, so that the ten members were enlisted as fifers and drummers. They played one flute, one clarionet, one French horn, two trombones, one bugle, one bass drum, one kettle drum and one pair of cymbals. That was the miserable nucleus out of which Scala developed the brilliant musical organization which has achieved so much of fame during the past 30 years. The congress never gave any encouragement to his work, either.

"Do you know how many years it has been customary for the Marine band to give public concerts in the white house grounds? The people of this city come forth by thousands every Saturday evening during the summer season and promenade the beautiful grounds while the band plays, but they do not know to whom they are indebted for that custom. Francis Scala inaugurated these public recitals during President Tyler's administration. The first grand public exhibition of the existence of the band was in March, 1845, when Scala led the procession at the inauguration of President Polk. Ever since then the Marine band has held the right of line on all such occasions. The great feature of that day was the playing of a cornet by Scala; an instrument which he had purchased on credit with long time for payment.

"During the brief time that Gen. Taylor was president, he inaugurated the custom of having the Marine band play at public receptions. In those days the public receptions were not attended by so many people, because the population of Washington was small. Gen. Taylor would send word to Scala to bring a piano player and a couple of reed instrument players as accompanists; and that small coterie would make enough music in the great east room to satisfy and gratify the president's guests, whereas nowadays naught but the grand orchestration of the big band will satisfy public expectancy and demand.

"During the Fillmore administration Scala's Marine band performed a public function which added greatly to its fame. Louis Kossuth, the famous Hungarian patriot, came to Washington and was received by a procession with Scala's band at the right of line. There were then 16 pieces, and they played so well that the newspapers gave room for considerable comment, partly because the courtly Kossuth complimented the band and personally spoke to Scala, thanking him for the playing of national airs. Still there was not much fame coming to the patient founder of the band until Buchanan's inauguration. Scala's band on that occasion played a march of his own composition which he dedicated to Miss Harriet Lane, who presided over the social functions of her uncle's administration. That march had a large sale, for those days, and Scala's fame enlarged.

"Scala told me that Miss Harriet Lane keenly realized the advantage of good music and extended her aid to the band in many ways. It was by reason of her patronage that the band membership was increased to 25; that being the number of Lincoln's first inauguration. During that administration the prince of Wales came to this country, and was received with great formality in the little capital city of the young republic. Miss Lane required Scala to come to the white house every morning during the visit of the prince, and arrange with her the music for each day. When Buchanan and a distinguished party accompanied the prince to the tomb of Washington at Mount Vernon, Scala's band accompanied them, and while at the tomb the band played a dirge which Scala had written for the occasion. The prince was so impressed with the original music that he sent the duke of Newcastle for a copy of the dirge. It was forwarded to the queen, was played before her majesty, and became popular in Europe.

"Thus, during Buchanan's administration the band grew and the bandmaster's reputation was enhanced. But still the musicians were enlisted as fifers and drummers as they had been for so many years. It was known as 'Scala's band,' and might have been known by that designation as long as he lived, or even longer. But the ambitious leader did not care so much for the perpetuation of his name and fame as he did for the permanent organization of a musical band, and it was he who insisted upon having it always officially designated as the Marine band.

"The last march composed by Scala and publicly performed by his band was rendered in the new treasury department building on March 4, 1859, when Grant was first inaugurated. The general and his wife were both pleased with it, and its popularity lasted for a number of years. The band had then grown to proper proportions, and there were many musical men ambitious for the leadership. They sowed dissensions in the band, annoyed Scala, irritated him, accused him of lack of discipline, and made him so angry and irritated that he said and did things alleged to be insubordinate. Finally, in a moment of anger, Scala wrote his resignation, in December, 1871, and retired from the leadership of the band for whose development he had toiled for 30 years. He said: 'Republics are ungrateful to the makers of their melodies.' In later years he said: 'I sometimes wish that I had allowed it to continue to be called Scala's band.'

"I have since seen the band grow unto approximate perfection," continued Mr. Egan. "Sousa worked hard, very faithfully and successfully to that end. But he left the band in an unhappy state of mind, just as Scala did, feeling that his services were not appreciated. Sousa and his friends for several years besieged the congress to enact a law making him a lieutenant in the navy; but to no avail. He remained an enlisted man designated to the leadership, and hence had no real military authority over the band. His successor, Fanciulli, spent five years endeavoring to keep the band up to the high mark which Sousa had set for it, but gladly retired at the end of his period of enlistment. During McKinley's first inauguration, a lieutenant of marines dictated to Fanciulli what music should be played. Inasmuch as Fanciulli had drilled his band on a particular programme for that occasion, he declined to obey the orders of a lieutenant. Being only an enlisted private, he was ordered out of the parade, put in the barracks in disgrace, and came near being dishonorably discharged. It is no wonder that he was glad to be rid of such environments.

"The present leader of the Marine band is Prof. Santelmann, who was leader of the band at the Annapolis naval academy, declined the leadership until he was assured of complete leadership and authority over the band. Under existing circumstances he is able to do well and is doing well. The band is a credit to the republic, and will increase in value and popularity. But it will be a long time, if ever, before dear old Scala will be remembered or officially taken of appreciation of his services as founder of the marine band."

SMITH D. FRY.

WONDERFUL OLD MAN.

Ohio Patriarch, 108 Years Old, Says That He Expects to Live Seven Years Longer.

Jeremiah Gleeson, who lives in Monroe township, Knox county, is the oldest survivor of the civil and Mexican wars, and is probably the oldest man in Ohio.

Gleeson was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1792. At the age of 20 he left his native country for America on account of the oppression of the Irish by the English. His desire for a wild life brought him to Ohio, which he has called his home state for more than 80 years. He was captured by the Indians and held prisoner by them for more than three years, and says he grew as wild as any of his captors. During the Indian wars "Uncle Jerry," as he is familiarly known, fought under Gen. Andrew Jackson. The two became fast friends, their friendship lasting till the general's death.

When the war with Mexico broke out Gleeson enlisted and served under Gen. John C. Fremont. After the war he joined an expedition to seek gold in California, his soldier son accompanying him. The son was lost in the famous Peg-leg gold mine. With a small fortune he returned to his family in what is now Monroe township.

When the civil war broke out "Uncle Jerry" again took up arms for his adopted country, serving three years as a union soldier. He wanted to engage in the recent troubles with Spain, but was not permitted, owing to his advanced age.

What the old man is genial and sunny tempered, a character not unlike "Uncle Billy Sanders" in Joel Chandler Harris' "Tales of the South." He was seen by a Cincinnati Enquirer representative recently and was able to give in detail the story of his remarkable career. He was working on his farm with a team which, comparatively speaking, was as old as the driver. He said that he expects to live to be 115 years old.

JOHN F. CARROLL.

Rumor Has It That He Will Succeed Croker as Dictator of Tammany Hall.

John F. Carroll, who is said to have succeeded Richard Croker as master of Tammany, notwithstanding the denial of the story by Croker himself, was formerly clerk of the court of general sessions. This post is an important one, and pays a salary of $5,000. Carroll resigned the place to become Croker's deputy in the Tammany organization, an office to which no salary is attached. Carroll is interested in the ice trust, and appears to be in no want of wealth. His political record covers a period of 23 years' active service with Tammany. In the very beginning of his political life he was intimately associated with Robert A. Van Wyck, mayor of New York. Carroll was soon made a district leader, and made his district an important Tammany stronghold. In 1879 he was made clerk of the grand jury, and was subsequently clerk of the Seventh district civil court and later clerk of the general sessions. In the city campaign four years ago he was Croker's chief adviser, and he has had charge of Tammany during the absence of the "Boss in Europe.

Good Country for Women.

In a mining center some 80 miles from Coolgardie, in western Australia, a carpenter died and his widow had offers of marriage from five doctors who attended the deceased, the undertaker, the clergyman who read the burial service, the local apothecary who made up the medicines prescribed for the departed, and the custodian of the cemetery where he was interred. Likewise from about a score of mine managers and miners. She did not accept one of the suitors and departed for her home in Melbourne.

OPENED FIRE AT BROTHER

Then the Police Gathered in All Three of the Jenkins and Locked Them Up.

NOBODY WAS HURT.

Oscar Jenkins Says He Shot to Frighten His Brother, Sherman, Who Was Too Handy With His Fists—Oscar Sent to Jail—Others Released.

The Jenkins brothers, three of them, Sherman, Charles and Oscar, colored men, had a little misunderstanding early Saturday evening, which came near resulting in one of them being shot and ended in the arrest of all. Oscar began a little shooting practice with a 44-calibre revolver which threw Charles and Sherman into spasms and caused a hurried scurrying into hallway of a score of pedestrians who were attracted by the noise of the dispute. The shooter went to jail Monday for twenty days to meditate over the danger of carrying concealed weapons.

From the testimony offered by the trio in the city court, Monday, it appeared that Sherman failed to keep an appointment with Oscar, Saturday afternoon. The meeting place was to have been a street corner and Oscar didn't relish waiting in the cold. He still felt miffed later in evening when he met Sherman and Charles at the corner of Park avenue and Second street and threw out some hints that Sherman was a pretty good fabricator. This didn't phase Sherman any, but when Oscar followed him to Somerset street and made a "pass" at him, he swung around with stunning effect.

Oscar went to earth but was immediately up and sang out that he had a gun and was going to shoot. Sherman told him to go ahead and, before Charles could interfere, Oscar obeyed orders. He only intended to frighten his brother, so he says, so when opposite French's mill the revolver went off but when the smoke cleared away Sherman was still among the living. Oscar found out he was very much alive for he was thrown down and held by both brothers until Patrolman Lunger arrived.

All three agreed in court that Oscar was to blame. Charles had acted as peacemaker and complaint in his case was dismissed. Sherman, so City Judge Runyon ruled, had committed a breach of the peace but acted on the spur of the moment with just provocation. He was released with a suspended sentence. Oscar was given his preference of $10 or twenty days. Sherman was about to pay the fine but, at the request of the police, he acquiesced to Oscar's going to jail.

The Plainfield Literary Society held a meeting Saturday evening and elected a new president and secretary. C. M. Dolliver was chosen for the former office and C. E. Drange for the latter. A vice president will be selected at the next meeting.

Ira W. Travell, principal of the Plainfield High School, has consented to act as one of the judges in the public debate to be held by the society, Saturday evening, January 22. The ship subsidy question will be the subject of discussion on this occasion.

The programme rendered at the meeting was as follows: Recitation, Clay's speech on "Insubordination of the Army" Harvey K. Limberger; address, "1902," C. M. Dolliver; recitation, Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade;" extemporaneous address, "Natural and Mechanical Powers," E. K. Hartley; recitation, "Faithless Nettie Gray," J. H. Crane.

Only One Case Among Students.

J. Whitney Baker, of Princeton University, who spent Sunday at his home in this city, says that there is only one case of smallpox among the students at Princeton and the student having it has been removed to a safe distance. The authorities are not alarmed over a spread of the disease, every precaution being taken to prevent it.

To accommodate those who are partial to the use of atomizers in applying liquids into the nasal passages for catarrhal troubles, the proprietors prepare Ely's Liquid Cream Balm. Price including the spraying tube is 75 cents. Druggists or by mail. The liquid embodies the medicinal properties of the solid preparation. Cream Balm is quickly absorbed by the membrane and does not dry up the secretions but changes them to a natural and healthy character. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N. Y.

PHYSICIANS ON SMALL-POX

Plainfield Clinical Society Held a Symposium on the Dread Disease.

INTERESTING PAPERS.

Members Thoroughly Reviewed All Phases of the Subject and Presented Interesting Facts—Meeting Held at the Nurses' Home Last Tuesday.

In view of the possibilities of and the subsequent development of small-pox in this city, the Plainfield Clinical Society arranged recently to give a symposium on the disease. This was given Tuesday evening in the Nurses' Home, Muhlenberg Hospital. Despite the terrible storm there were twenty-six physicians present, a number of trained nurses and a few invited guests. Many of those invited were undoubtedly detained by the weather. However, a most profitable and interesting time was spent and everyone felt well repaid for being present.

Dr. Ellis W. Hedges, as president, and Dr. Frank C. Ard, as secretary, of the society, occupied the platform. Dr. Hedges in a few words announced the object of the meeting and gave a cordial greeting to all. Papers on the small-pox disease were presented, each one being limited to ten minutes, which some took less time.

The first paper was given by Dr. J. H. Carman, who treated causes from a scientific standpoint, that part of medicine which relates to the disease, its cause, nature, etc.

Dr. Carman began by saying that the disease appeared in the sixteenth century and the Americans owe it to the Spanish for its introduction into this country. The speaker cited the fact that the disease does not discriminate, it attacks all ages, although less likely to be found among very small children. The well and strong are just as likely to get it and the disease is contagious in all stages. The reproduction of the disease is found in the pustules, the dry scales that are carried about the room and lodge in clothing and are carried about, sometimes it being years when the disease is developed.

Dr. Carman stated that the disease is prevalent at all seasons, but more so in the winter. His reason for this being that other germs are then resting from their labors. As regards epidemics, Dr. Carman said that the magnitude and severity of the disease is regulated almost entirely by vaccination.

The speaker said that, if carefully diagnosed, the disease is not a difficult one to determine owing to the peculiar skin eruption. He admitted if chicken-pox is taken for small-pox, and a patient is moved to an isolation hospital, physicians are likely to get into trouble. The doctor described the unmistakable symptoms of the disease, including the severe pains in the loins and the intense chilly feeling. Within three or four days the eruption appears on the forehead and wrists. In this disease there are more vesicles. When the desquamation period begins it cannot well be mistaken.

In conclusion Dr. Carman suggested a few don'ts which included the following: Don't make a snap diagnosis, don't fear isolation, don't be afraid to call your fellow physician and ask him to share the responsibility, don't be afraid to vaccinate everything in sight and don't fear to attend a case of small-pox if you get a chance.

Dr. Monroe B. Long gave the next paper on the treatment of the disease. He divided his paper into two parts, the prophylactic, or preventive treatment, and medical, that referring to the healing of the disease. The speaker thoroughly believed vaccination the only sure preventive of the disease and advocated the plan of making it obligatory in all public institutions, as well as in the army, navy and other large bodies.

He recommended in the treatment a large, well-ventilated room and the use of such garments as can be destroyed or that will not carry the disease. He also recommended great care in the washing of the face and hands and extreme care in parsing. He also cited as a diet such things as milk, toast, custards and a few other articles of diet that are cooling.

Dr. Frank C. Ard spoke of ocular complications. He spoke of the desquamation period as the worst for the eyes, as oftentimes pus forms in the anterior chamber, which results in blindness. Several remedies were suggested, including applications of carbolic acid and hot applications, as well as minor operations. He said that in France the per centage of eye trouble was reduced from 35 per cent. to 7 per cent. through vaccination. Later Dr. Ard gave his experience in a small-pox epidemic in the west.

One of the most interesting and strongest papers presented was that the value of vaccination by Dr. Ellis W. Hedges. He began with the introduction of it by Edward Jenner 100 years ago, and he stated decisively that it does protect from small-pox, that is, true vaccination, when properly done on a clean arm with every precaution taken from infection. He said that thousands die from neglect in vaccination. The rule is to vaccinate until it refuses to take.

Dr. Hedges quoted the Chicago

REV. ANDREW M. EGAN.

Board of Health, Dr. Welch, of Philadelphia, regarding the estimable value of vaccination, showing that the per centage of cases and deaths is very small where there has been thorough vaccination. In the opinion of Dr. Hedges it protects absolutely for at least five years. The speaker then went on and gave unlimited proof of the value of vaccination abroad, where it is compulsory. He showed that in countries where the law is the strictest the disease is less prevalant and there have been few deaths.

He spoke of the appalling loss of 23,000 by death from small-pox in France, where in Germany the deaths reached 200. In the latter country vaccination is obligatory. Dr. Hedges gave a great many figures to prove that vaccination is right, reasonable and safe.

Dr. William H. Murray presented a paper on the accidents and dangers of vaccination. He believed there is little danger, except in the case of a new born babe or debilitated persons. He compared the old method with the new, showing what advancement had been made in this treatment. He advised the utmost care in the use of virus and the instrument used and said that he preferred sterilized gauze to protect the arm rather than a shield. If the latter is air-tight it sometimes makes the arm sore, and if not air-tight does not exclude infection. Dr. Murray said that in vaccination there are really no serious complications to be feared. He said that in practice of twenty years he had three severe cases and they all recovered, and they were the result of other causes.

Dr. J. B. Probasco gave a history of vaccine virus and explained in detail how this is secured for vaccination. He gave the opinions of a number of physicians to show that vaccine points are considered the best and safest to use. He said that under present conditions it is absolutely possible to get pure virus and have it work successfully.

Dr. R. VanD. Hedges treated quarantine regulations. He spoke of the disease being highly contagious and then went on to give the names of several States, including New Jersey, where quarantine laws are very strict. He said that through the courtesy of the Common Council the old Smock farm-house had been given to the

ABOUT NEW RECTOR AT ST. MARY'S CHURCH

Rev. Father Egan is Already a Popular Man in the Parish.

IS A MAN OF ABILITY.

SOMETHING ABOUT HIS CAREER BEFORE HE CAME TO PLAINFIELD.

A Genial and Witty Man—Possessed of Much Scholarly Ability—Came Here From Perth at Morris Plains.

Rev. Andrew M. Egan, who has succeeded Father Smyth at St. Mary's church, is a genial and witty person. He is polished in his manner and is a man of much scholarly ability.

He was born in the Cathedral parish at Newark, August 21, 1855, and during his young days he attended the select school of Bernard Kearney, being a fellow student of Rt. Rev. John O'Connor, the present bishop of Newark. Subsequently he attended the Benedictine school, in the same city.

From there he went to the Christian Brothers' school and afterwards he became a resident of Three Rivers, Quebec, his purpose being to master the French language. His next course was to pursue a line of study at St. Charles' college, Ellicott City, Md., remaining there for a period of two years. In 1878 he was graduated from Seton Hall, and was ordained to the priesthood in the Cathedral at Newark, May 22, 1880, by Archbishop Corrigan, then Bishop of Newark.

His bishop sent him to St. Mary's parish, Bergen Point, where he acted as curate. Later he became assistant to Monsignor Da'Conetlio, of St. Michael's parish, Jersey City. Some ten years ago he received the appointment of rector of St. Virgilius' church, Morris Plains. There he built up a large congregation and parish prospered under his administration.

Happily Bishop O'Connor chose him to succeed Father Smyth, and although he has been here less than a month he has won the esteem, not only of his new parishioners, but of the many Protestants with whom he comes in contact daily. Father Egan's assistant is Rev. John Farley, who was made the curate two months ago, after the completion of his work at Seton Hall.

Ready Responses.

The appeal for old linen to be used by the nurses at the isolation hospital has met with a ready response. Contributions continue pouring in and Inspector Addis is kept busy calling and collecting large loads. There is still more needed, as a great quantity of it is used.

By Bribing the Nerves

with opium a cough may be stopped temporarily, but the inflammation of which the cough is a symptom goes from bad to worse. Do not waste time and money on delusive "cough mixtures." Remember that Allen's Lung Balsam does not merely put the nerves to sleep. It gets right down to the root of the trouble and so cures even deep-seated affections of the throat and lungs.

VACCINATION IN BOROUGH

HOW OPERATION IS PERFORMED BY THE AUTHORITIES.

Free Treatment to All a Success—Much Care Taken by the Physicians.

The Borough Board of Health continued its work of vaccination Tuesday afternoon and in the short period of an hour and fifteen minutes sixty-six applicants were properly treated. Two physicians and a like number of trained nurses were in charge and they were assisted by officers of the health board.

Everything is sterilized, even the gowns worn by the physicians and the nurses are put through this process. The great majority of those vaccinated were little children and they were tenderly cared for. They were admitted to the ante-room of the council chamber and were placed in charge of Chief Marshal William Campbell. In turn one by one they were admitted to the main room where Miss Edith Anderson, a trained nurse, would bare the arm and completely sterilize it. Then the candidate for vaccination was permitted to go before the doctor after having been registered. There were two physicians, Albert Pittis and Arthur H. Dundon.

The arm was scraped after being rubbed hard, a cut about the size of a penny being generally made.

Miss Delaney, another trained nurse, placed the bandage and shield over the freshly made wound and the person vaccinated was allowed to go on being supplied with a leaflet setting forth the proper care of a vaccinated arm. Andrew Love, Sr., the president, and Dr. William E. Honeyman, the secretary, of the Board of Health were in attendance. In each case Mr. Love would inquire of the applicant his full name, occupation if any, address and the fact whether he had been vaccinated before. A record of the answers was made by Dr. Honeyman. These statistics will be preserved by the health authorities.

SEMI-YEARLY TESTS.

They Have Been Started at the North Plainfield Public Schools—Their Objects.

The regular semi-yearly tests at the North Plainfield public schools are being conducted by Superintendent Wightman. This modern method of inquiring into the advance made in the mental development of the pupil has supplanted the old fashioned examinations, in which results largely depended upon the ability of the pupil to memorize.

The idea of the test system is to learn the power of the pupil to grasp a subject rather than his position as a storehouse of facts. It is claimed that the system developes independence in thought, and gets away from what is commonly called machine studying.

On Monday, February 3, the second term in the school year begins and those who have demonstrated sufficient development are advanced. Some of the pupils, Jan. 22—A very quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Frentz, of this place, last evening, when their daughter, Miss Bertha A. Frentz, was united in marriage to Anthony Feyhour Feil, of Bayonne. Rev. E. Mulford, of the Episcopal church, was the officiating clergyman.

The young people were unattended and only a few immediate relatives and friend from Bayonne, Westfield, Plainfield and Scotch Plains witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Feil left last evening for Washington where they will spend some time. On returning they will reside at Elizabeth.

Mrs. McCutchen Improving.

Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen, of Rockview avenue, still improves from an operation for appendicitis. She has from the first shown every symptom for an early recovery and the physician as well as the members of the family are much encouraged with the favorable condition.

City Missionaries to Usad.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Taylor, city missionaries, will have charge of the Endeavor Society service at the First Baptist church Friday evening. The service will be held in the Sunday-school room of the church. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Meeting of Sunday-School Teachers.

Early in February the members of the Plainfield Primary and Junior Sunday-school Teachers' Union will attend the annual institute to be held at New Brunswick. An effort will be made in the near future to organize a Union at Rahway.

Gifts Thankfully Received.

Any persons having suitable articles that can be used at the isolation hospital are requested to inform Health Inspector Addis of the fact and he will call for them.

County Committee Meeting.

The Democratic county committee will hold an adjourned meeting Thursday evening, February 13, at Elizabeth.

LOCAL TRUST COMPANY WILL NOT ORGANIZE

Rumored That it Was to be a Part of Prudential-Equitable Chain of Banks.

PLANS NOW GIVEN UP.

WAS RESULT OF ATTEMPT OF FACTION TO GAIN CONTROL IN LOCAL BANKS.

Chain of Banks Now Included in This Combination—A Rival One Started by Mutual Life, of New York.

Men concerned in matters of finance are greatly interested in a plan providing for a community of interests of many financial institutions in this section of New Jersey. It is styled the Prudential-Equitable chain and was started by the management of the Prudential Insurance Company. This company has taken this method, it is reported, of investing its surplus. It has, for some time past, been extending its operations in directions remote from the insuring of the lives of people, until it has become recognized as one of the most potential influences in the world of finance.

Another factor in the combination is the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York. The Prudential has gradually absorbed several banks in Newark and these together with other institutions will form the combination. There was some talk of a local trust company being formed to enter the combination, but this is now declared off.

The local company was reported to be the outcome of an effort on the part of certain persons to gain control of the stock of a certain banking institution. Providing this was done the other stockholders were to draw out and form a trust company. The plan eventually fell through as the control was not obtained. As an opposition to this plan, it is understood that another chain will be formed with the Mutual Life Insurance, of New York, as the head. It is claimed that this chain will be even stronger than the Prudential-Equitable chain.

According to the story told the Prudential-Equitable chain includes the Fidelity Trust Company, Merchants' Bank, Second National Bank, German National Bank, all of Newark; First National Bank and Title Guarantee and Trust Company, of Jersey City; Trust Company, of New Jersey, of Hoboken; Union Trust Company and First National Bank, of Elizabeth. In addition to these are included the Mercantile Trust Company and Western National Bank, of New York.

There is a rumor that the Mutual Life Insurance Company is to be allied with the New York Life Insurance Company, but this is denied and it is claimed that the two are strong opponents in the formation of chains. According to the opinions of those best able to express them within the next few years there is sure to be a consolidation of banking interest such as the world has never known. It is claimed that by this plan there will be a great saving in the operating expenses with an increase in business.

EPWORTH LEAGUE ELECTION.

League of First M. E. Church, Westfield, Held Its Annual Meeting.

Westfield, January 21—At the annual meeting of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church, held Monday evening, the following officers were elected: President, M. P. Townley; first vice president, J. H. Shirss; third vice president, L. M. Pearsall; forth vice president, Miss Lucy Fitch; secretary, W. S. Affleck; treasurer, G. R. Hanford.

Reports of the year were read by the various officers and showed the League to be in a flourishing condition, financially and otherwise.

Fewer Offenders Now.

The recent declaration made by City Judge Runyon to the effect that no more leniency would be shown violators of the hack ordinance has decidedly checked the practice. Since one offender was fined and the edict sent forth, not a John has been arrested. The police declare the hackmen are now observing the ordinance better than ever before.

Until Pastor's Arrival.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis will continue to occupy the pulpit at the Seventh-Day Baptist church until Rev. George B. Shaw, of New York, assumes the pastorate.

NEARLY SEVEN THOUSAND

BOARD OF HEALTH'S ESTIMATE OF NUMBER VACCINATED HERE.

Many More Would Probably Be Vaccinated If New Cases Appeared.

As near as can be estimated by the physicians of the city, as well as members of the Board of Health, nearly 7,000 persons have been vaccinated in this city and the borough within the past two weeks. This includes those treated at the Board of Health offices, as well as those treated privately by physicians. To those favoring vaccination as the only preventive against small-pox, this is most gratifying. During the past two weeks several physicians who heretofore have disapproved of vaccination have been won over and they are now advocating it.

No doubt had the small-pox spread to any great number of families the proportion of the populace to be treated would be almost doubled. The Board of Health has come in for a large share of praise in its provisions for free treatment, thereby making it possible for persons in moderate circumstances to secure protection at no expense to themselves. This work will cost the city quite a sum, however, but the aggressive Board of Health is ably supported by the majority of the people in its wise provisions to prevent an epidemic of small-pox or any other disease.

HAD A KNIFE.

Mrs. James Scott Says Her Husband Chased Her With It—He Denies the Charge.

Mr. and Mrs. James Scott, of West Front street, had a little misunderstanding last Tuesday. In addition to exchanging their opinion of each other, so Mrs. Scott declared when she sought the assistance of the police, her liege lord chased her, about the house with a knife. Patrolman Overbaugh placed him under arrest and locked him up for the night.

He was to have been arraigned before City Judge Runyon, yesterday, but at the request of his counsel, Wm. A. Coddington, the case was adjourned until Saturday morning. Scott claims he was using the knife at the time the quarrel started and had no intention of cutting his wife.

J. P. D. KIRCH FOUND ALIVE

Located at Hopewell and Brought Home Tuesday Almost a Week.

WALKED FROM TRENTON

Hopewell People Recognized Him From Description in the Newspapers—Telegraphed to Plainfield—Justice Nash and Mrs. Kirch Went After Him.

After a mysterious absence of four days, J. P. D. Kirch, of Somerset street, returned home last Tuesday Montaly and physically he is in a bad condition, and is too weak to give an account of his strange wanderings. He was located at Hopewell, yesterday afternoon, and word was immediately sent here to that effect. Justice Nash, who has interested himself in the matter, went at once to that place and brought the missing lawyer home.

Kirch can not be seen and his wife and immediate relatives are reluctant to give out any information. He is a sick man and requires the care of a physician. It will be some days before a rational account of his wanderings since Sunday night can be obtained from him. Dr. P. J. Zeglio, the family physician, is attending him, and he has given orders to keep Kirch as quiet as possible. No mention has been made of the unfortunate circumstances to him by his family.

The accounts in the newspapers are largely responsible for the safe return of Kirch. Mrs. J. C. Harrison and her daughter, of Hopewell, had read the pathetic tale of his queer disappearance. The daughter chanced to see a man pass their home, and she thought from his appearance that he possibly was the much wanted man. The daughter told her mother, who quickly informed her husband. He speedily hailed the stranger and asked if he was John Kirch, of Plainfield. Mr. Kirch admitted his identity. He was welcomed to the Harrison home, and the Hopewell citizen slipped out and dispatched a telegram to Justice Nash saying that Kirch had been found.

The justice, in company with Mrs. Kirch, the lawyer's wife, repaired at once to Hopewell. When they arrived, Kirch had left the Harrison residence and was sauntering along the streets. At last they came face to face with him, and the scene of the meeting of husband and wife was quite pathetic. All three took the next train for this city, and Mr. Kirch was driven at once to his home on Somerset street. Since then he has been in bed, and an intimate friend declares that he is in a wretched condition.

It appears that on leaving the United States Hotel, at Trenton, Sunday night, Kirch walked all the way to Pennington, inquiring along the route for work. Being unsuccessful, he continued on to Hopewell arriving there yesterday afternoon. Everywhere he sought employment, but the reason for this is unknown to his friends. The tramp had weakened him considerably and when found by the searching party he appeared to be much fatigued.

DEATH OF MRS. CODINGTON.

Mother of W. R. Codington Died at Millington Tuesday.

Mrs. Jane Codington, widow of George W. Codington, died at her home in Millington, Tuesday, after a brief illness. She was eighty-two years old and was the mother of Former Assemblyman W. R. Codington, of this city. She leaves two other sons and a daughter.

The funeral services will be held from her late home Friday morning at 11 o'clock. Interment will be at Mt. Horeb.

Excellent Picture.

An excellent picture of Ward Stephens, organist at the Crescent Avenue church, appeared in the illustrated supplement of the Mail and Express. There was also a good picture of Mrs. MacBride, of the Crescent Avenue church quartette.

Brooklynite to Preach.

C. A. Lundquist, of Brooklyn, will preach to the Swedish Pilgrim church congregation Sunday evening. The services will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

Miss Sara Todd, of Hamden, Hunterdon county, is visiting Miss Force, of Duer street.

THEATRICAL STARS HAVE BEEN CLIMBERS

The Leaders Have Not Bounded Into Fame Without Great Effort on Their Part.

THE last few weeks money has been going for Christmas presents instead of for theater tickets, and right glad beats the heart of the theatrical manager that the 25th of December is over with for this year. As far as financial returns are concerned, the theaters the fortnight preceding Christmas might as well as not be closed.

But one must keep one's company together, and make a pretense that all is well; though stars of brilliant light shed their radiance on rows of empty seats, the funny man has but few souls to move to laughter, the song and dance folk do their turn before a disheartening number of vacant chairs.

Even the famous English artists, Irving and Terry, felt the tightened purse-strings to some degree during their late Chicago engagement, but there has been in consequence no diminution of effort on the part of these artists. Irving showed wonderful vitality and versatility in his work in the windy city, one day appearing in no less than four different roles, and no one of them an easy role. But Irving has ever been an indefatigable worker, and is yet in the possession of an amount of energy and vim that many a younger man might envy. For 35 years Mr. Irving has been prominently before the London public, and in that period has shown what can be accomplished by genius when closely allied to unremitting industry.

AMELIA BINGHAM.

Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern have won their way step by step; nay, sometimes only by half-steps. No meteoric flight has been theirs, though all well-dowered at birth with good wit and fair looks. Eternal pegging away at the technique of their art, eternal study and devotion to their aim, has been their experience. But now they stand well up that toilsome ladder of fame and can look back a long ways to the bottom rung whence they started.

Julia Marlowe can point to no one morning when she woke and found herself become famous over night. Repeated failures tried her mettle well before she attained general favor, and many then once were the discouragements such they well-nigh overwhelmed the talented girl.

But Miss Marlowe was fortunate in the possession of a friend, an actress named Ada Dow; one that was also her sternest critic and exacting teacher. Miss Dow, believing the girl had a future before her, determined to fitly prepare her for its requirements. Four years she kept her in seclusion and at hard study. In the morning the pupil was at work learning a part, and in the afternoon had to undergo the trying experience of acting the part before her unrelenting critic.

Then, after all this serious preparation, all this arduous training, the actress went forth to a public that was worse than critical, one utterly indifferent. If Miss Marlowe had not been wholly devoted to her art, this reception would have discouraged her faith in her teacher, her past meritorious efforts, in all honest work; but she possessed the undaunted soul of the artist, whose sublime belief in herself is the last part of him to die, and struggled on. In 1887 her Parthenia in "Ingomar" met with considerable success. In Shakespearean roles she afterwards made a reputation, her Rosalind in "As You Like It" being very generally applauded, and also her conception of Imogen in "Cymbeline." New York, however, refused for years to acknowledge her superiority, but at last, in 1896, the metropolis paid her homage when she presented a play from the German, "The Countess Vaselka." Her more recent successes have been in "Barbara Frietchie" and "When Knighthood Was In Flower," in the latter making her greatest hit.

Miss Marlowe has had to pay for her public triumphs the high price of domestic infelicity, the cause of separation from her husband, Mr. Robert Tabor, being assigned as jealousy on his part of her success on the stage.

Sothern came of stage folk, his father being an actor of note. But the father did not wish the son to follow the theatrical profession, and set him to study in an art school in London. The son, however, had the stage fever, and at 19 began, in a very small way, his stage career. In England and America he fought his way; engaged in what seemed a losing fight, sometimes so poor he actually went about hungry. At the end of a nine years' struggle as an obscure actor, he began to see glimmerings of better things, and in 1886 made a decided hit with "Lord Chumley."

In "The Three Musketeers" his success was phenomenal, and he became the swashbuckling hero we generally regard him as—although his last year's fine production of "Hamlet" has given us a quite different idea of Mr. Sothern's powers, even the veteran critics lauding him in the portrayal of the melancholy Dane. This year Mr. Sothern is successfully presenting Justin Huntley McCarthy's "If I Were King," with Miss Cecilia Loftus as his leading lady.

After speaking of people that have climbed, thought comes to mind of the play Miss Amelia Bingham has on the road this season, "The Climbers." The play is not a pleasant one, dealing as it does with people that are bending every energy to climb, not to exalted place in any legitimate profession, but into a "four-hundred set." It is very up-to-date, and is said to represent a phase of society actually in existence; but to repeat it is a morbid, unwholesome affair.

A vain and aspiring widow of humble origin, who has succeeded in marrying into fashionable society, puts forth all her endeavors to gain social recognition. One daughter sympathizes with her mother in her social aspirations and aids her in her strivings to gain entrance to upper tendom. Miss Bingham plays the part of another daughter, Mrs. Sterling, a noble woman married to a mercenary husband, who has become entangled in Wall street dealings, appropriates what funds he can lay his hands on; first those of his family and then those of his clients. His wife, ably aided by Howard Warden, a friend of the family, makes heroic efforts to save him. Mrs. Sterling and Warden are thrown much together, and fall in love with each other; but Mrs. Sterling will not give way to weakness, and, though the play is supposedly a picture of modern society, we are spared a scandal.

The Climbers," which opens with a funeral scene and closes with a suicide, is none decidedly not a cheerful play. The reason it has drawn such large crowds is not because of its merits, but is due largely to the fact that Mrs. Bingham is such a finished actress, and also because she has grouped about her such an array of talent. Miss Bingham is not only a good actress, but is also a good manager, choosing a strong cast to support her rather than a weak one to serve as background for her shining. Miss Bingham, like Mrs. Fiske and Miss Crossman, travels independently, is not under the wing of the theatrical trust.

THE ASTROLOGER.

NEW STYLES IN BLOUSES.

Peau de Soie and Satin Are Taking the Place of Taffeta.

The blouse waist of 1902 promises to eclipse its predecessors in daintiness and chic. It is made of every material conceivable, chiffon, satin, Peau de cygne, corduroy and peau de soie. Most stylish among these is peau de soie. This comes in a soft, lustrous quality and in all the evening and day shades. A lighter variety is called peau de cygne, and this has even more lustre than the peau de soie. Both peau de soie and peau de cygne cleanse well and can be worn for more than one season. For this reason they are usurping to a large extent the place of taffeta.

LACE WAIST.

Many of the peau de soie and satin blouses are made without linings and blouse both back and front.

Persian liberty satins in all the eastern colorings are very fashionable and are made up with fronts of chiffon and bits of hand embroidery.

The thoroughly French waist in the illustration is made of chiffon and rich yellow lace. Over a blouse of accordion plaited chiffon is appliqued a jacket effect of the lace having two medallions of painted mousseline set into the front pieces. The jacket effect is cut away at the sides to allow a glimpse of the under chiffon to be seen, and this is banded with velvet ribbons. The sleeves are marvels of grace. They are made of the lace inset with three medallions of the mousseline. There is a deep cuff of lace and black velvet. The collar has an odd trimming contrived with two straps of velvet. In the front where the lace jacket opens over the chiffon blouse there is a full rosette of the chiffon with long lace tipped ends.

RICH TRIMMINGS.

Jeweled Lace and Painted Velvet Lead Among Novelties.

Evening gowns are, many of them, of the gauzy semitransparent type worn over satin orientale or bright glace, and gowns composed solely of velvet and satin are rarely seen. Many dresses are finished with deep accordion plaited flounces. A deep border formed of tiny frills also makes an exceedingly pretty finish to an evening skirt and is made of crepe de chine, mousseline de soie, net, chiffon and many types of net.

OF HELIOTROPE CHIFFON.

Jeweled lace is effective, and, although sequins are generally introduced, the beading designs are carried out in jewels. Silver sequins of the small type are charming with pearls, and two or three sizes are used on the same gown with good effect.

A French evening gown is the subject of the cut. It is made of two shades of heliotrope chiffon and is trimmed with perpendicular bands of medallion appliqué, with which are inset velvet disks. The waist is composed of a short bolero over an accordion plaited chiffon blouse. The novel sleeves reach half way between the shoulder and elbow and are trimmed with several tiny ruffles.

Old Man Tells His Chums What a Busy Man Can Do.

"I calculate that I've done the biggest day's work to-day that was ever done in this neck of the woods," said Wilson, with a sigh, as he sat down on a soap box.

"I don't know," said Old Man Procious, taking a chew of fine cut, "what have you done?"

"What have I done? I've split and piled three and a half cords of stove wood since sun-up."

"Pshaw! That's nothing," said the storekeeper. "When I was a boy, many's the time I've done the same thing and half a cord better."

"Talk about chopping wood," said the drummer. "When I was a lad I lived on a farm down in Stone county. I was keeping company with a girl and intended to marry her if her old man ever consented. Well, one day when I was hanging around her house the old geut told me that if I would clear up the back lot in one day he would go to Smithville and get the license for us.

"The back lot had about two acres of the toughest kind of second growth of hickory you ever saw. It looked like a big job, but I wanted Nell pretty bad and I decided to try it. I started in next morning at sunrise, and what I did to that hickory was a plenty. I thought I'd surprise the old man and do a little more than he had required, and when the sun went down—Say, what do you suppose I'd done?"

"Can't guess," piped old Procious

"Give it up," said Wilson.

"Well, sir; I had cut all that hickory, hauled it up to the house on a stone-boat, piled it in the woodshed, grubbed out all the stubbs, plowed and dragged the lot and sowed it to buckwheat."

"WHEN I WAS A BOY."

"M-m-m," muttered Procious in his whiskers.

Wilson spat at the stove and asked: "Why didn't you harvest the buckwheat while you were at it?"

The drummer lit a cigar, and, clasping his hands over one knee, leaned back and gazed at the ceiling.

"Talking about chopping wood," began old Procious, "you fellers don't know anything about it."

Wilson winked slyly at the storekeeper and looked pityingly at the drummer.

"When I was a boy," continued the old man, "we thought nothing of eight or ten cords a day. There was consid'ble betting in the neighborhood as to who was the best man with the ax. Sam Morris beat them all with a record of 11 cord from sun-up to sun-down. I 'lowed I could go him one better, and put up a new rifle to that effect. Now I knowed tha' a man can't do his best when he is in a hurry, so I took things easy—in fact, didn't take off my coat till noon—and 'long 'bout three o'clock I reckoned that I'd cut about all I could pile before dark. Well, it measured up a little over eight cord. I knew there ought to be more than that, so I went back to see if I hadn't skipped some wood when piling. Nary a stick could I find. At last, while standing by the stump of the first tree I'd cut in the morning I noticed something bright sticking in it. It was the head of my ax, and, genta, I'd cut eight cord of ash stovewood with nothing but the helve."

The silence that followed, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, was broken at last by the drummer asking the storekeeper if the village went dry last election.

Faithful Even Unto Death.

A remarkable story, which is really true, is told of an affectionate son in Buda-Pesth. His age was 88, and in a fit of despondency he leaped from a bridge and committed suicide because of his inability to longer support his father and mother, aged, respectively, 115 and 110 years.

Latest Thing in Meters.

A telephone meter has been invented by Thomas Baret, of Sydney, N. S. W. It begins to record time the moment the telephone is used, and ceases when the receiver is hung up. The object is to make each patron pay for the exact time he has used it, and not for the number of messages.

Town of Morphine Fiends.

Morphine is used extensively on the town of Juana Diaz, in Porto Rico. It is estimated by the insular board of health that out of the 2,500 inhabitants, 1,000 are victims of this terrible habit.

SUCCESSFUL WOMEN.

From Small Beginnings in Business They Have Achieved Independence.

Just now I have in mind three women who from unpromising beginnings in commercial life have won a success that most men would be satisfied to attain.

Fifteen years ago Miss Helen, a girl in short frocks, was alike physically and financially the smallest sort of saleswoman in a dry goods store. There seemed no outlook for her beyond working for $4 or $5 a week, yet that did not induce her to slump down and say there was no use trying to get on. Miss Helen simply did her best day after day, year after year, first in one store, then in another, wherever she could get from time to time a little increase of pay. She was sometimes put into a new department, and wherever she found herself she learned all she could of the goods she sold. In this way she became an expert in several branches of merchandise. She just stuck to her work, learned all she could and waited and hoped.

SHE CHECKS OFF THE CHECKS.

A few months ago a firm operating a great department store offered her the place of buyer for its jewelry and fancy article counters. She accepted and now gets $30 a week and her transportation expenses when she travels to New York to make purchases.

There, too, is Miss Hilsabeth. She had no especial business training, for she had not been brought up with the expectation of working for her living—so much the worse—but she was extremely quick, clear headed and accurate in arithmetical operations, and she wrote a hand—in the upright style of penmanship it was—that was as plain to read as print and as accurate so far as grammar, spelling and punctuation went. She was not a stenographer and typewriter, but just a penman who was quick in figuring. One day she saw an advertisement for an accountant who wrote a good hand. She answered it by writing to the firm a better in her best manner and applying for the place. She got it at once on the strength of her penmanship.

She is now accountant in a grocery where there are perhaps fifty salesmen. Her task is to audit these salesmen's checks. She sits all day with the bits of paper flying to her like snowflakes and makes a note of every one and runs her eye over it to ascertain if its items be correct. She gets excellent pay, not yet enough to support a husband, but she has prospect of a handsome increase. She obtained this honorable and well paid post through writing a plain, beautiful hand and being able to add up columns of figures quickly and correctly.

The last of the three is Mrs. Virginia Louis Ralston, lately appointed fashion editor for a popular periodical. She, too, began to get her business experience in a modest way in dry goods stores. Like Miss Helen, she learned everything she could connected with her work as she went along and stuck to business. After a time she became known as a special expert in millinery and children's clothing. Next she was sent to Paris as a buyer of these wares for her firm. The story is merely a repetition of the means used with the results widening constantly, faithful application to business and continually learning.

A little more time elapsed, and Mrs. Ralston knew as much concerning all kinds of dress goods as she did of millinery and children's clothing. Then she went to Europe four times a year, buying merchandise and studying fashions in London, Paris and Vienna. She now has the name of being the leading authority on women's wearing apparel in this country.

Where they have been tested women make equally very capable purchasing agents for wholesale houses, and they have now been tried in almost every department from hatpins to agricultural implements. They are apt to observe details more closely than men and to be more economical. One is even on record as being a hop buyer for a brewery. But to be successful in any field a woman must be no laggard and must not putter with her task in a half hearted way.

Flowers on Evening Gowns.

Roses and a few other flowers, without foliage, are seen frequently on evening gowns and are festive and pretty. Some are placed at the corners of the shoulder and others have them any and every where. There is no set style about them.

Some Chatty Gossip in the Field of Sports

"What's the very latest book of popular fiction?" asked one of the best known horse owners in the country of a bookseller recently. "I must name a lot of yearlings that I will enter in next year's two - year - old events, and I find that nearly every conceivable avenue of research for good names has been traversed by others. The registry of the Jockey club contains the names of almost everything but an undiscovered and of course unnamed comet."

Library Names for Equine Heroes.

On the testimony of the Keenes, Morrises, Belmonts, Whitneys, etc., it is said that the selection of names for dams invariably is the refuge of those who have sought in vain in the realm of literature, science and the arts for names that the turf authorities will accept for thoroughbreds. It was but a short time ago that Mrs. A. H. Morris, who used to give names to the famous "all scarlet stable," departed from all precedents and chose one-syllable words for all names. It need surprise no follower of racing if, when he reads the nominations for the great stakes of 1902, he sees such names as the Crisis, Virginia, Elipha-let, Lazarre, Helmet of Navarre, Tolstoi, Thompson-Seton, Calumet K., Kim, Right of Way, D'ri, etc.

While on the subject of names, the funniest thing in the turf world this year undoubtedly was the trip of Andy Hamilton, the "colored Archer," to Russia, where the celebrated jockey rode for some of the best known nobles of Moscovy. For six weeks he was attended in a Moscow hospital by the czar's own medical adviser and recovered from a severe injury gained by a fall at the Moscow race track. But that was not funny. Hamilton could be rode for a Russian Prince "Tchoeptchylofski," or some such name. "I thought the world's supply of vowels done was turned loose over thar," said Hamilton upon his arrival from his Russian trip. "Bless my soul, if I was to 'tempt to tell you the names of these Russian bosses I'd need the library of Tolstoi. Mighty queer it was to hear a Russian noble tellin' me to ride 'Obdjetcheff,' or some such hoss. I jes' watched his lips move, guessed what he meant and 'most 'ways got the right hoss. How'd I guess the animal? Truth is, a little stable boy did it for me. One day after I was hurt, Marty Bergen (you remember Marty, who rode the mighty Salvator when the chestnut hung up the mile record at Monmouth) began to ride for Prince Plenty of Vowels. There wase 23 horses in the race, and their combined names would reach about a mile if set up in type. Just think of Bergen, the former hero of many a stake in the east, riding for a man whose name he could not pronounce, piloting a hoss with an almost unpronounceable name and up against a starter who wielded a long knout and whose interpreter would make him look like a moujik. Bergen wanted to make a good impression and he jockeyed to get a flyin' start. Of course the Russian starter opened up on Bergen. After the race Marty told us he knew the starter was Old Man Caldwell, the former highest salaried starter in America. 'Can't fool me with all those jawbreak yells,' said Marty. 'That fellow is the same old Caldwell who used to swear at us jockeys at Guttesburg. I'd know him anywhere, even with long whiskers.' Oh, I had a great time in Russia. It's a good thing the papers there don't print the form cards of races as they do in America. The printers would run out of sorts in type setting hoss names."

Alvin C. Kraenzlein.

Alvin C. Kraenzlein, who is held by many to be the greatest all-around athlete in America, recently told me in unequivocal terms that he was no longer a candidate for competition and that he would not appear in the Olympian games. But the influence of this great athlete is in the world of intercollegiate athletics will not down. If not actually hurling his well-built form through the air in the broad jump or running over the hurdles is safe to say that the American college men who will compete will be thinking of Kraenzlein when straining every nerve for the capture of the laurel wreath and bronze medal.

Alvin commands the athletes to all students. Certainly he has made a grand record in two universities as a student as well as commanding attention as an athlete. In the Paris Olympian games Kraenzlein, wearing the red and blue of the University of Pennsylvania, carried off more records than any other man from 14 countries represented. His college dean once told him that the reason so many college graduates made a failure in practical life was that they knew nothing outside of books. Athletics never divide energies, Kraenzlein holds; they multiply them. "I could do more work and better work while training than at any other time in the term" is his positive statement. As to young men carried away by an excess of enthusiasm for athletics, they are in the minority compared to students carried away by other phases of life not half so worthy. All of his faculty at Wisconsin and Penn, thoroughly believed that athletics was a healthy adjunct of "varsity life. To-day Kraenzlein is the greatest living example of the strenuous athlete and finished scholar. He took his first hurdle over a coal bin in the basement of the East Side high school in Milwaukee. He has hurdled all difficulties in university life since then and is now ready at any time to give a college student gratuitous instructions on how to combine mental and physical training.

A small coterie of men prominent in the billiard world will attempt, some time within a few weeks, to compel the public to look to the three-cushion carom billiard game for future champio n s h i p s. This, at first sight, may seem almost an impossibil i t y. But since the 18-inch one-shot-in balkline c h a m pionship just decided in New York, an abundance of evidence has come to light substantiating this declaration.

King took Lone to Dead.

"There are but two or three great 18-inch balk line players in this country" is the argument of "this group of manufacturers. "Why should we continue to keep them on the pay roll and pay out big money each time we wish a championship where the country is full of devotees of the three-cushion style of play? The country took to bowling because anybody may play the game. Our contention is that three-cushion billiards is easy and the public is ready to adopt it as the popular game. It is pyrotechnical and there are hundreds of good players where there are but few experts at balk line. We will declare that three-cushion billiards is to be the champion game, and there will be no end to the state, municipal and sectional championships. When you get right down to bed rock, we and we alone, are the people who are paying to keep 18-inch balk line style of the game afloat. We are through. There will be no more great 18-inch balk line championship tourneys!"

If you play billiads, take the progneatication of the billiard authority under consideration. It is probable that the trend is toward the angle style of the game, practice it. While you may not be able to make a run of 20 at 18-inch balk line, you may rest assured that conscientious work with the cue in practice at three cushions sometimes may be rewarded by a run of eight or more at angle billiards.

Back to the starting point in his real baseball career goes Charles "Kid" Nichols, the veteran pitcher of the Boston National league team, by his determination to take his release from the Hub management and become a magnate and player in the Kansas City club of the Western league. Thirteen years ago this great ball player was the hero of the hour in the city by the Kaw. But of more importance to fans than his apparent retrogression finally to "looking forward" instead of "backward"—is the change in a veteran team that "Kid" Nichols' absence will bring about. Herman Long, the sensational shortstop, and Robert Lincoln, the Harvard man second baseman, served the same long period with the Boston club. Long says he will remain with Soden's club next season.

"Kid" Nichols on the Bee.

Lincoln, in many respects, is one of the best-known ball players in the country. He first broke into fame years after the season of 1888, he became the great twirler for Omaha the next year. With Frank Selee, the manager, he went to Boston the following year, and pennants came easy to Boston with Nichols to go in at vital points and clinch games. Fate seems to act as readily upon important baseball combinations as does advancing age. Selee will manage Chicago next year, while Nichols will try his hand at managing, owning and pitching in Kansas City. The baseball players know how valuable a twirler Nichols has been to Boston. Yet none will quite agree upon a description of his most effective twirling. He knows every player and just how to fool him," is the general way of putting it.

E. G. WENTLAKE.

CLAIMS ARE SIFTED.

Getting Money Out of the Treasury Is Hard Work.

All the Powers of Government Are at the Disposal of the Court of Claims Which Investigates Every Petition.

"PEOPLE who want to get money out of the treasury, through the court of claims, do not realize the difficulties which lie in their way," says one of the experienced officers of that court.

"For example, we have under consideration the claim of a man for $100,000 for the use of his insulated wire during the civil war. This man secured that amount from a telegraph corporation, and he expects to recover that much from the government. But there is where he makes a great mistake, as so many others like him have done and are doing. He thinks that this court of claims is a very small part of the federal government. As a matter of fact, this court of claims is 'the whole thing,' because we have at our disposal all of the powers of all the executive departments of the government. In this case, by way of illustration, we informed the secretary of the treasury of the claim, and requested that a secret service agent be sent abroad to ascertain whether or not this gutta percha insulation was invented by this claimant. We thus ascertain that this insulation was discovered and patented in Germany long before the civil war. It costs considerable to get this information, but it knocks out the claim of $100,000, leaving the government upwards of $95,000 ahead; for without this information the government would have been obliged to pay the claim.

CAPT. LUNDBORG.
(Claims a Fortune for an Alleged Naval Discovery.)

"In like manner we can call upon the war department, navy department, department of agriculture and all other powers of the government in defending the treasury against these unjust, unlawful and enormous claims. Here is an instance of a man who makes claim against the government for supplies furnished the federal soldiers during the civil war. In every claim of this kind the claimant must establish the fact that he was loyal during the great conflict. This claimant swears to his loyalty, and a number of his friends make similar affidavits. Well, we sent to the division of rebellion records, and there, in the records of the confederacy, we find that this man was disloyal, in that he furnished aid and comfort to the confederate soldiers. We have a dozen copies of his signature, and it corresponds with his signature to-day. Of course, he did not know that the government has possession of the rebellion records, and hence he did not know that we would easily have means to disclose his disloyalty. In common with all other claimants, he is waiting for the money which he claims; but, like a majority of his kind, he will be disappointed.

"Here is a colored man making claim to a large sum of money because of destruction to property by federal troops during the civil war. He swears that his master went into the rebellion and left all of his property to the colored man. It was in Alabama, and the colored man swears to his loyalty, as well as to the ownership of all this property. We have here the state laws of Alabama which were in force during the civil war, and it is provided that 'no negro shall own any property; not even a dog.' That settles this claim. The negro is simply used as a cat'spaw by his master, who was disloyal. The government will not pay that claim."

One of the most important claims that has been before the court for a long time was that of Charles G. Loudborg, who demanded a judgment of $250,000 for an alleged use of certain plans and specifications prepared by him in the construction of vessels for our navy. Under date of May 8, 1883, the secretary of the navy published an invitation "to all engineers and mechanics of established reputation, and all reputable manufacturers of vessels, steam engines, boilers or ordnance, having or controlling regular establishments and being engaged in the business; all officers of the navy, and especially all naval constructors, steam engineers and ordnance officers of the navy, having plans, models or designs of any vessels, or engines, or parts of, of the classes authorized by the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1883, to submit such plans, models and designs to the secretary of the navy."

This claimant, Lundborg, submitted plans which were never used nor returned to him. Because the department did not return his plans the claimant has asserted that they were accepted and that he was entitled to the amount set forth. As a matter of fact, the plans presented by Lundborg contained nothing of value that was new; and such suggestions made by him as were valuable were already in use in British, French and American war vessels. For example, the claimant lays particular stress upon his tank system of raising and lowering the bow and stern of a vessel. The court of claims disposed of this contention by showing that Mr. Froude, the eminent authority upon naval construction, had in 1872 in illustration of this theory made a series of tank experiments which were well known to the shipbuilding world, and wide discussion followed. It was further demonstrated by the court of claims that the navy department has in its possession plans of all of the public and secret improvements in naval construction held or in use by the naval powers of the earth.

This court was established by act of congress, February 24, 1855. It has general jurisdiction of all claims founded upon the constitution of the United States or any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States, either in a court of law, equity or admiralty, if the United States were amable, except claims growing out of the late civil war and commonly known as war claims," and certain rejected claims.

It has jurisdiction also of claims of like character which may be referred to it by any executive department, where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000, or where the decision will furnish a precedent for the future action of any executive department in the adjustment of a class of cases, or where any right, authority, privilege or exemption is claimed or denied under the constitution. An appeal only upon questions of law, lies to the supreme court in all cases; but the findings of fact by the court of claims are final and not subject to review by the supreme court.

There are five judges who sit together in the hearing of cases, the concurrence of three of whom is necessary for the decision of any case. The court sits in the department of justice building on the first Monday in December of each year, and continues in session until the following summer, or until all cases ready for trial are disposed of.

During the sessions of the congress scores and sometimes hundreds of bills are introduced authorizing the court of claims to consider cases which are barred by lapse of time. The statute of limitations bars consideration of cases which are based upon facts which are alleged to have occurred more than six years previously. It was only by congressional enactment that the claimants mentioned above, Lundborg and others, secured standing in this court. These cases demonstrate the carelessness of some congressional committees in such matters. If congressmen had gone into those cases as carefully as they should have done, the time of the court of claims would not have been encroached upon, because the bills would never have been passed.

The attorneys and assistant attorneys employed by the government for this court render valuable service of which the general public hears nothing. Their salaries are from $2,000 to $3,000 per annum. The attorney who looked up the laws of Alabama and defeated that one claim earned his salary for about 40 years by saving so much to the government, and that same attorney will save the government perhaps half a million dollars a year, by painstaking endeavor in a number of cases requiring knowledge, acumen and diligence.

"I will not take a case before the court of claims if I can avoid it," says ex-Congressman J. Hale Sypher, one of the oldest practitioners here. "In the first place, the fee is always contingent, and in the next place the work is hopelessly hard. The attorneys for the court are all able lawyers, and, as your friend told you, they have all of the resources of the government back of them. Although I believe they sometimes reject good claims, oh legal technicalities, they undoubtedly save the government many millions by disproving and causing the rejection of unjust claims.

There are lots of wheels within wheels in this great big ramifying government of ours, and therefore it happens that we never hear of the good work done by many faithful public servants.

SMITH D. FRY.

RURAL MAIL ROUTES

Sixty Thousand Petitions for This Service Now on File.

How the Delivery Districts Are Laid Out and Organized—Great Help to the Good Roads Movement.

[Special Washington Letter.]

"TAKING any more than 5,000 rural free delivery routes now in operation," says the first assistant postmaster general, "and there are upwards of 60,000 petitions on file for this service. They come from all parts of the country."

"Did you say 60,000 applications?"

"Yes, upwards of that number; and petitions are coming in every day, and by every mail. The people have read of this innovation for the benefit of the farm districts, and they are determined to take advantage of it. Farmers for many years have reasoned that as citizens of this republic they are as much entitled to have their mail delivered at their residences as are the citizens who dwell in towns and cities.

"Of course, at first there were very few farmers who reasoned that way; but their number increased gradually until their views compelled recognition. Then, this service began, six years ago, it was undertaken in a half-hearted manner. But when Perry Heath took it up in 1897, with characteristic energy, the service soon began to become practical as well as practicable.

"We first had an appropriation of $50,000. Then we got $300,000. Then we asked for more and more, until last year we had $1,750,000 for the work. But during the present fiscal year we have $2,500,000. This enables us to go ahead with considerable alacrity in the work; but for the next fiscal year we should have not less than $5,000,000, and we hope to secure appropriations for $10,000,000 and that will enable us to do business on a bigger scale than we have been able to work hitherto. Of course, this work has been experimental for several years, but now it is beyond that stage, and is in practical operation. Therefore it must be maintained."

One of the special agents who has been engaged in the establishment of these routes explained the manner of work in an interesting manner. He said: "When a petition is received by the department, it is jacketed, indexed and referred to its proper field division. For example, suppose a petition comes in from any state west of the Mississippi river. It would be sent to the western division, which has headquarters at Denver, Col. The special agent in charge of that vast division is William E. Annis, a veteran newspaper man, who was for a number of years a Washington correspondent of some leading newspapers.

"Well, when a case is thus received at division headquarters, it is properly filed, and then referred to a special agent in the field. I have just been hard at work in the Seventh congressional district of Iowa, and will tell you how the work has been done. In the first place, there were exactly 36 cases for that district. The congressman, Mr. Hull, had indorsed every petition. Without his indorsement nothing would have been done in any case.

"These cases were divided off into counties, and I devoted myself to a county at a time. The city of Des Moines is in Polk county, and I took that county first. I attended to the wants of Valley Junction, Polk City Grimes, Ankeny and Runnells. I'd take a case early in the morning, go on the steam cars to the point to be investigated, and there find the postmaster, who would provide a livery team and go with me over the proposed route.

"No route is permitted to be more than 25 miles in length. When you remember that the postmaster must go over the route every day in the year, excepting Sundays and national holidays, you will understand that the strain is such that it would be physically impossible to keep the paper on a longer route without breaking down. At some seasons of the year it is practically impossible for the teams to traverse the roads. For example last May and June the roads were well nigh impassable, and the rain might be continuous by day and by night for weeks.

"It being settled by the department that no route shall be more than 25 miles long, the postmaster prepares a map of the proposed route, and has it ready for the special agent when he calls. In each case I send word a week in advance, so that every postmaster would have plenty of time to get ready for the work of the day. The map would be made on common paper, with quadrilateral lines for the sections of the township; all of the sections being numbered. The route would be outlined about these sections, and as we were driving I made it my business to note the kind of roads we were traveling. Then, for every house on the route I would make a little dot on the map on the proper side of the road. For every schoolhouse I made a little flag, and for every church I made a little cross. I also made note of the streams, bridges, hillsand low ground which might be undesirable for a route in bad weather. It was a full day's work every day; and in the evening there was time for rest and recreation, because it was necessary to arise in the morning when called, in order to take a train to another locality.

"For seven weeks the work went on that way, without any let up. The rough draft maps and notes of the routes were filed away very carefully. After all of the territory had been carefully examined, a competent firm was employed to make perfect maps for the permanent use of the department. In each case a blue print was made of the accepted map of route and presented to the postmaster for his future use.

"Then came the work of writing up all of those reports. It is necessary that proper persons shall be selected to carry these routes. Each carrier must have a substitute to carry the mail when he is indisposed. Carriers and substitutes must give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties. It is the duty of the special agent to see to it that the carriers are properly instructed. The report in each case shows clearly all salient facts concerning the proposed route, in order that the department may be in charge of a division thoroughly understand the case, and give it such indorsement as meets with his judgment.

"Each case is finally forwarded to Washington, where the chief special agent and his assistants reach final conclusions concerning the work. The general superintendent gives direction to all of this work and keeps it by him in hand that he knows every day when any employe is engaged and upon what work. He has a large map of the United States in his office; and there, with little stick pins bearing their names, he locates all special agents and inspectors in the field. Each agent is required to send to his chief, a week in advance, a statement of his itinerary for the ensuing week; and thus it is known from day to day where every man is at work.

"In my travels I made inquiry of carriers concerning their work, its increase or decrease. Without exception I found that the mails have increased during the past year in the volume of mail sent and received.

"Another thing interested me everywhere, and that was the interest the people take in improving their roads. Just north of Nevada, Ia., there is a stretch of two miles of rich soil, so rich that it would be impassable in wet weather. The farmers along that road raised $200 to pay for the gravelling of the road, in order that they might have rural free delivery. The same spirit is everywhere manifested and I look for good roads as a result of this postal innovation. It is a better way to get good roads, too, than the way which Coxey proposed with his tramps a few years ago.

"The interest taken by the people is something wonderful. As we drove along the roads, the postmaster handling the reins while I had map and pencil in hand, we met farmers taking loads to town, or saw them in fields, or in door yards; and, as the postmaster would call out: 'Get your mail box ready,' they would cheer and say: 'We're glad you've come at last.' In some cases the petitions have been on file for fully a year, and the people anxiously waiting all that time. The cause of the delay has been the lack of appropriations for the employment of a sufficient number of special agents to examine and report on the proposed routes. There is enough money this year, and there will be plenty available next year, and the good work will go on."

When we remember the fact that nothing like this work has ever been undertaken before, that there has been no precedent for any movement, it is surprising to note this rural free delivery service has been built up into such a systematic machine in the space of four years. Mr. A. W. Machen, the general superintendent, has been charged with the full responsibility of the work. He needs and will receive no higher commendation than that uttered recently by the postmaster general to a senator: "No complaint is made, except that the service does not come fast enough to please all of the people." With ample appropriations, the work will now go fast enough, until every farmer has complete postal facilities.

TOUCH NOT THE CUP.

Good Motto for Many of Our Naval and Military Men.

Lessons to Be Drawn from the Meade Court-Martial—Lieutenant Sewell May Resign—Popular Illinois Statesman.

THE cup that cheers and inebriates has stirred up the United States navy department to a hitherto unknown extent. Incidentally it has disgusted the people of the United States to the straining point. Within three months two costly courts-martial have been called to inquire into the convivial habits of two prominent officers—Commander B. F. Tilley, naval governor of our Samoan island possessions, and Col. Robert L. Meade, of the United States marine corps. The Tilley court of inquiry, owing to the distance from which witnesses had to be brought, is said to have cost fully $50,000; and the Meade court-martial threw much discredit upon side lights on the personal habits of our "gallant defenders" that one may well express doubt as to the efficiency of our naval discipline.

Col. Meade is one of the most distinguished officers of the marine corps. During the recent unpleasantness in China he commanded the American marines in Tientsin and distinguished himself more than any other officer in the place. His coolness and military ability received unstinted praise from the commanders of the allied forces, and congress brevetted him brigadier-general for meritorious service. Upon his return to the United States he was detailed to command one of the marine corps of the Brooklyn navy yard, the most acceptable post in the service. But trouble soon began to gather about the veteran commander's head. He had incurred the enmity of several of his staff officers who, in the course of time, filed charges against him, the main accusation being "drunkenness on duty" and "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals." The principal complainants were Maj C. H. Lauchheimer, adjutant of the marine corps, and Col. F. L. Denny, quartermaster. Col. Meade was forced to give up his sword and stand trial before a court-martial. After weeks of spirited inquiry he was acquitted and reinstated as commandant at the Brooklyn navy yard.

Col. Meade's friends believe that he was the victim of a cabal, of which Maj Lauchheimer was the head. They go still further and asserts that there exists a combination among certain officers on duty in Washington to arrange appointments for their own benefit and Meade's acquittal by a jury implies that those who brought charges against him were guilty of something like malice. While most of the witnesses for both the prosecution and defense were positive that Col Meade was sober, the majority seemed equally certain that his accuser, Maj Lauchheimer, was drunk on two occasions in Boston.

The question of what constitutes intoxication was aired at length during the trial. What appeared drunkenness to one of the epauletted witnesses was described as "exaltation" by another. A third declares that the defendant was "high" and the fourth that he was a "little mellow." They all agree that a good deal of liquor-drinking was going on. Some of the witnesses declined to commit themselves, because they had acted in the capacity of hosts, and shielded themselves under the plea that no gentleman who entertains his friends should ever consider or even notice the effects produced upon his guests by the liquors and wines placed at their disposal.

The only fact proved conclusively by the court-martial is that very many of our officers are addicted to the use of liquor and that an occasional "jag" is not looked upon as a serious offense, so long as it is a strictly private drunk.

The American people are proud of their army and navy. Would the money at the Meade court-martial should be repeated they will lose their confidence in the service. A man who gets drunk is unfit for command. He may have all the qualities of a gentleman, but his love for liquor may incapacitate him for leadership at a moment when nothing but presence of mind could save the men under him. There was a time when inebriety was not looked upon as a heinous sin, in fact, that day is past. Even in continental Europe, where the drinking of beer and wine is a national custom, army and navy officers are compelled to restrain their convivial habits. How much more careful, however, should our officers be, who know that the temperance sentiment represents the best elements of society and the most progressive thought of the land.

WILLIAM WALTER WELLS.

Everybody is glad that Col. Meade, gallant fighter on many battle fields, was acquitted of the charge of drunkenness, but nobody wants a repetition of his trial which was altogether the most disagreeable episode of the first year of the new century.

SEWELL MAY RESIGN.

New Jersey Senator Talks of Retiring to Private Life.

THE high political circles of the country were thrown into something akin to consternation the other day by the announcement that Hon. William J. Sewell, of New Jersey, contemplated to resign his position as United States senator. The senator is a very sick man, and his physicians have advised him to retire from public life. However, there have been other statesmen standing on the brink of the grave, not one of whom thought of sacrificing his official position for a few more years of earthly enjoyment. Should the New Jersey statesman carry out his present plans, he would be the first senator of the present generation who considered life a greater blessing than political power. Senator Sewell is an Irishman by birth. He came to this country a mere lad in search of fortune. In 1861 he entered the military service as captain of the Fifth New Jersey regiment and served with conspicuous gallantry through the war, rising to the rank of major general of volunteers. From 1870 to 1881 he served three times as state senator from Camden county, and in the latter year was elected to the United States senate. At the end of a six-years term he retired to private life, but was again elected to the senate in 1895 and reelected last January for the term beginning March 3 last and ending in 1907, which he is now expected to decline to fill. Although but 66 years of age, the senator has been as invalid for some time. Should he carry his resolution to resign into effect he would probably be succeeded by David Baird.

UNCLE JOSEPH CANNON.

Illinois Congressman Who Controls the Expenditure of Millions.

ONE of the most unique characters in public life is Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, representative in congress from the Twelfth Illinois district. In his home, the pretty city of Danville, he is known to old and young as "Uncle Joe," and in the rural districts surrounding the county town he is sometimes worshiped as the ideal of a statesman. "Uncle Joe" is a great talker. He can answer every question and at times makes up in force of argument what may be lacking in logic. In the house of representatives he has had many "scraps," all of which added to his fame down Danville way. No congressman within the memory of man has been quite as jealous of the interests of his constituents as he; consequently his reelections have followed renominations as day follows night. As chairman of the house committee on appropriations Congressman Cannon is one of the most important factors in our government. He controls the expenditure of more money than any other one man in the world; a big statement which is robbed of all extravagance, however, when we remember that the appropriations of the last congress amounted to a period of only two years, amounted to $1,406,000,000. "Uncle Joe" has had a longer experience on the appropriations committee than any other member of the house, having been a member of its bureau for its chairman eight years. He is getting to be an old man, and some of his friends think he should be given a rest in the United States senate; but this proposition is not very cordially received by ex-Comptroller Dawes, Congressman Hopkins and others who have an eye on Senator Mason's seat.

GOTHAM'S NEW MAYOR.

Seth Low Is a Man of General Information and Wonderful Executive Ability.

Seth Low is a man of medium height and powerful build. His every move is suggestive of great energy and force. His ambition is without limit. Apparently he has much at life before him. He was born in Brooklyn, January 18, 1850. He graduated from the Brooklyn Polytechnic institute. This institution of learning has not been a collegiate course, and at the age of 17 years Seth Low entered Columbia university. In 1870 he graduated at the head of his class. He then entered the big tea and silk house conducted by his father. He rose from clerk to be member of the firm in 1875. Four years later he succeeded with other junior partners to the business, which was finally liquidated in 1888.

In the meantime Mr. Low had been active in public life. He became conspicuous in politics and charitable work. In 1876 he was a volunteer visitor of the poor. In 1879 he organized and became president of the first bureau of charities. He affiliated with the republican organization in his ward. In 1882 Mr. Low was elected mayor of Brooklyn for a two-year term. In 1884 he was reelected.

On October 7, 1889, less than 39 years from the time of his graduation from the institution, Mr. Low was elected president of Columbia. He did much for the university. He found time for municipal affairs, too. He was a member of the rapid transit commission and of the civil service reform charter commission. Four years ago President Low was a candidate for mayor of New York, but was defeated by Robert Van Wyck, Tammany's candidate. In politics Mr. Low's new mayoralty has pursued an independent course. In 1884 it was charged that he voted for Cleveland. This charge has been denied. President Low, however, was in sympathy with many of Cleveland's views, and in 1896 he not only opposed the republican national ticket. In 1896 and in 1900 he supported McKinley.

HONORING A NURSE.

Memorial Erected in Her Honor by the Survivors of the Second New Hampshire Regiment.

The story of Miss Harriet P. Dame, the famous army nurse, has been recalled by the recent marking of her grave in Blossom Hill cemetery, Concord, N. H. The memorial was erected by "her boys," the survivors of the Second New Hampshire regiment, of the war of the rebellion, and subscription a cause from old soldiers throughout the country. Many of the donors had been tenderly nursed by Miss Dame and remembered her as their ministering angel.

The monument which has just been dedicated is diamond-shaped and of white stone, the white diamond being the famous symbol of the old Third corps, with which Miss Dame served. Upon the die is the inscription: "Harriet P. Dame, 1814-1896. Nurse, 1861-1865. Erected by the survivors of her regiment, the 2d New Hampshire Volunteers, 1901." Upon the reverse side is "Third corps, Army of the Potomac."

At the close of the civil war Miss Dame accepted a place in the treasury department, Washington, and lived in that city until the year of her death.

A Mania for Moth Balls.

A fad for eating and inhaling the odors of moth balls was discovered recently among the young lady students of Lawrence university. No less than 30 of the co-eds, it is found upon investigation are victims of the habit. At first the odors of naphthalin were simply inhaled, but the abnormal taste has developed of late, to such an extent that two of the girls confessed that they actually ate the drugged insect destroyers.

ORGANIZED CHARITY.

The giving of aid to the unfortunate brother has so long been associated with the work of the church that the charity, announced by H. M. Maxson, president of the Organized Aid Association, of turning all charitable work to one organized source which shall receive all contributions and direct their distribution, comes almost like a shock. A few minutes thought, however, will convince one that it is simply along the lines of organized charity which have been steadily growing of late years.

It does not mean that the churches are to cease contributing for the assistance and relief of the city's poor and unfortunate. Such a thing is farthest from the thoughts of Mr. Maxson and other advocates of that plan. The contributions are, however, to be turned over, in the case of this city, to the Plainfield Relief Association which works under the direction of and in combination with the Organized Aid Association. Each church is to give up the support of its poor and give direct into the general fund.

The result aimed at will be that no one will be receiving aid from two sources and the really worthy ones will be helped as they deserve to be but that no impostors will be able to work their schemes with success. The saving during the year will undoubtedly amount to considerable and can then be bestowed on worthy cases which might otherwise be in want. It is simply the old question of the gain to be derived from organization, as shown in the monster corporations and trusts, but here applied to the subject of charity. It might, in plain language, be termed a "charity trust."

It is a question to be now extended this movement will be in Plainfield. A number of pastors have agreed to the plan. To make it successful, there should be a complete unity of effort. It will probably meet its chief opposition from those who feel that such a method of distributing charity is cold and almost heartless and that it will defeat certain of the aims of the Christian people who desire the personal factor to figure in the work of charity. This is probably the only argument of any force that can be made against it.

A NEW GOVERNOR.

After being without a governor for a few hours, New Jersey now has a new chief executive who was placed in office, this noon, with all due ceremony. After an eventful three years, Foster M. Voorhees, of Elizabeth, has retired from office and Franklin Murphy, of Newark, his duly elected successor, has formally assumed the reins of government to hold them for the next three years if providence permits.

The man, who has been chosen to hold the chief office which the people of New Jersey can give, is one well qualified for the place. While, like the rest of mankind, Franklin Murphy is human and therefore liable to err, his mistakes will be, judging from his past career, those of judgment and not of principle. He is a thoroughly upright and honest man and may be expected to carry out his duties with integrity and care.

In another column will be found his first message to the State Legislature. It is a well-written document and shows that Mr. Murphy has looked carefully into the affairs of the State even before he took up the duties of his office. It will bear reading by everyone who is at all interested in the problems which confront the legislators of the State.

ANOTHER RESIGNATION.

Geo. P. Dupee Cannot Devote His Time to Sewage Commission.

George P. Dupee, of Rockview avenue, has resigned as a member of the borough sewage commission. Mr. Dupee states that he is unable to devote the necessary time to the purpose which the work demands. The vacancy will be filled by Mayor Smalley at the regular February meeting of the council. Mr. Dupee is the second member to tender his resignation, W. W. Howland having tendered his resignation a few weeks ago.

An Aged Tree.

George Taylor, of Elmwood place, who recently purchased a piece of property on Grant avenue, where he expects to build in the near future, had a sassafras tree cut down by Joseph Randolph. So far as can be learned it is one of the oldest trees in the city. Mr. Randolph estimates that the tree is at least 107 years old, he having counted that many rings on the tree.

Engagement Announced.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Lillian R. Scribner, of West Front street, to Clifford B. Moe, of Stelle avenue.

FELL UNDER CAR WHEELS

James Moran Fatally Injured on Jersey Central Tracks Tuesday Morning.

DIED AT THE HOSPITAL.

Was Crossing Cars Standing on the Track When a Sudden Jolt Threw Him in Path of Wheels—Was Working at Potter's—Leaves Wife and Three Children.

While on his way to work in the Potter Press Works yard, shortly after 7 Tuesday morning, James Moran, a mason living at 190 Grove street met with an accident which resulted in his death two hours later. He attempted to clamber between two coal cars which blocked the pathway over the New Jersey Central tracks at Lafayette place when the train started and he was thrown beneath the wheels. Both legs were terribly crushed from the knees down. He died at Muhlenberg hospital at 9:30.

Moran, who was thirty-five years old, left home early Tuesday morning to secure some of the day's work on the first job he had had in a long time. He was a skilled mason but was laid off on the completion of a contract several weeks ago. Monday a neighbor secured work for him as a laborer digging a well in the Potter yard. As is the custom of a large number of employes of this shop, he started to take the short cut from Front street through Lafayette place to South Second street, crossing the tracks.

On reaching the embankment he saw he was cut off by the stalled empty train of cars, west bound, but did not hesitate to climb over them. He had nearly reached the step on the opposite side when a sudden jerk caused him to lose his balance. He fell directly across the rail and before he could roll out of harm's way, the wheels of a large gondola caught him.

By a superhuman effort he managed to get his mangled limbs off the rail and to the ditch beside the tracks. He was unable to attract the attention of the flagman on the caboose but his shouts brought two women and afterward John Kitchen, who resides on Lafayette place adjoining the railroad, and William Wenzel, who was passing. After making him as comfortable as possible and learning his name, they hastened to Muhlenberg hospital and procured a stretcher. In this way he was gotten to the institution, but not before he had lost consciousness.

Through a mistake in getting his name, his wife was not informed of the accident in time to reach the hospital before he died. A sister was the only one at his bedside at the end. He leaves three small children. The wife is almost prostrated from shock.

The spot where Moran was injured has been a veritable death-trap for years. It is a favorite crossing place with scores of workmen despite the fact that a dozen have met death in doing so. On account of the sheds and fence belonging to the Cadmus mill, it is impossible to see a train until almost directly on the tracks while it is often necessary to clamber over or between stalled cars as was the case this morning.

PARTED COMPANY.

John Jerolaman Tried a Cure That Caused Trouble Between Oven and Stove.

Heat and naptha never did take to each other. John Jerolaman, of South Second street, wasn't aware of the fact when he rubbed naptha on his aching feet, Sunday afternoon, and then placed the members in a stove oven to assist in the pain killing.

The fumes from the naptha collected in the small space and suddenly exploded. The oven parted company with the rest of the stove. After Jerolaman arose from the far corner he found his feet aching worse than ever. They had been blistered as far as the knee and he is now figuring how long it will take to get his shoes on.

JOHN FLYNN, SR., DIED AT HIS HOME SATURDAY.

Death Came From a Stroke of Paralysis Tuesday—Leaves Seven Children.

John Flynn, Sr., of West Fourth street, who was stricken with paralysis Tuesday afternoon, died at his home at 4 o'clock Saturday. He continued to sink rapidly from the time he was affected and was in a comatose state the greater part of the time. The end had been expected by his physician, Dr. Boone, for two days.

Mr. Flynn was sixty years old and came to this country in the early 50's. He moved to Plainfield in 1859 and with the exception of a brief stay near Scotch Plains, lived here ever since. He was a gardener by occupation.

The deceased leaves a widow and seven children. The latter are Roundsman John Flynn, Patrolman Charles Flynn, Edward Flynn, Miss Catherine Flynn and Miss Clara Flynn, of this city, and Mrs. Francis Donlon and Thomas Flynn, of New York.

The funeral services were held from St. Mary's church, Tuesday morning.

INFORMAL DANCE.

Large Crowd at Park Clubhouse Saturday Evening Had a Very Pleasant Time.

The Park Club was the scene of much life, Saturday evening, when one of the regular informal dances was given under the auspices of the entertainment committee. It was conceded to be one of the most successful affairs of the kind given this season. The clubhouse was filled with members and friends. It is believed that there were nearly two hundred guests that enjoyed the dance.

There were twenty-two selections. The music was furnished by Von der Mehl, of Newark, and everyone was delighted with it. Included among the guests were twenty from out of town.

Another evidence of life was the presence of a large number of members and friends on the bowling alleys and at the pool and billiard tables. Every form of amusement furnished by the club was sought and enjoyed fully. Promptly at midnight the festivities were concluded.

SPRINKLING BY THE CITY

COUNCILMANIC STREET COMMITTEE IS STILL CONSIDERING IT.

That Was Chief Topic for Discussion at a Meeting of the Committee Last Evening.

There was a meeting of the Councilmanic street committee, Thursday, when the members continued the discussion regarding street sprinkling at the city expense. The members have not yet decided the question in their own minds whether or not to present a favorable report to the Council.

They do not want to increase the tax rate. This would be necessary if the city takes up the work. Yet [the expense to the taxpayer would not, they say, be as much under the present rule. Under the present plan many people pay as much as fifty cents a week for sprinkling while many pay twenty-five or ten cents per week.

The committee believes that a general sprinkling of the macadam streets would mean a saving in the wear and tear on the same. This is believed to be true in North Plainfield where the borough does its own sprinkling. The first year of municipal sprinkling would cost the most as the equipment would come in that budget. After that it would naturally be less. The committee will hold several meeting to discuss this question and secure all data possible before a report is made to the Council.

SPOKE TO VETERANS AND SOLDIER BOYS

Special Exercises for Their Benefit Held in Reform Hall Sunday Afternoon.

THE SPECIAL MUSIC.

ADDRESS WAS GIVEN BY REV. MR. DOOLITTLE, OF DUNELLEN.

Gave a Temperance Talk—Members of G. A. R. and Company K Attended the Service in a Body.

An interesting service was held in Reform Hall Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock for the members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and Company K. There was a large attendance of members from both organizations.

President John Goodwin was in charge of the meeting, assisted by William F. Richards. An orchestra, composed of R. W. Barnes and Anthony Gaub, violins; Whitfield Frasee, cornet, and Fred Goodw in, piano, and led by John L. Edsall, conducted the song service.

After this service, William F. Richards gave the veterans and Company K boys a hearty welcome. He then introduced Rev. Mr. Doolittle, of the M. E. church, of Dunellen, who made a stirring address on the subject of temperance. He commenced by saying that he was an emergency man. This was due to the fact that he was the third choice, the other two persons selected to speak, being unable to do so. Mr. Doolittle took for the text "Abbor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good." He spoke of love as being the true essence of religion. To love God and your neighbor the speaker held to be most essential in this life.

The speaker went on to give many reasons why the liquor traffic is a curse. He said that there are 340,000 places in this country where liquor is sold, and that 500 places are added to this number every year. He also said that there are 1,200,000 persons engaged directly in the traffic. Continuing his strong appeal in behalf of temperance, Mr. Doolittle told of the effect of alcohol on the body, and of its ruination in the various professions. He said that nowadays there is not a railroad of any importance that will engage a man who drinks because he is not to be depended upon. So it is with nearly every industry of any size. In conclusion, Mr. Doolittle pointed all to Christ, who alone can sustain a man and keep him from the deadly curse. He said that a man cannot of his own strength keep from the habit and he must have the Divine strength.

After Mr. Doolittle's talk, John L. Edsall sang a solo entitled "My Home Before the War." The meeting closed with the benediction by Rev. Mr. Doolittle.

Before the meeting closed two recitations, "Old Man Jim," and "The One-Armed Soldier," were given by Richard Foote, the California tragedian, by request, and Miss Susanne Kranz, the western prima donna, sang "The Star Spangled Banner." Rev. Mr. Doolittle pronounced the benediction.

NEW GOVERNOR INAUGURATED

Franklin Murphy Took the Oath of Office at Trenton Tuesday Noon.

WITH MUCH CEREMONY.

Exercises Were Held at Taylor's Opera House—Then Followed Luncheon—Parade Was the Event of the Afternoon—A Public Reception.

Trenton, Jan 21—With all the splendor of a State function, martial music bright uniforms and distinguished men, Franklin Murphy, the sixth Republican to be elected, was proclaimed governor of the State of New Jersey, in the presence of an immense throng, today. The constitutional requirements were carried out in the elaborate proceedings held in Taylor's Opera House, but there was more than the usual amount of pomp attending such affairs in this State. Never since the inauguration of General George B. McClellan has there been such a magnificient ceremonial.

The military pageant redounded to the glory of the State, over 4,000 men, members of the National Guard, together with thousands of persons belonging to civic organizations, participated in the parade. Preceding this feature was the inaugural ceremony, which took place promptly at noon.

This was opened with prayer by Rev. Henry R. Robinson, Chief Justice Gummere, of the Supreme Court, with much solemnity, administrated the oath of office to Mr. Murphy, and a wild cheer came from the throats of the assembled multitude when the governor-elect promised to execute the constitution and the laws of the State. From without came the deafening sound of the salute of seventeen guns, fired from the State House grounds some distance away.

The retiring chief executive, Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, immediately delivered the great seal of the State to his successor, and he made a few well chosen remarks which were received with plaudits. In accepting the seal Governor Murphy was quite brief, referring to delay his remarks until the chosen time for his inaugural address, which had a scheduled place on the programme.

Former Governor Voorhees formally introduced the new executive to the president of the Senate, Charles Asa Francis, who in turn introduced him to the members of the Senate and General Assembly. Governor Murphy then delivered his address. This timely document, which was read in a clear voice will be found in another column of this issue. As soon as he had concluded Rev. Judson Conkling said the benediction.

Governor Murphy, together with the retiring chief executive, the heads of the various State departments, the members of Congress and United States Senator Kean, were dined at the Trenton House. There were covers for about forty officials. As soon as they had finished the repast they repaired to the reviewing stand.

The parade was the feature of the afternoon which attracted the vast crowd. The line was formed at 12:30 o'clock and the march was scheduled to begin promptly at 1 o'clock. It was considerable after that time when the signal was given for the troops to start. The Essex Troop, with Congressman R. Wayne Parker, in command, had the honor of escorting the Governor to the State House where on a specially erected platform he reviewed the parade. Drake's Veteran Zouaves, was given the right of line in the second division, escorting the survivors of the Thirteenth regiment, New Jersey Volunteers, of which the Governor was a member during the Civil War.

Heading the line was a division of the National Guard, and among the companies in line was Co. K., of Plainfield, commanded by Captain W. Kempton Browning. A number of prominent citizens of Plainfield and North Plainfield marched with the McKinley Club, of Elizabeth, in the third division. When the paraders passed the reviewing stand, the troops came to "present arms" while the men in the civic organizations doffed their hats in honor of the choice of the people in the recent gubernatorial campaign. Although the line of march was short it was late in the afternoon, when the paraders were given the order to break ranks.

A public reception was held in the afternoon at the conclusion of the parade. In the evening a military and legislative reception was held, and all prominent State officials and politicians attended.

Early yesterday afternoon, prominent politicians from all quarters of the State began to gather and the corridors and lobbies of the principal hotels and the State House as well. The Republican caucus, Thursday evening, was the chief topic of discussion. During the evening the arguments of the rival candidates' supporters became more heated and many spent a sleepless night listening to this and that political prophet's idea of just what the caucus would and would not do when the meeting came off.

The members of the Senate and Assembly were "button-holed," but as a rule these men had little to say. Edward C. Stokes, of Cumberland county, is holding his own in the race. John F. Dryden, of Essex county, is being boomed strongly and his friends are making it warm for the candidacy of John W. Griggs, who is making a hot fight.

Board of Health as an isolation hospital. He then gave a description of the hospital as one of the best equipped in New Jersey, with a capacity of thirty. He said that the Board of Health is taking every precaution to prevent a spread of the disease by common sense methods and will continue to do so.

Dr. T. H. Tomlinson gave an interesting history of epidemics of small-pox in Plainfield. The first case recorded was in 1871. A man came from Newark to Plainfield to visit his fiance and he was taken ill with the disease. A temporary hospital was erected and he was cared for there. He recovered and afterward married the young woman of this city.

He spoke of another case, where a man called at his office for treatment. The doctor decided he had small-pox, and quarantined him. The man deliberately ignored the quarantine, left his home and went to a saloon at the corner of Front and Somerset streets. There he threatened to shoot the doctor as well as Dr. J. P. Sutphen because they had made a wrong diagnosis, he claimed. Fifteen days later there were nineteen cases of small-pox in the city and the people were greatly alarmed.

Dr. Tomlinson read abstracts from The Constitutionalist published at that time showing how strict the authorities were in vaccination and the care of the disease. At that time there were seven fatal cases. There were 4,000 vaccinations and the expenses of that epidemic were $4,705.

In conclusion, Dr. Tomlinson gave interesting data and said that, with such an excellent Board of Health as at present, he hoped the time would soon come when small-pox would be entirely annihilated.

Dr. W. C. Boone was the last one to present a paper. His subject was Jenner. The doctor gave a very interesting sketch of the man to whom the people owe everything for the discovery of vaccination. He told of the way he has been ridiculed, yet after many years the physicians from one end of the world to the other recognized his discovery as the only safe preventive of a spread of small-pox.

Dr. Hunt, of Metuchen, a member of the State Board of Health, was among those present. Upon invitation he gave a brief history of the condition of small-pox in New Jersey. He said that at present there are 400 cases in this State, chiefly in Camden, Newark, Hudson county, Hackettstown and Sayreville. He said that it is easy to read a paper on small-pox and at the same time make a wrong diagnosis. He urged great care in this, also prompt quarantine, vaccination, prompt removal to an isolation hospital. He advised the physicians to get a census of the population as regards vaccination so that it could be known who has and who has not been treated. If the proper measures were adopted Dr. Hunt said that he did not believe that business in any community should be interferred with at all. He urged common sense along this line.

At the conclusion Dr. Hodges invited the physicians to join in an informal discussion, but as the ground was so fully covered they all declined. After the symposium refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served and a social time followed.

Those of the profession present were Drs. Edward Rushmore, T. H. Tomlinson, J. T. Fritts, M. B. Long, F. C. Ard, E. W. Hedges, W. H. Murray, J. H. Carman, N. W. Currie, Marcus L. Clawson, A. F. VanHorn, B. VanD. Hodges, Rolland Tomlinson, A. H. Dundon, Norman H. Probasco, J. B. Probasco, Peter H. Cregar, Martha Stillman, T. S. Davis, O. L. Jenkins, W. C. Boone, Albert H. Pittis, and Health Officer Thurlow, of this city; Dr. Hunt, of Metuchen; Dr. Long, of Somerville, and Dr. Cortright, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York.

Children Especially Liable.

Burns, bruises and cuts are extremely painful and if neglected often result in blood poisoning. Children are especially liable to such mishaps because not so careful. As a remedy DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve is unequalled. Draws out the fire, stops the pain, soon heals the wound. Beware of counterfeits. Sure cure for piles. "DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cured my baby of eczema after two physicians gave her up," writes James Mock, N. Webster, Ind. "The sores were so bad she scaled two to five dresses a day." L. W. State Y. M. C. A. Convention.

The State Y. M. C. A. convention will be held at Camden February 6-9, and it is expected that a number of local members will attend the meetings.

PROTECTION FOR BOROUGH

Borough Council Voted Funds for Free Vaccination and Considered a Hospital.

AT A SPECIAL MEETING.

Appropriated $250 For Use of Board of Health and Appointed Committee to Ascertain Cost and Possible Location for an Isolation Hospital.

In order to cope with danger arising from the possible appearance of small-pox in the borough, the North Plainfield Council, at a special meeting last Friday, decided to supply the Board of Health with a necessary means to vaccinate all citizens free of charge upon application. Further than this steps were taken by the appointment of a committee to ascertain the cost of acquiring and maintaining an isolation hospital. It developed in the course of the proceedings that there was some conflict of opinion among the councilmen as to the value of vaccination as a preventive of that dreaded disease.

Properly speaking the meeting took the shape of a conference between the mayor and Council on the one hand and representatives of the Board of Health on the other. Dr. Albert Pittis, the borough physician, was also present and he participated in the deliberations. Briefly the mayor outlined the object of the session and no time was lost in getting down to work.

Almost at the outset, Councilman Lee, who does not appear to have much faith in vaccination, asked Dr. William E. Honeyman, secretary of the Board of Health, whether that body would require the removal of a person afflicted with the disease to the proposed isolation hospital, in case the person was in comfortable circumstances. He explained his hypothetical question by saying that there might arise a condition whereby a person lived in an isolated house, containing all the conveniences. Dr. Honeyman stated that he did not think that this would be done.

The question arose as to the power of the councilmanic body to establish such an institution. Corporation Counsel Charles A. Reed was not present, but the Mayor said that he had received an opinion from the former to the effect that the power to do so was vested in the governing body of the municipality. He declared that steps should be taken in the matter at once. In response to an inquiry from Councilman Clark he started that no particular location had been suggested for an isolation hospital. His opinion was that it would be necessary to purchase a plot of ground with a suitable dwelling thereon. With much emphasis Councilman Lee voiced his opposition to such a course, saying that such action would be premature, inasmuch as there are no cases in the borough at present.

Dr. Pittis expressed his views regarding the advisibility of establishing a hospital for the purpose and he was firm in his advocacy of the suggested plan. He also approved of compulsory vaccination at once. A motion was carried calling for the appointment of a committee, composed of the members of the Board of Health, the Mayor and the borough physician, to ascertain the cost of fitting up and maintaining a proper isolation hospital, and to report at the next meeting when the corporation counsel will be requested to be present. The idea of having the corporation counsel present was suggested by Councilman Northrop who appreciated the value of the body being legally advised by its own lawyer as to the steps it might take.

When the matter of arranging for the free vaccination of the public was brought up, Councilman Northrop declared that such matters are in the province of the Board of Health. Mayor Smalley, however, said that inasmuch as any plan would involve the expenditure of money, which the Council must appropriate, he thought that the governing body of the borough might entertain the matter. Councilman Nichols expressed a wish that vaccination might begin at once and he brought the matter to an end by moving that the Council chambers be tendered for the use of those selected by the Board of Health to take charge of the vaccinations.

No one could judge as to the probable cost of conducting vaccinations, but Dr. Honeyman quoted some figures. In addition to the proceedings Councilman Clark offered a resolution to the effect that $250 or so much of the same as might be needed, be appropriated for the use of the Board of Health in this matter.

Councilman Northrop disapproved of the motion on the ground that no figured were presented as to how the appropriation would be expended, while Councilman Lee objected to it because of his opposition to vaccination. Both voted against the measure, and the votes of Councilmen Clark and Nichols were recorded in favor of the motion. There being a tie Mayor Smalley cast the deciding ballot, voting in favor of the motion.

A Profitable Investment.

"I was troubled for about seven years with my stomach and in bed half my time," says E. Dumick, Somerville, Ind. "I spent about $1,000 and never could get anything to help me until I tried Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I have taken a few bottles and am entirely well." You don't live by what you eat, but by what you digest and assimilate. If your stomach doesn't digest your food you are really starving. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure does the stomach's work by digesting the food. You don't have to diet. Eat all you want. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cures all stomach troubles. L. W. Randolph.

HEAD NOISES CEASE IMMEDIATELY.

F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, SAYS:

BALTIMORE, Md., March 30, 1901.

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.

I had been deaf eight years ago my right ear began to ring, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in that ear entirely.

I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the head specialist of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.

I then, saw your advertisement accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had been using it only a few days and following the instructions for about ten days, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain

ELEVATING CENTRAL'S TRACKS IN NEWARK

Expect to Complete That Improvement in a Couple of Months.

CITY DOING ITS SHARE.

THE PENNSYLVANIA'S TRACKS ARE ALSO BEI N GELEVATED.

The Latter Railroad Will Require Two More Years to Finish Its Task — Progress Being Made.

Newark, Jan. 17—Both the Central and Pennsylvania Railroad companies have made great progress in the work of elevating their tracks in this city.

The elevation of the Central will be completed in a couple of months, and the Pennsylvania expects to have its task finished in two years.

The city is doing some of its share of work, for which $600,000 has been appropriated. But long after the tracks are elevated the city will probably be engaged in contests with citizens who have large claims for damages to property.

The Central has filled with cinders and earth up to the new grade a part of the road from Mulberry street to the Broad street station, and three tracks for passenger trains are laid on the grade. A temporary frame shelter for passengers getting on and off trains has just been started. The raising of the tracks south to the freight house along Lafayette street will be done later.

A temporary one-track bridge of heavy timber spans Mulberry street, and the freight yard east of that street has been filled up to the new grade. Tracks are in place there, and the iron skeleton frames of freight houses are being constructed. The new entrance to this main freight yard is from Mechanic street, and it is a narrow one. One track on the south side, along Hamilton street, will not be raised until the new steel bridge is ready for Mulberry street.

Tracks now rest on false trestles of heavy timbers across Ward street, New Jersey Railroad avenue, Bruen, McWhorter and Union streets, where the elevation begins from the east. The old iron bridges at McWhorter and Bruen streets have been elevated to the new grade, but the abutments are not yet built to the bridges. The retaining wall of patent stone on the east side of Railroad avenue is up, and when the wall on the west side is ready the long iron bridge will be raised. Men are engaged in the preliminary work on the bridge now. The raising of the bridge at Ward street is an easy task.

The city has nearly finished its work down Mulberry street, from Mechanic street south to Lafayette street, formerly Fair street, for the benefit of the Central Railroad. The new sewer, the paving of the street, the lowering of the trolley tracks and the cutting down of the sidewalk are near completion. The west sidewalk will be cut down to the new grade after the street is finished.

The cutting down of Mulberry street has ruined it as a business thoroughfare, so property owners and tenants, especially saloonkeepers, said today.

The Pennsylvania Company has its great retaining wall of massive blocks of stone on the west side of New Jersey Railroad avenue nearly finished from the south end of the city up to Lafayette street. The temporary one track, west trestle, of heavy timbers is built up to Elm street, and on part of the trestle construction tracks trains are being operated. Great spiles are being driven deep in the avenue between Lafayette and Hamilton streets to support the retaining wall to be erected there. This place was a deep swamp many years ago, and when the first railroad track was laid there for the New Jersey Transportation Company they sank out of sight. Hundreds of tons of rock were dumped in the swamp and disappeared, and old citizens say that trunks of trees had to be used in the swamp to make a foundation that would hold the tracks and trains.

Work is now under way on a section of the retaining wall between South and Monmray street. This section was not built on at first because the Pennsylvania Company wanted to grab almost the entire west side of the avenue there. An ordinance to vacate that side of the avenue from Murray street to South street has been passed by the Board of Street and Water Commissioners.

The work of building an elevated station at Market street will probably not be started until the tracks from Market street to the Passaic river are elevated. The foundations for the retaining walls in that section will soon be started. Then the sharp curve from the station to the Passaic bridge will be abolished and a new elevated bridge put in place.

The elevation of the Pennsylvania and Central tracks will be of incalculable value to the railroad companies. For the people of Newark it means the abolishment of grade crossings, for which they will pay $600,000.

TOOK TWO FROM CRANFORD

PARK CLUB BOWLING TEAM WENT TO CRANFORD THURSDAY.

Parks Saved Themselves From Last Place in The Daily Press League.

By defeating the Cranford team on its own alleys in two out of three games, last Thursday, the Park Club team saved itself from becoming the tail ender in the Daily Press Bowling League. The two teams appeared to be evenly matched, but a number of strikes and spares made by the Park bowlers raised their scores.

There was a good sized crowd present to witness the contest, which at times was quite spirited. Townsend, Faber and Hibbard did some clever work for the winning team, while McIntyre and Sharp carried off the honors for their team. The final game was very close, the Park bowlers only winning by sixteen pins, although in this initial game they had 134 more pins to their credit. Cranford won the second game by forty points.

Two Houses on Thornton Avenue.

Ethel R. Lloyd, of North avenue, has contracted with William H. Kirch, of the borough, for the erection of two houses on Thornton avenue at a cost of $5,000.

Child Worth Millions.

"My child is worth millions to me," says Mrs. Mary Bird, of Harrisburg, Pa., "yet I would have lost her by croup had I not purchased a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure." One Minute Cough Cure is sure cure for coughs, croup and throat and lung troubles. An absolutely safe cough cure which acts immediately. The youngest child can take it with entire safety. The little ones like the taste and remember how often it helped them. Every family should have a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure handy. At this season especially it may be needed suddenly. L. W. Randolph.

DRESS ACCESSORIES.

Trifles Which Every Well Dressed Woman Should Possess.

Many are the dainty trifles which increase the beauty of a costume. Collars of pearls are still as stylish as ever, and a single string of them is worn looped over the top of the collar. Dog collars made of strands of the narrowest velvet ribbon are smart additions to a decollete gown. The ribbons are held together by jeweled slides to match the ribbon.

Huge jeweled flowers are taking the place of the omnipresent rosette. Wreaths of baby roses are worn by those who are still young, and they give a quaint look to a pretty face. Bunches of marabou feathers are smart for matrons. Draperies of jeweled tulle are held together by jeweled buttons and form smart evening sleeves on dinner and dancing frocks.

Smart sashes of Persian chiffon or panne have the ends embroidered with black lace butterflies, and the girdle proper is run through slides of jet.

Many fancy fronts are being worn with dressy tailor mades. One of the prettiest of these is shown in the illustration. It is made of pale blue chiffon over liberty satin. The square yoke is collarless, and from this three bands of guipure run the length of the waist. There is a yoke of tucks, and the fullness is held into a folded belt of pale blue velvet.

EVENING GOWNS.

Lace and Flower Designs Ornament Many Handsome Robes.

Handsome gowns are made of white and black mousseline de soie. A favorite way of trimming the white gowns consists of stamping them with floral designs. These designs are outlined with silver spangles, and the lighter shading is done with washes of gray water color. This gives a very shimmering and dainty effect. A gown recently made by Worth for Mlnnie Maddern Fiske carried out this idea. It was relieved by touches of turquoise blue liberty satin.

The beautiful evening gown in the illustration is made of sheer white all over lace. It has two linings, the upper one of mousseline and the under one of taffeta. The skirt and waist are covered with leaf applications of black mousseline outlined by silver spangles. The stems joining these leaves are also of silver spangles. Here and there is placed a fluffy pale yellow rose made out of chiffon, with a flower center. The belt is of folded panne. The sleeves reach to the elbow and consist of two small shoulder capes, into which are gathered soft transparent puffs of mousseline.

BADE RECTOR A FAREWELL

Farewell Reception Given to Rev. Father Smyth by His Many Plainfield Friends.

PRESENTED WITH PURSE

Large Demonstration Held at St. Mary's Hall Last Thursday—Addresses by Prominent Plainfielders—Gift for the Retiring Priest—His Thanks.

A remarkable demonstration was made at St. Mary's parochial school hall, last Thursday, in honor of Rev. Father P. E. Smyth, who was recently transferred to St. Joseph's church, Jersey City, after a pastorate of nineteen years in this city. The grand and deserving tribute was paid by an assemblage which crowded all the available space of the large assembly room of the building. Roman Catholics and Protestants alike joined in making the occasion one abounding in enthusiasm.

Everyone in that throng showed unmistaking affection for the priest, and he, himself, on the other, gave marked evidence of his full appreciation of the enviable reception tendered him. The room was unadorned save for a few American colors which surrounded the likeness of the priest suspended over the stage. The chief decoration was the picture presented to one from the front of the room. Gazing on that large crowd no one could suspect as true the fact reflected it by being given the opportunity to express regard for the clergyman.

A welcome song rendered by the choir of the church opened the festivities. Mrs. Mary Smith acted as accompanist in this feature. Rev. Father Andrew M. Egan, the successor of the guest of honor, arose, and, moving to the centre of the platform, commenced an eloquent eulogistic address, the life and character of Father Smyth forming the basis for his discourse. His remarks were frequently interrupted by outbursts of applause. Following the priest, City Judge William N. Runyon made a brief address. He referred in glowing terms to Father Smyth as a citizen, as a man, as a clergyman and an ideal Roman Catholic, in all respects as he had learned to know him. The Judge caught the audience and it was not slow at showing its approval of his remarks.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, editor of the Sabbath Recorder, gave a pleasant talk, which was appreciated by much humor. He had many words to express as to the esteem in which he and others held the priest.

In his usual manner of expression, James E. Martine had many complimentary remarks for the guest of the evening. He declared that he spoke for his heart and that his words were founded on his warm friendship for the man.

A sketch of Father Smyth's career was given in an interesting way by Arthur Boone, chairman of the reception committee. Most of his talk was confined to the period which the priest had spent in this community. In concluding his remarks he took occasion to present to Father Smyth a check for $1,100, which he emphasized was but a token of esteem given on behalf of the many who appreciated the recipient.

With deep emotion, which could not be hidden, the venerable former pastor responded to the several addresses. Leaning on a chair he remarked that he felt that he needed some physical support as he was ill, suffering with homesickness. When he left the parish, said he, the loss sustained was not fully appreciated by him, but now he realized keenly how much he missed by the separation from so many dear friends. Many times his voice became choked for it was with difficulty that he was able to address those whom he had known intimately for so many years.

During the evening, Miss Mollie Traynor, acting on behalf of the Rosary Circle of the church, presented a gorgeous bouquet of American beauty roses to Father Smyth. After a farewell song had been rendered by the choir, all gathered around the priest and sang with much fervor "Auld Lang Syne." Father Smyth was again visibly moved by the demonstration accorded him.

Besides those who made addresses, on the platform were Rev. Father William Miller, pastor of St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield; Rev. Father Farley, curate of St. Mary's church; Rev. Father McGeary, formerly curate of St. Mary's church; Chief of Fire Department T. O. Doane, Chief of Police P. J. Kiely, John McNally, Richard Birmingham, John O'Keefe, John J Kenney, John H. Hillman, Patrick Casey, Matthew J. Conklin, C. J. Ward, Andrew R. Kenney, Thomas Brown, Patrick Sherrington, all of the committee; Dr. W. C. Boone, a trustee of the church; Peter Flynn, another trustee, who is the oldest member of the parish.

The sub-committee, having direct supervision of the affair, consisted of C. J. Ward, chairman, William O'Keefe, Thomas Brown, Miss Annie Slevin and Miss Gannon. The executive committee for the affair was as follows: Chairman, Arthur Boone; treasurer, J. Henry Hillman; secretary, Matthew J. Cashin; general committee—George Tobin, Andrew McArdle, John O'Keefe, John Kenney, John Conroy, Charles Ward, Dr. W. C. Boone, P. J. Kiely, Mrs. Slevin, Miss A. Slevin and Miss J. Butscher.

From the various organizations affiliated in the church the following committees were chosen to assist: St. Mary's T. A. B. Society, Michael O'Keefe, R. J. Birmingham, Charles McCarthy and Clarence Waldron; Catholic Benevolent Legion, William Harding, John Kenney, Hugh McDonnell and Cornelius Regan; Ancient Order Hibernians, Patrick Casey, Michael Nugent, James Foshre, John Driscoll and James Walsh; St. Patrick's Alliance, Patrick Harrington, John F. Casey and John Enuis; Knights of Columbus, John Owens, Jeremiah Callahan, John Traynor and John McNally; Children of Mary, the Misses Margaret Carney, R. Colbert, L. Gannon, Margaret Harding, M. Cnerin, Jeannette Summers and Loretta Flanagan; Sodality of the Immaculate Conception, the Misses Emma Sullivan, Catherine Harding and Margaret Casey; Ladies Auxiliary of the A. O. H., Mrs. Linke, Elizabeth Fitzgerald, Delia Flatley, Margaret Corrigan and Catherine Galbraith.

WEDDING OF W. M. M'CUTCHEN

WAS HELD AT HOME OF BRIDE IN ELIZABETH FRIDAY NIGHT.

Bride Was Miss Marian de F. Keys—A Very Quiet Affair—They Will Go West.

A wedding of much interest was that of Friday evening, when William Marsh McCutchen, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. St. John McCutchen, of Washington Park, quietly married Miss Marian de Forest Keys, daughter of Mrs. Alfred de Forest Keys, of Elizabeth. The event, which was a very quiet one, was celebrated at the home of the bride's mother, at 8:30 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Atkinson, of Elizabeth, performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate relatives and a few friends.

The bride, who was attended by her sister, Miss Elsie Keys, as maid-of-honor, was given away in marriage by her brother, Herbert Keys, of Elizabeth. Charles Dupee, of Washington Park, was the best man. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin and carried a bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley. There were many presents of value received by the couple.

The bride and groom are both well-known in this city and Elizabeth. Mrs. McCutchen has attended a number of the social events in this city; Mr. McCutchen is a graduate of Yale in the class of 1900. He is now associated with the Ingersoll-Sergeant Drill Company and is located at Salt Lake City. As soon as he is well enough, he and his bride will take up their residence in that city.

LITERARY.

The February Century is to contain two articles, with illustrations, in the new scheme for beautifying the City of Washington; and another important feature in the same issue is "A Visit to Mount Vernon a Century Ago," containing conversations with General Washington as recorded in the diary of a Polish poet attached in this country to the suite of Kosciuszko. In one of their talks the matter of new buildings for the government departments in the "Federal City" was brought up—the expense of the buildings was estimated at $60,000, and it was suggested that it would be difficult to get enough houses to lodge all the members. "'Very well,' the General said, jokingly, 'they have only to camp out: the representatives will be placed in the first row, the Senate in the second, the President with his suite in the middle.'" The present topographical arrangement of the City of Washington was designed under President Washington's supervision, and the new plans contemplate an enriching of this arrangement, the chief improvement being a superb avenue from the Capitol to the Washington Monument, the latter forming an axis from which other avenues and vistas will open.

Don't Live Together.

Constipation and health never go together. DeWitt's Little Early Risers promote easy action of the bowels without distress. "I have been troubled with costiveness nine years," says J. G. Greene, Depauw, Ind. "I have tried many remedies but Little Early Risers give best results." L. W. Randolph.

The Misses Leichtenstritt, of Central avenue, have been entertaining company from Newark.

THE NECESSITY OF SLEEP.

What the Lack of It Means to Both Grownups and Children.

A club has recently been started in a western city for the purpose of limiting the hours of sleep to four. The members have bound themselves not to sleep more than this amount of time and to train their children to do likewise. It seems that the day itself is not long enough for us Americans to hustle in, but that we must also borrow from the night. The founder complains bitterly of the many hours we waste in sleep. He points out how much we might accomplish were we not under the illusion that we must retire at a certain hour and arise at a certain other.

STEAL A NAP NOW AND THEN.

"All nonsense!" he exclaims and proceeds to put his theory in practice.

Every evening, therefore, or, rather, morning finds himself, his wife and his little boy, aged seven, grouped about the family reading table. At 2 they retire, only to arise again at 6. And this is the case with every other family belonging to the club.

Now a word about sleep. Is it such a waste of time, and can it be limited for all people to a certain number of hours? It is a fact recognized by physicians that women require more sleep than men. On the same principle nervous women require more rest than their more placid sisters. The amount of sleep you require depends on the amount of energy you expend during the day. Sleep is the greatest, the only, restorer. How foolish, therefore, not to let it do its work thoroughly! In the case of children it is downright wickedness to deprive them of it. A growing child should slumber ten hours if it is ever to develop into an intelligent, capable man or woman. Lack of sleep stunts the brain; total lack of it drives a human being insane and eventually means death. Depriving victims of sleep was one of the most fiendish tortures of the middle ages.

Therefore I say especially to women: Sleep all you can. It is the greatest preserver and beautifier. It makes your brains bright, your eyes young, your bodies strong. Steal a nap when your head feels tired, and you will be more than repaid for the few minutes you have wasted (?) by the increased energy with which you will be able to resume your work. Napoleon had this ability to sleep for a few minutes whenever he chose. Who shall say this old rule did his efficiency? It would be a good thing if overworked women followed his example in this respect.

YEAR'S WORK SUMMED UP AT Y. M. C. A.

Annual Meeting of Young Men's Christian Association Held Thursday.

THE DIRECTORS ELECTED

A PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT WAS GIVEN BEFORE BUSINESS MEETING.

Work Which Has Been Accomplished by the Different Departments of the Association—President Cahoone's Report.

The annual meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association was held Thursday in the small hall of the building. The attendance was not very large, but there was a deep interest in the report of President S. A. Cahoone, as well as those given by the chairman of the various committees.

Prior to the business meeting there was a pleasing entertainment consisting of recitations by A. V. White and selections by the "Zebo Band," consisting of H. J. Martin, H. J. Martin, Jr., and L. A. Hummer. L. A. Hummer was the accompanist. There were also solos by J. C. Martin and duets by J. C. Martin and H. J. Martin.

Following the entertainment, President Stephen A. Cahoone called the meeting to order. J. Herbert Case was chosen secretary in the absence of the regular officer, A. R. Beers. Mr. Cahoone then read a Scripture selection after which G. M. Rittenhouse offered prayer. Then followed the reading of the president's annual report. This will appear in full in The Daily Press of tomorrow.

Of the individual departments, I. W. Travell, as chairman of the educational department, was the first to report. He stated that seven subjects are now being taught and every occupation is represented in the membership. The average attendance is, the various classes are as follows: Mathematics, 12; bookkeeping, 10; shorthand, 12; English, 21; mechanical drawing, 10; German, 6; Spanish, 5. The Spanish was discontinued early in the year owing to lack of interest.

The total enrollment was seventy-five, with a total attendance of 737. There were 129 sessions. Mr. Travell reported an increase in interest and attendance in all departments and more teachers are being paid.

G. M. Rittenhouse, as chairman of the religious department, reported that fifty-two Sunday afternoon meetings were held during the year, with a total attendance of 6,926, and an average attendance of 133 1-5. He also reported an increase in the attendance and interest in the various Bible classes.

O. S. Rogers, as chairman for boys' work, reported excellent progress. During the year the boys were entertained by E. L. Suffern and E. A. Overton. Mr. Rogers said that he hoped before long a secretary for the boys would be secured.

The report of the physical director, C. E. A. Heywood, was of interest. There are fifty-four classes with an average attendance of seventy in all classes. Mr. Heywood referred to Dr. Cregier's class, "First Aid to the Injured," which is doing good work. Mr. Heywood also mentioned the following games as having been played: Basket ball, hand-ball, as well as bowling and athletic events of all kinds. He took the boys on two trips during the past summer, one to New York and the other to Midland Beach.

The report of the treasurer, Curtis M. Thorpe, showed the following receipts: Received from members, $5,415.91; from subscriptions, $2,546.90; rentals, $969.13; entertainments, $267; Sunday collections, $142.74; legacy, $500; anniversary exercises, $211.98, making a total of $7,698.21. The expenditures amounted to $7,696.21, leaving a balance in the treasury of $2.

The following directors were then elected for three years, their terms having expired: E. R. Ackerman, George M. Clay, A. C. LaBoyteaux, H. M. Maxson, Harry Gee, O. S. Rogers. The latter was elected in the place of George H. Batchelor, whose business will not allow him to give his time to the association work. After a vote of thanks was given to the city papers for their courtesy in publishing association news, the meeting adjourned.

Installed by W. C. Smith.

The officers-elect of Wadsworth Post, G. A. R., of Somerville, were installed Thursday evening by Past Department Commander W. C. Smith, Winfield Scott Post, No. 74, G. A. R., of this city. He was accompanied by several veterans from the local post. All had a good time and were treated royally by the Somerville veterans.

THIS IS BIG MONTH FOR FRATERNAL ORDERS

Nearly All the Local Organizations are Holding Installation Ceremonies Now.

PUBLIC INSTALLATIONS.

SOME QUESTION AS TO MOST SATISFACTORY TERM OF OFFICE.

Six Months or One Year Appear to be Most Satisfactory—Strange Titles are Given to Some Familiar Offices.

January is the month when the officers of fully ninety-nine per cent. of all the lodges in Plainfield are installed in their respective offices and enter upon the discharge of the duties assigned to them by the rituals which govern them.

A few years ago there were several orders with the term of office in the subordinate lodges only three months in duration. This meant four new corps of officers a year. Practical experience demonstrated that this was entirely too short a period to allow an officer to plan any successful work, and the limit was extended to six months. The six months term prevails in about seventy per cent. of the orders, while the remaining number consider a one-year term about right and of sufficient duration to enable a corps of officers not only to become versed in their work, but to develop plans for the betterment of their lodges and to accomplish a net increase in membership.

The one-year term advocates are gaining recruits yearly and their claims appear to be well founded. In an order where the ritual is elaborate and the laws complex, it is very difficult to find an officer who is able to master these necessary things in less than three months. During the summer months the attendance of members is below the average and very little initiatory work is done. Unless the officer keeps reviewing his work constantly, he will forget parts of it. When the fall months come he is ready for active work, and before he is fairly started it is time to elect his successor. Especially are these things true in lodges meeting twice each month, and they apply with considerable force to those holding weekly meetings.

Against the one-year term is urged the fact that it is more difficult to secure an officer to serve that length of time than it would be for the term of six months. Competent officers are to be found in every lodge and the more trying and exacting the office the better the service on the part of the officer who realizes that enough time is given him to perfect himself in the duties of his position. While it may be true that incompetent officers are frequently secured because they think their term of office is short and they will soon have the honors of a past officer, it is equally true that many competent members will not accept an office on account of the short space of time allowed to them.

It has been estimated that there are over 30,000 lodges in this country. Each lodge has at least ten officers. This makes it safe to say that at least 300,000 officers will be installed during the present month. Each will take an obligation to do certain things and to refrain from doing other things. Pledges of fidelity to the order will be renewed; promises to render faithful service exacted and each officer will declare his or her intention to attend meetings regularly, not only to discharge the duties of office, but to inspire the floor members to come out and assume some of the work to be done to insure success. All these promises will be made in good faith. Many of them will surely be broken, but in the majority of cases they will be kept and the work of guiding the destinies of the more than 30,000 lodges will go on for the year.

Every office in a lodge carries with it an official title. Many are ordinary terms, easily spoken, but some are almost unknown to the ordinary individual and unpronounceable to many people.

A member of several orders who holds offices in two or three has some very peculiar titles attached to his name. The officer who holds the pen may be called the keeper of records and seal in one order, the scribbler in another, plain secretary in many, the ink horn guard in another, and the quill driver in the fifth, and by that time he will have no spare time to accept office in another order and attend to his work in the five. The presiding officer is known by more titles than any other officer. He is president to one, councilor is many, archons, regent, master workman, chancellor commander, plain commander, ruler, noble grand, worshipful master, dictator, protector and many others.

And so on through the list down to the names almost unheard of, but all constituting titles and carrying with them due authority to lead the members and guide them in the proper methods of transacting fraternal order business with justice to all and favor to none.

Public installation of officers is a ceremony that is becoming popular with many orders. A different form of ritual is used and friends of the members are invited to attend and see the new officers inducted into office. In the lecture which follows, the good points of the organization are brought out, circulars are distributed among those who do not belong and an invitation given to consider the matter of joining.

NEW STATION.

Will Soon be Erected at Perth Amboy by the New Jersey Central Railroad.

The good people of Perth Amboy who have been obliged to use for many years an old and out-of-date railroad station, are now congratulating themselves that in the near future a handsome new station is to take its place. While a definite time for starting the work has not been set, it is believed that it will not be long. Perth Amboy is one of the important points on the New Jersey Central and it needs a new passenger station as well as a new and commodious freight station.

It is proposed to erect a fine structure for the passenger station, such as have made the main line across the State famous. Officials of the road have been securing estimates for the proposed improvements and the residents have a reasonable amount of hope that ere many months their ideals will be realized.

TEA GOWNS.

Beautiful Adaptations From Historical Models.

Tea gowns have become very important. There is not a fashionable woman who does not possess one or more of these artistic creations. Any model is permissible provided that it outlines the figure and gives an idea of being a wrapper. Historical models are largely followed, principally those of the empire period. Many watteau models are also used and models which belong to no period at all, but combine the best points of each. The finest hand-work is seen upon these tea gowns, and hand painted medallions of chiffon or lace are not infrequent.

A pretty model is shown in today's cut. The material is pale green peau de soie, with a full, soft front of chif-fon of the same shade. It is made with tight fitting sides and a graceful watteau plait in the back. Wide bands of yellow insertion ornament the entire gown and are disposed so as to give the best effect to a tall figure. The short waist is in a bolero effect, composed of tucks and bands of the insertion. A novel feature is formed by the two knots of narrow black velvet having long streamers of the velvet. The neck is cut V shape both back and front. The sleeves are elbow length, ornamented with three bands of lace and a ruffle of chiffon. JUDGE CROLLEY.

WHITE FOR EVENING WEAR.

It Is the Height of Fashion This Winter.

One of the latest materials for evening coats is white corduroy. A recent model was built very simply and loosely. For sole ornamentation it had a great collar of lace edged with bands of dark fur. The whole effect was charming and a great relief to the over-trimmed creations of brocade which we have seen so much of this season.

White cloth is being much worn this winter, and there are few costumes more chic than one of this material trimmed with sable or black velvet. White frieze frocks are charming for young girls.

A white crepe de chine or broadcloth skirt is almost indispensable to wear with the light silk and chiffon waists which are so smart this winter. If made of crepe de chine, the skirt should have a tucked upper and a flounce ornamented with insertion or velvet ribbon. A charming model is one where the flounce is laid in graduated folds stitched invisibly. With such a two piece costume the belt should invariably match the waist.

The pretty evening waist here shown is of accordion plaited white chiffon. It has a bolero of white mousseline de soie figured in black and silver. This bolero rises in a point both back and front showing the accordion plaited undersleeves. A bow of panne ribbon is effectively fastened across the front of the decolletage. JUDGE CROLLEY.

THE FUNERAL OF MISS CORY

HELD FROM HOME OF PARENTS WEDNESDAY, JAN. 15.

Service Was Conducted by Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass—The Bearers.

An outpouring of relatives and friends, which completely filled the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Cory, of West Front street, Wednesday, Jan. 15, gathered for the purpose of hearing the last and rites performed over the remains of Miss M. Emma Cory.

Those who mourned comprised many with whom the young woman had conducted church work and carried out the good deeds which made her a favorite. Her class of girls from Hope chapel Sunday-school where she taught until a very short time before her death, were also present.

The services was conducted by Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, of the First M. E. church, of which Miss Cory was a member. He spoke impressively on the bright life so suddenly called away and dwelt on the need of being prepared. Two selections were rendered by Mrs. Dunham accompanied by Mrs. Nelson Miller.

The floral tributes were exceptionally numerous and comprised many large and pleasing. Those were from the Epworth League and the Mission Circle of the First Methodist church, the congregation of the Piermont, N. Y. Methodist church, of which her brother-in-law Rev. George Anglesman is pastor, and her class from Hope chapel.

At the close of the services the remains were interred in Hillside cemetery. Those who acted as pall bearers were Samuel Hampston, John Praed, Howard Randolph and William French.

TESTED A NEW VENTILATOR

PUT IN SERVICE ON A ROYAL BLUE LINE CAR.

It May Be Generally Adopted on the New Jersey Central—It Works Satisfactorily.

Officials of various railroads and others made a special trip enjoyed a flying trip a few days ago on the Royal Blue line from Jersey City to Philadelphia, the purpose being to test a new system of ventilating passenger cars. The train passed through this city about 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

Nearly all in the party were financially interested in the device which is said to be a model ventilator. On either side of the car, at the top, were six of these ventilators. They had the conventional brass screen on the inside. From the exterior of the car, nothing appears unusual except six tin or sheet iron projections, cylindrical in form. Within the car the little narrow windows are shut tight and the fastenings removed. This is because there is no need for the windows when the clever device is in use.

The ventilator, which has been invented by W. A. Andrew, of Atlantic Highlands, does not cause a draft. It merely sucks the foul air out of the car. The intake is brought about by means of the sides and closed windows. Nature is thus instrumental in supplying the fresh air.

All during the trip the forty or fifty passengers smoked incessantly by request and at no time was there much smoke in the car. It wafted gently to the ventilators and quickly disappeared. Already this system has been in use on one car of the New Jersey Central Railroad for over a year, and it is claimed that it gives entire satisfaction. It may be generally adopted on the Central.

TO WEAR AT HOME.

Negligees of China Silk and Wadded Dressing Gowns.

Dressing jackets, negligees and tea gowns are, if possible, more luxurious than ever, and at the present moment nothing is more comfortable than a quilted silk dressing gown. It looks handsome also if trimmed with good lace and rich embroideries, and with care it will last longer than any other dressing gown. For tea gowns china silk still holds its own and is trimmed with soft, delicate lace and pretty satin ribbons. They are made in empire style and accordion plaited, the yoke being of delicate embroidery. The sleeves are once more made in bishop shape for negligees.

In the illustration we have a dress of black velvet trimmed with black chantilly. It is made over a lining of white taffeta. The velvet is cut out beneath the bands to show the white lining. At one side of the skirt the velvet is slashed to show an accordion plaited fall of chiffon. The waist is made to open bolero fashion over an accordion plaited front of white chiffon. There is a wide collar edged with the black lace. The sleeves have full puffs of the chantilly at the elbow, and the undersleeves are very cunningly contrived with narrow black velvet bands on a sheer lining of white chiffon. The dress is collarless. The belt is of white satin, heavily embroidered in black. JUDGE CROLLEY.

THE LATEST COIFFURES.

How the Hair Should Be Dressed and Ornamented.

The wreaths of tiny roses which have been so popular as hair ornaments have given way to garlands of leaves, and quite the most fashionable ornament is a wreath of green leaves. As this color is not invariably becoming, the wreath is copied in black sequined tulle or in black and steel or jet. Graceful bows of ribbon with osprey and a jeweled buckle are meant to be worn with the high type of coiffure, while the simple wisp or chou of tulle still has its admirers.

or else it is arranged in a series of puffs, ornamented at one side with an irregular bow of velvet.

A party frock for a little girl is shown in the cut. It is made of ecru lace and net over pink silk. The skirt is composed of three wide ruffles of the lace. The waist is of net, made full, blouse fashion, both back and front. It is cut with a V shaped neck and has a frilled yoke of the mull. There are no sleeves, but a dainty effect is given by three bands of narrow pink ribbon. The sash is of pink peau de soie, and it is tied in a short bow with two long ends. JUDGE CROLLEY.

IOWA COUNCIL'S BIRTHDAY

IFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY WAS PROPERLY OBSERVED JAN. 15.

Presentations, Speeches and Dancing Occupied the Evening—Some Business Done.

The fifteenth anniversary of Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas, an auxiliary of the Independent Order of Red Men, was observed in Red Men's Hall, January 15, in an appropriate way. A large number of the members attended and after the business of the meeting had been transacted, all participated in a dance. Great Scout Stella B. Regan, of Paterson, was the only official visitor.

The Council was instituted December 14, 1892, with thirty-one charter members. It has grown as the years have passed until today there are eighty-five members in the organization. During the short existence the Council has paid out in sick and death benefits over $7,325, and its condition today is financially good.

During the affair last evening two handsome past Pocohontas regalias were presented to members of the council. Prophetess Miss Daisy Snyder, who has gone through the chairs, received one and Collector of Wampum Mrs. Huey Mattis, who has served for five years, was given another. The presentation speeches were made by Great Prophet William Newcorn and he made a neat speech. Each of the recipients responded to the Great Prophet's remarks.

Before the business session was concluded three propositions for membership were acted upon and two propositions were received. Some initiations were scheduled to take place, but on account of the occasion these were postponed. The affair ended in a dance, which a large number enjoyed. Suhr's orchestra furnished the music. Refreshments were served during the course of the evening.

THEATRICAL.

Indeed, no trip to the big city is complete without the visit to Keith's, for the undisputed fact remains that it ranks with the statue of Liberty or Central Park as a point of interest or amusement, which must be seen to be appreciated. The most careful consideration is devoted to the arrangement of the programme, for the name "Keith" signifies the acme of refinement, the perfection of artistic ability, and the abolition of all vulgarity or the slightest tendency towards offense. It is the home of filtered vaudeville, and caters most especially to the refined tastes of women and children. Those visiting Keith's next week will see thirty magnificent acts including Fred Niblo, the famous monologue comedian; Galetti's performing monkeys; three Blossoms, wonderful European comedy acrobats; the comedy sketch of Linton & McIntyre; John C. Rowker, illustrated travelogue "The Pilgrim's Progress;" Smith & Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Thorne, Smith & Chisholm, the Baileys Frank & Don, Fitzpatrick & Tappan, H. M. Lovett, and the great biograph. Noon to 11 p. m. 50 cents.

F. F. Proctor's new theatre in Newark is an established success. Since the day of its opening, a fortnight ago, the house has been packed to its capacity twice every week day. The third programme of specialties is on par in an amusement rating with the bills gone before and another week of prosperity is assured. Capt. Webb's troupe of trained seals is a feature especially attractive to the children and their wonderful achievements are likewise of interest to the older folk. Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street has "At the White Horse Tavern," as its dramatic feature for the week, the Proctor Stock Company also appearing in "Sarelock Holmes," a travesty by Clay M. Greene. "The Brixton Burglary," introducing W. J. Ferguson and many of the original New York cast will be given at the Fifty-eighth Street with the original scenery. The company is one which recently appeared in this city, organized for the production. The Twenty-third Street Theatre will present a strong bill of continuous vaudeville, featuring the English Posey ballet. The Cycle-Whirl, original in New York with Manager Proctor at this house, is retained for another week. The biggest vaudeville ever presented on Broadway by Manager Proctor will be offered at the Fifth Avenue in conjunction with the Proctor Stock Company's presentation of the "The Mysterious Mr. Bagle." Shean and Warren, in a character sketch and travesty interlude, will be the topping features.

CHURCHES SHOULD NOT GIVE AID DIRECTLY

Theory Advanced by H. M. Maxson, President, Organized Aid Association.

CHARITY CONFERENCE.

SHOULD ALLOW AID ASSOCIATION TO SUPERINTEND ALL CHARITY.

In That Way Much Duplication Would be Prevented—Conference Arranged by Co-operative Committee.

The second of a series of conferences under the auspices of the co-operative committee of the Organized Aid Association was held, Wednesday, Jan. 15, in the rooms of the association on West Front street. While the attendance was not very large the conference way very interesting and productive of much good. The topic for consideration was "The Application of the Principles of Organized Charities to the Relief Work in the Churches."

H. M. Maxson, as president of the Organized Aid Association, was in charge of the meeting and there were short addresses by Rev. J. C. Nickerson, Rev. J. O. McKelvey, Rev. L. B. Howard and Rev. John McMurray. The principal thought advanced was the necessity of submitting all cases of charity in the churches to the Organized Aid Association and by co-operation prevent the duplication of aid to those needing aid.

Miss VanBoskerck, the agent, said that it was with great difficulty that the resources of families applying for aid were secured because the churches do not confer with the association. In this way charity is duplicated and to the detriment of the work carried on by both church and association.

Mr. Maxson favored the plan of dissociating relief work entirely from the churches. He maintained that the churches should not give relief, but instead should refer all cases to the association and contribute to it instead of to individuals. This would sustain the one great source of dispensing charity and enable those in charge to determine with more accuracy the need of those seeking aid.

Mrs. Tiffany spoke of the great danger through the giving of alms by the clergy. She thought it might be taken in the light of a bribe and the recipient of aid might be led to compulsory attendance at church services. The clergy's motive might be right, but the result would not always be the best.

The remarks made by the clergy present, as well as the other speakers, were most interesting. The clergy were a unit regarding the principles and thoughts advanced and all believed thoroughly in co-operation. Mr. McMurray was the only clergyman present who reported an almost entire absence of need for relief work in his church. He said that there is practically no relief work to be done there.

The other clergymen reported that to a greater or less degree there was relief work in the churches. Out of the wide experience of Rev. Mr. Nickerson, he was able to present some very helpful thoughts along the line of co-operation in relief work.

These conferences are planned for monthly. The next one will be held probably in March, as on February 10 Mr. Maxson has consented to repeat his lecture on "Organized Aid," in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church. This lecture is considered by many to be the best on the subject ever listened to and it is hoped that all persons interested in charity will be present to hear him. It will be given in the evening.

HOME AT LAST.

Mrs. Fryer's Pocketbook Was Found and She Resumed Her Journey to the South.

The pocket book, lost by Mrs. Elizabeth Fryer, an elderly colored woman, some days ago at the North Avenue station, was found and returned to the owner. William E. MacClymont picked it up on the station platform, and subsequently it was restored to the woman who was profuse in her thanks.

Mrs. Fryer, whose home is at Sharon, Va., was returning to her home after spending some time in this city. She had been acting in the capacity of a domestic here and all her savings, amounting to a trifle over $15, were contained in the purse. After she had boarded a train, she missed the pocket book, and had to return to this city. Having received the lost valuables the [woman again started on her journey southward.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Recommendations of Governor Murphy to the Legislature.

Gentlemen of the Senate and General Assembly—I have just taken the oath required by the constitution of the state of every one chosen to fill the high office of governor. I have taken it without any reservation, and, to the best of my ability, I propose to be faithful to it.

The provision of the constitution which postpones the inauguration of a new governor until after the assembling of the legislature enables the outgoing governor, from his larger knowledge and experience, to discuss in his annual message those matters which he regards as important to the state. The exceptional experience of my distinguished predecessor and his familiarity with the legislation and the institutions of the state have caused this to be done with eminent skill, ability and fullness. Later on I shall doubtless have occasion to communicate with you on special subjects, but at present it does not seem advisable to do more than to call your attention to a few matters whose importance has already caused them to be a subject of public discussion and upon some of which opinions have already been expressed.

Pollution of the Passaic.

The most important subject to which I can call your attention at this time is the pollution of the Passaic river from the adjacent population, which has destroyed the use and beauty of a noble stream and gravely injured manufacturing and property interests on its banks. To remedy this condition is merely to pay the penalty of crowding population. The situation which permits this violation of natural conditions must be replaced by wise legislation. The state's responsibilities extend to all its branches of government, and in this case the fact that political divisions do not conform to natural drainage makes it necessary for the state to provide for common action in sewerage by methods different from those which prevail in other functions of government. The regulation is partly provided for by the state sewerage commission act, and much preliminary work has been done, but legislation for carrying out the work is asked at the hands of the legislature. Six years have elapsed since the legislature first considered this question, and it is high time for final decision and immediate action. The fact that great injury has been done is made the more apparent by threatened suits for damages against cities discharging sewage into the river. Evidently a delay in legislation threatens a still greater and more expensive and injurious character. The general method of state supervision on sewerage which has been adopted seems with approval. Each local community should be required to so regulate its sewerage as to avoid nuisance to adjoining communities, and the regulation of this subject through proper authority is the sole means of preventing disaster to the public health and of obtaining the best results for each. I strongly urge passage of such act.

Changes In Election Law.

The state of New Jersey has an election law which has produced, upon the whole, excellent results. Theoretically and practically, if the voter so desires, it secures to him the right to enable a voter to deposit his ballot with absolute independence. One hundred feet from the ballot box extraneous influence comes to an end; the citizen enters the voting place alone; he enters the booth; he selects, and prepares as his ballot without assistance or supervision; he knows, unless he so desires, that no one can know how he votes; his ballot may be the expression of his own conscientious judgment.

But, however excellent the law may be, and I think it is admitted by all who are competent to judge that it is a great improvement upon former laws, it is still possible to make it better. I have said the ballot is theoretically secret. Experience has demonstrated that it may be so only in theory and that the ingenuity of the wicked is quite equal to the task of destroying its secrecy. The law now allows ballots practically without number to be in the possession of all parties outside the polls, and it is not difficult to so mark these ballots that when finally counted they may be known. So long as ballots are allowed outside the polling places so long will the use of money at the polls for the purchase of votes be likely to continue.

I do not need to take nor will I take your time in discussing upon the importance of keeping the ballot pure. The necessity of doing so is recognized by every thoughtful citizen, and the dangers and evil results of a corrupt ballot have been shown by a long line of sad and unfortunate experiences. It is to the interest of good government to make corruption at the polls impossible. It does not answer to make it difficult. Human nature is weak. It should be made impossible. It is easy to do so long as ballots are allowed outside the polls.

Two Plans For Improvement.

Two ways of improvement suggest themselves.

The first is by amending the present law so that no ballots shall be obtainable by the voter except from the election officer, and if the law should be so amended I suggest the Massachusetts form of ballot as perhaps the best form yet devised.

The second is the use of the voting machine in place of the ballot. I am informed that this machine has been so perfected that it is entirely practical and in those cities where it has been used it has given results that have been altogether satisfactory. The only objection I have heard to its use is on account of the expense, but with the large amount of money in the treasury that is not a serious matter. No expense is unwisely incurred that will make corruption at the polls impossible, and the expense might easily be met by appropriation from the treasury of the state a sufficient sum to provide each county with the necessary number of machines.

I also recommend to the legislature the amendment of the present law so that the polls will close at 5 o'clock. It may be said by some that this change was tried a few years ago and was found unpopular and the present hour of closing was returned to. It is true the experiment was tried and abandoned, but it was done for party reasons and not because a majority of the people were dissatisfied with it. If the law works well in New York—and it is so conceded—there is no reason why it should not work well in New Jersey. It is admitted by those who have had practical experience at the polls that a large proportion of the illegal voting is done after sundown. Crookedness of all kinds thrives better in the dark than in the sunlight, and it is for this reason probably that so many of the states have thought it wise to enact what is known as a sunset law. New Jersey should not be behind her sister states.

Primary Election Law.

I also recommend the passage of a primary election law. Our primaries are still under the conduct of party agencies. The existing provisions of the law not only permit but encourage the conduct of the primaries by the agents selected by the dominant organization within the party under which the primaries are held. It will probably be conceded by all that an immense advantage is thereby afforded for the execution of any purpose that may have been formed by the party leaders and that the free and untrammeled will of the party voters is well nigh impossible. It is currently reported and perhaps generally believed that in more than one case the popular will has been unable to express itself, the popular choice set aside, by practices and proceedings rendered possible by the methods under which primaries are conducted. This is a very serious matter. In order to have an election there must be a regular nomination. If the will of the legal voters within a party is defeated or controlled as to the choice of a candidate, the right of suffrage, the right of choice, is trammeled and perhaps altogether set at naught. The legislature has already given expression to the necessity of regulating primaries and of by attempting to regulate primaries. Violations of the statutory regulations are classed as criminal offenses, and the question now remaining is not one of moral sense, but of method. It is earnestly desired that further action of legislation upon this subject be enacted, and it is recommended that the primaries of the two leading parties be held under the supervision of the regular election officers, and that the expense of holding the same be met out of the public funds in the same manner in which the expenses of the elections are defrayed, with similar penalties for any violation of the statutory regulations under which they are held. It is not forgotten that all laws depend very largely for their efficiency upon the persons who execute them and that unless the statutory provisions are complied with and any violations of them promptly and vigorously dealt with by courts and juries the requirements of statutes are of little avail. It is believed that the suggestions made will contribute in no small degree to secure results in which the voters will have confidence.

Finances.

The finances of the state continue to be in excellent condition. The receipts for the last fiscal year were $3,826,811.29 and the disbursements $3,480,524.56. The surplus in the treasury was $346,286.73 and the amount of receipts over running expenses $1,480,524.56. The surplus in the treasury was $1,351,088.17. The state is entirely free from debt. The above exhibit of the financial condition of the state is as exceptional as it is gratifying.

I am informed that the state receives no interest on the balances in the various banks, nor has it ever received such interest. When I say I do not know. One treasurer has followed the example of his predecessor in distributing the funds of the state to the various banks throughout the state who have had at times large amounts on deposit on which they have paid no interest, but for which they have paid no interest. This is all right for the banks, but the state is deprived of an income which every business man under the same circumstances would insist upon. If the average balance in the treasury is two and a quarter millions, an interest of 2 per cent would net the state the important sum of $45,000 a year. Some legislation may be necessary to provide a plan which will authorize the treasurer to arrange with banks for the payment of interest. If so, I recommend it without delay. If instead of distributing the money of the state to favored banks in various localities it should be placed, under proper safeguards, in a smaller number of banks of undoubted safety, an important sum can be earned for the state each year.

Disposal of Surplus.

The disposition of a portion of the large surplus now in the treasury is an important subject that will come before the legislature for its action. Last year a special appropriation of $800,988.25 was made from this fund for the purpose of public education and was used by the various counties of the state either in reducing the local school tax or in increasing school facilities. No better use of a portion, and a large portion, of the surplus can, I think, be made. The action of last year will doubtless be repeated this year, but I think other uses of the surplus can wisely be made. Too large a surplus should not be allowed to accumulate. It is larger now than a safe and conservative regard for the interests of the state require. It belongs to the people of this generation and should not be held for the benefit of the next. The people are entitled to receive the benefit of it now, and a reasonable portion of it may be used either in the reduction of school taxes, the further enlargement of the institutions of the state where such are needed, the substantial increase in the appropriation for public roads, which I cannot too highly commend to you, or in such other manner as the legislature may in its wisdom decide upon.

It is now received mainly from the public, that the largest source of receipts —that from miscellaneous corporations and which last year amounted to the large sum of $1,630,574.19—is uncertain and is likely to vary from year to year with the general condition of business throughout the country. That is true, but I am not speaking of income, but of surplus, of money in hand. It is hardly to be expected that the income of the state, even in times of business depression, will not be sufficient for the necessary expenses of the state, and the extraordinary expenses may be adjusted from year to year, according to the condition of the treasury, without bringing hardship to the taxpayer.

The National Guard.

The national guard now consists of forty-eight companies of infantry, organized into four regiments; two batteries of artillery, and two troops of cavalry, composing two brigades and headed with a major general. Infantry force should be enlarged. I think it wise that it be increased to five regiments of infantry, of twelve companies each, and that the artillery and cavalry remain as they now are, and that the headquarters of these regiments be located in Newark, Jersey City, Paterson, Trenton and Camden.

In each of these cities commodious armories have been built by the state at large expense, and too much money has been invested in these buildings to permit them to be useless or to be damaged by neglect. That, however, is the smallest of reasons for urging their use.

The importance of a national guard of reasonable size cannot be disputed. We are a people given to ways of peace. The nation does not maintain a large standing army. The chief reliance of the people in times of war as well, in necessity, as in times of peace and for the maintenance of the law and in protecting public and private property is in a thoroughly organized and perfectly disciplined national guard. The valor of the sons of New Jersey, their patriotism and their success in battle in the service of the state or the nation. I regard it as of high importance that the militia of the state should be maintained in reasonable numbers and at the highest point of efficiency.

Hospital For Consumptive Poor.

I am inclined to bring to your attention the subject of providing a state hospital for the consumptive poor. If I have had any doubts of the wisdom of doing so, it is not because there is any question in my mind of the good such an institution would do, but of the afflicted with this disease, but for economic and other reasons. The dreadfulness of this disease (do I characterize it too strongly?) is not appreciated by the average layman. It is not so loathsome as smallpox, people do not fear it as they do scarlet or typhoid fever or diphtheria, and yet the statistics show that in the last twenty-two years in the state of New Jersey the death from pulmonary tuberculosis have been more than from diphtheria, croup, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, whooping cough, malarial fevers, measles and smallpox combined. If one has any of these diseases, he has a chance for his life, but if the grip of the "white scourge" ever takes hold of him, however gentle may be its first touch, it strengthens its hold month by month, never relaxing, never weakening, until the final end.

At least such is so with the poor. The rich, with their other general habits of life, the better air they breathe, the better food they eat, stand a fighting chance, and if they take the disease in time and submit themselves to skilled treatment they may recover, but with the poor the bullet of the white plague at the heart is hardly more certain. It is swifter, but not more sure.

It has been demonstrated that with proper treatment the disease is prevented and in its early stages curable —isolation, fresh air, proper food. But these are impossible to the poor.

That it is contagious is now as fully recognized as that under most conditions it is fatal. It is a proper subject for legislative investigation and action, and I am of the opinion you would be doing a lasting service to the state if you were to make a reasonable appropriation for the establishment of a hospital for this purpose.

Gentlemen of the legislature, you in your province, I in mine, are intrusted with high responsibility by the state we love. The history of New Jersey, the patriotism and sacrifices of her sons in the past are not gone give us all just cause for pride in the past of our state. Her recent remarkable development and her increasing influence in the sisterhood of states appeal not less to our pride in her present. Let us dedicate ourselves fully to her service. Such at least is my determination, and in my work I ask the assistance of my associates, the considerate judgment of my fellow citizens and the favor of Almighty God.

WOMEN'S GUILD GAVE A TEA

DELIGHTFUL AFFAIR AT RECTORY OF HOLY CROSS CHURCH.

Unusually Large Attendance at Tea and Sale Given Saturday Afternoon.

A delightful affair in the nature of a tea and sale was held under the auspices of the Women's Guild of the Church of the Holy Cross, at the rectory, Saturday afternoon. There was an unusually large attendance, and the entertainment committee of the guild, which was in charge, made is successful from every standpoint.

Tea and chocolate, cake and candy were the refreshments offered and they were disposed of with much rapidity. Mrs. W. Montgomery Downey received and assisting her were Mrs. J. O. Stevens, Mrs. George P. Dupee, Mrs. J. H. Carman, Mrs. H. R. Phillips, Mrs. Samuel Townsend, and Mrs. Henri deManiere. Mrs William A. Westphal was at the door.

Those in charge of the various tables were: Tea, Mrs. G. P. Dupee and Mrs. Thomas Burr, who poured for the first hour; Mrs. W. S. Browne and Miss Davis, who poured for the second hour; cake, the Misses Burt, Moore, deManiere and Ida Davis; candy, the Misses Frankie Burr, Sophie Barber and Edna Moore. The waitresses were the Misses Burr, Phillips, Frances Phillips and Florence Burr. A neat sum was realized from the affair.

FUNERAL OF CHARLES BEHN.

Services Held Sunday Afternoon and Interment at Rahway.

The funeral services of Charles Behn were held Sunday afternoon at 12:15 o'clock from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. George Belcher, East Fifth street. There was a large attendance of friends and neighbors.

Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, conducted the services. He read appropriate Scripture selections, after which he made a few remarks concerning the life of the departed. There were a number of floral tributes from friends and neighbors. The interment took place in Rahway and the pallbearers were Thomas Finney, Aaron Spencer, John Cater and Garrett VanName.

GIVEN AN ASSISTANT.

So Much Work Done That Mr. Holbert Has Been Given Aid.

Owing to the increase in business with the International Correspondence School, of Scranton, the New Jersey territory has been divided between two representatives. Heretofore Mr. Holbert has looked after most of the territory, but he has been given an assistant, who will attend to that part of the territory between this city and Elizabeth, while Mr. Holbert will look after that part between this city and Phillipsburg.

Small Building Put Up at Isolation Hospital for Use of Physician.

President Charles J. Fisk, of the Board of Health, has had a suitable building erected near the isolation hospital for the use of the city physician. Heretofore the physician has had no suitable place to make a change of clothing before visiting the small-pox patients and after leaving them. The building while not very extensive, answers the purpose very well.

KINDER SYMPHONY AND PLAY AT PARK CLUB

Decidedly Successful Entertainment Given at the Park Clubhouse Last Friday.

CLUBHOUSE CROWDED.

FORMER MAYOR W. L. SAUNDERS GAVE A CLEVER MONOLOGUE.

Kinter Symphony Given by Club Members Led by Wallace Guilford—One Act Play by Three Amateur Artists.

The dramatic and musical entertainment, given at the Park Club last Friday, was an unqualified success. The clubhouse was hardly large enough to accommodate comfortably all who attended, but the programme was so good that those who suffered a trifle by crowding forgot these little troubles. Henry A. McGee took charge of the programme for the entertainment committee and explained the numbers.

Former Mayor William L. Saunders opened the programme with a monologue. At the beginning Mr. Saunders said that he understood he was to give a monologue, but some of the members had informed him it was to be a apologue, a catalogue or a decalogue, and he was not sure which it would be. After relating some of the troubles of Plainfielders, Mr. Saunders continued his part by reciting an amusing selection entitled "Lady Jane," which was received with great applause.

Then followed the "kinter symphony," for which great preparations had been made. The music is by F. X. Chwatal, and it represents a sleighing party. The music described the jolly party starting off for a ride, stopping at a hotel for supper and a dance and the return, and the interpretation is quite well. The participants were all attired as young country folk and their appearance provoked much laughter. The music was catchy. Wallace Gilford drilled those who took part and acted as leader.

The party was made up as follows: Miss Mabel VanDeventer, Allan B. Laing, triangle; Mrs. Wallace Guilford, Miss Bertha VanN. Willis, Miss Saidee Mac Howell, Miss Frances Weir, L. H. VanBuren, Harry L. McGee, kazoo; Raymond A. McGee, kazoo and cornet; R. D. Schoonmaker, Charles E. Murray, Harry Curtis, mandolin; Clarence V. Fowler, Langdon Howard, Miss Hyatt, violin; piano, Miss Laura Long and Miss Alice L. Barlow; Miss Halla VanDeventer, sleighbells; Miss Helen Weir, castinets; Miss Adelaide G. Ball and William Barlow, drums; Jeffrey Barlow, whips and nightingale; William A. Townsend, sleigh. This was represented by the rubbing of sandpaper.

Everyone of the parts were well taken and at the conclusion the exclamation of "bravo," by Mr. Saunders, was the signal for loud and continued applause. A pretty part of the symphony was a duet given by Miss Willis and Raymond A. McGee.

Following the symphony a recitation entitled "Photography," was cleverly given by Miss Grace E. Overton and Miss Edith L. Burt. The latter stood behind the speaker, who was dressed as an Irish woman, and made the gestures.

The last part of the programme was a one-act farce entitled "A Picked Up Dinner." This was given by Miss Grace E. Overton, Miss Edith L. Burt and Morgan T. Townsend. This produced much laughter. Each part was well given and showers of applause were given the trio.

After the entertainment many of the young people remained and enjoyed an informal dance.

As previously stated, the affair was under the direction of the entertainment committee, of which Mrs. Charles A. Reed is the chairman. She took the lead and with her able assistants made the affair a success. The sum realized at the door was $61.

A special meeting of the local corps of the Salvation Army will be held Saturday evening. A stand of colors will be presented to the corps by Ensign T. H. McLeod, the officer in charge. The banners are quite handsome.

POINTED OUT WHAT WORKMEN HAVE DONE

Columbia and Central Lodges United to Entertain Friends at Y. M. C. A. Hall.

PROGRAMME CAME FIRST

THEN GRAND OFFICERS TOLD OF THE BENEFITS OF THE ORDER.

S. V. Sanford Sustained His Reputation as a Fun-Maker—Selections by Korff's Orchestra—Committee In Charge.

The Y. M. C. A. Hall was filled to overflowing last Thursday with the members of Central and Columbia Lodges, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and their friends when a public entertainment was given under the auspices of the lodges. A pleasing programme was thoroughly enjoyed from beginning to end.

A feature of the programme was the selections rendered by Martin A. Korff's orchestra. Throughout the evening the following selections were given: March, "Carnero" Losey; overture, "Flora," Schleppegrell; concert valse, "Cupid's Dream," Crosby; two step, "Brudder Rastus," Losey; gems from "Florodora," Stuart; concert valse, "Daughter of Love," Bennett; march, "King of the Turf."

Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, as chairman of the committee, was in charge and, in his customary facetious manner, announced the various numbers on the programme. Early in the evening, S. V. Sanford, a humorist from New York, appeared as a black face fun-maker. Mr. Sanford has appeared in Plainfield before and he fully sustained his reputation as a provoker of mirth and merriment. Later on he related several stories and gave some impersonations which convulsed the audience with laughter. He concluded the programme with a monologue and again he produced hearty laughter.

There were two short addresses given that were fully enjoyed by those present. The first address was by Grand Master Workman F. W. Tussey, of Camden, and the other address was by Past Grand Master Workman J. A. VanSant, also of Camden. Both officials recited briefly the noble advantages to be gained in joining the Workmen. They told of the benefits, financial, moral and social. They also told of the strength of the organization and what had been accomplished in this State by it. Both speakers received a cordial reception and each one received a handsome bouquet of flowers.

The committee that so successfully arranged the entertainment comprised the following: Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, chairman, Martin A. Korff, Joseph D. Moon, Edward M. Mosher, W. H. Larrabee, Clark T. Rogers, C. E. Bedford, Hannah Richards, Cornelia Sampson, Hannah Thayer, Clara Kanen, Florence Kane, Maida Hyde and Alice Humphrey; also the Misses Sarah Boyd, Anna Runyon and Miss Bullock. Mrs. Isaac L. Miller and Mrs. Samuel Milliken poured tea.

CUTTING DOWN ORCHARD.

Halstead C. Compton Began Saturday to Cut Down His Fruit Trees.

Halstead C. Compton, of West Front street, against whom a verdict of $750 was given recently in the case of Victor Schofield, against Halstead C. Compton, commenced Saturday to cut down all the fruit trees in his orchard. He will also plough up his strawberry and melon patches. Mr. Compton says that inasmuch as he cannot secure protection in the raising of fruit he will not attempt to raise any fruit.

Roberts, of this city, will be sold Friday morning, January 24, at 10:15 o'clock, to satisfy a mortgage held by J. L. Chamberlain and Charles P. Felmly, of Flemington. The sale will be held at the Roberts' livery on West Front street.

FINE MUSIC RENDERED AT CASINO CONCERT

Second of Season's Subscription Affairs Held Under Direction of Mr. Atterbury.

ALL TALENTED ARTISTS.

THE PROGRAMME GIVEN WAS A PARTICULARLY ENJOYABLE ONE.

Dr. Carl E. Duft Made the Hit of the Evening—All the Artists Were Well Received—A Pleasing Affair.

The second of this season's subscription concerts, given under the auspices of Albert H. Atterbury, took place before a very large audience at the Casino, last Thursday. Like the others, it was an unqualified success. The wide range covered by the eleven numbers on the programme afforded a musical treat such as is seldom heard.

The artists appearing were Miss Edith Chapman, soprano; Miss Florence Mulford, contralto; Leo Lichtman, tenor, and Dr. Carl E. Duft, basso. Frank J. Smith contributed greatly to the splendid rendition by his work as conductor.

All four appeared in the initial number which was "The Drum Major of Schneider's Band." It was well timed and rendered with a swing that merited the prolonged applause. Through his rendition of "Alt Heidelberg, O Heine," the second number, Dr. Duft at once secured a firm hold on his audience which he retained until the close of the evening. His voice is one of exceptional power, capable of wide range. His second selection "Bendemeer's Stream" by Gatty, was also warmly received but it remained for his rendition of Kipling's "On the Road to Mandalay" to score the evening's success. It is peculiarly adapted to his deep, rich notes. The audience was loath to part with him but he appeared again only in the quartettes.

These selections, "Singing" and "In Winter I Get Up at Night," by Nevin and a "Dutch Lullaby" by De Koven were Miss Chapman's opening numbers and brought her an ovation. Purity and sweetness are the characteristics which marked her singing and afforded much pleasure to her hearers. She responded to an encore and later gave two numbers "Under the Rose," by Fisher and "Er der Herrliehste von Allen," by Schumann.

Mr. Lieberman's splendid tenor had lost none of its excellence since he was heard in this city last and the three numbers allotted him served to demonstrate his ability. They were "Lehn' deine Wang'" by Jensen, "I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marle Halle" by Balfee and "Adelaide" by Beethoven. In company with Miss Mulford he sang "Si: La Stanchezza" (from "Il Trovatore") by Verdi, and the effect produced was charming. It was the only duet of the evening and was one of the best numbers. Miss Mulford contributed two other solos, "On the Way to Kew" by Foote and "Oft in the Stilly Night" by Stevenson.

The concluding numbers were quartettes and were a fitting climax to the previous success. "Erin the Tear and the Smile in Thine Eyes" and "The Last Rose of Summer" were the titles and closed the evening's entertainment in a burst of rythm.

Will Be Made Chief.

It is quite likely that at the February meeting of the Common Council an ordinance will be introduced changing the official title of P. S. Kiely from captain of police to chief of police. It will be remembered that Mayor Jenkins in his message this year recommended such a change as it will have a tendency to elevate the office and the holder of it and give more importance to it.

Sewage Commission Met.

A meeting of the Borough Sewage commission was held in the North Plainfield Council chamber Saturday evening. No business of importance was transacted and the commission adjourned to meet again during the present week.

Invitation Dance.

An invitation dance will be given by Miantonomo Tribe, No. 118, Improved Order of Red Men, Friday evening.

House Quarantined.

Marie Kenney, the twelve-year-old daughter of David T. Kenney, of Rockview avenue, is suffering with scarlet fever. The house has been quarantined.

Cold Comfort From Doctors.

Doctors say neuralgia is not dangerous. This is poor consolation to a sufferer who feels as if his face was pierced with hot needles and torn with a thousand pairs of pincers. A word of advice to him: stay indoors and use Perry Davis' Painkiller. The blessed freedom from pain which follows this treatment cannot be told. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

GREAT NETWORK OF TROLLEYS FOR JERSEY

How the Systems in North and South Parts of the State Are to be Connected.

PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

TRENTON WILL BE THE CENTRE OF RADIATING LINES.

Will Connect With the Lines in Eastern New Jersey—Third Rail System to New Brunswick Soon.

Trenton, Jan. 29—With the incorporation of the Delaware Valley Traction Company, the opening of spring will see the beginning of enterprises which will connect Trenton with hundreds of towns and villages in New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

One of the first lines to be built is the Newton and Yardley, which will connect the Yardley, Morrisville and Trenton Railway with the Newton Street Railway, which has a line extending from Bristol to Doylestown, twenty-seven miles. The completion of this link and the link from Doylestown in Perkasie will place Trenton in direct touch with the whole Eastern Pennsylvania system. The Yardley, Morrisville and Trenton and the Newton and Yardley roads are controlled by the Lehigh Valley Traction, and this will afford a direct line to the Lehigh Valley from tidewater. The Lehigh Valley Traction has under construction a line from East Bangor to Portland, in Northampton county, Pa., and when completed it will be possible to go from Trenton to the Delaware Water Gap by trolley, nearly 100 miles, and all over the Lehigh Valley Traction's lines.

The Trenton, Lawrenceville and Princeton Railroad is also controlled by the Lehigh Valley Traction, and will be extended into the city within the next few months. The extension into the centre of Princeton will be finished within sixty days, and when spring opens plans will be formulated for its continuation toward Bound Brook or New Brunswick.

The Camden and Trenton, the Delaware Valley Traction and the Mercer County Traction are all headed that way, too.

The Delaware Traction, which is backed by a Baltimore syndicate, will build a line from Trenton to Pennington and another to Hamilton Square and Robbinsville, near Hightstown. The same management also controls the Philadelphia, Bristol and Trenton Passenger Railway, which will be extended from Bristol to Morrisville, opposite Trenton, during the summer. The same interests are also in control of the Morrisville Passenger Railway, which possesses the unique distinction of having sixty feet of track laid, on the ground sought by the Pennsylvania Railroad for an approach to its Delaware bridge, and over which it is expected there will be a legal battle.

The Camden and Trenton has the right to run through the streets of Trenton. Extensions on these streets will be completed in six months. This will make a direct line to Camden and connect there with all the South Jersey lines.

It is said that the Trenton and New Brunswick Railroad Company, which is chartered to build a line from Trenton to New Brunswick, to be operated by the third-rail electric system, has succeeded in borrowing $1,000,000 on bonds, and will begin construction inside of three months. It is probable it will run across to Plainfield, and from there to Morristown, or some other point on the proposed Northern Counties Railroad, which is to cover the upper part of the State.

The Trenton Street Railway Company has under construction a line from the courthouse to the lower Delaware River bridge, and this will afford what is practically a second line to Morristown.

The New Jersey and Pennsylvania Traction, recently incorporated, proposes to construct lines in all parts of the city of Trenton and give a three-cent fare, with unlimited free transfers. The company is a protege of the Lehigh Valley Traction, and has a capital of $1,000,000. Franchises will be asked soon. Rights of way have been obtained on several of the streets, and enough are now secured to assure the company of being able to reach the centre of the city from the connections with the Trenton, Lawrenceville and Princeton.

MONEY IS GONE.

James Burke, Hay Carter, Can't Find His Money an Ex-Its Former Companions Who Had Left.

James Burke, a hay carter, residing on Plainfield avenue, reported to Sergeant Frederickson at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, that he had been relieved of $60 while sleeping in the Elizabeth station of the New Jersey Central last night.

The robbery was committed, he declared, by Howard, or "Doc" Doty and another man, both from this city. The men were about him when he felt asleep, he said, and when awakening, they had left. He felt for his money and found it gone. The matter was also reported to the Elizabeth police.

Doty is the man who skipped town short time ago after being released from police headquarters in the custody of his counsel. He is wanted on a charge of fast and reckless driving.

WANT NEW SCHOOL BUILDING

ONLY WAY TO SOLVE BOROUGH EDUCATIONAL PROBLEM.

Remarkable Increase in Attendance at Public Schools Must be Provided For.

The growing need of more school accommodations in the borough is seriously engaging the attention of the North Plainfield Board of Education. When the schools opened last fall, the attendance surpassed all records and some children had to be turned away temporarily. As soon as possible temporary quarters were engaged to make room for some of the smaller pupils, but still the regular quarters were cramped. New teachers had to be engaged to take charge of the additional classes.

Immediately the proper committee of the board set about to hunt up permanent quarters for the overflow.

After a thorough search the committee has accomplished nothing.

Some arrangements have been made by Superintendent Wightman whereby all may receive instruction but only at great inconvenience. Now comes the cry for another school building. Both structures in the borough are commodious and substantial, and it is claimed have answered the purposes well.

One prominent boroughite advocates erecting a building on the High School lot, facing on Vine street. There he says may be found ample space for a large structure, which might form an annex to the Somerset street building.

In order to carry out this project, said he, it would be necessary to call a special school meeting for the purpose of allowing the citizens to pass upon the matter. If they favor the proposition the cost of erection may be met by an appropriation voted by them, and work on the structure could begin at once. He believes that if this were done it would remove all inconveniences by fall, for when the time arrives for the children to return to their studies after the summer vacation, the annex would be ready for occupancy.

The standard of the schools in the borough, he says, is considered high and a reputation for thorough training has been made. It would reflect much credit, he concludes, if the people insisted upon the erection of another building.

WM. WATT WEDDED.

A Prominent Somerville Business Man Takes a Wife.

Somerville, Jan. 29—At 8 o'clock last night in St. John's P. E. church, William Watt, a prominent business man of this place, and Miss Lena A. Mann were made husband and wife by the rector, Rev. Harrison B. Wright. The couple were attended by the groom's brother, Thomas Watt, and wife. Only immediate relatives were present. The bride wore a handsome gown of brown.

A reception followed at the beautiful apartments that had been fitted out by the groom. Some very pretty gifts of cut glass and silverware were received.

Designs of the Goat.

Some time ago J. Harvey Doane took a picture of "Miss Calanthe," the Pythian goat. Recently, F. C. Lounsbury, of the Crescent Embossing Works, had a plate made and has several pretty designs of embossed work with the goat attired in her lodge regalia.

Entertained Her Friends.

Miss Shotwell, of West Ninth street, entertained a number of friends at her home, Saturday even.ng. Several hours were spent in a social way.

POPULAR YOUNG FOLKS WEDDED TUESDAY

Miss Evalene B. Searing and Theo. E. Burroughs Married at Bride's Home.

A PRETTY CEREMONY

AN INFORMAL RECEPTION WAS HELD AFTER THE CEREMONY.

Those Who Accompanied the Young Couple—Charming House Decorations—Will Reside in Plainfield on Their Return.

A pretty home wedding, uniting in marriage two popular young people of this city, took place last Tuesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus V. Searing, 70 Westervelt avenue, when their daughter, Miss Evalene Barnes Searing, became the wife of Theodore Edward Burroughs, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Burroughs, of 326 East Fifth street.

The happy event was celebrated at 6:30 o'clock in the presence of the members of the immediate families, Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, officiated. Owing to the limited room at the home invitations to the ceremony were few, but a reception followed at which there were nearly seventy-five guests present.

The home was attractively decorated with smilax, palms, hydrangeas and pampas grass. In one corner of the parlor there was a pretty arrangement of smilax and a wedding bell of the same. This was studded with small incandescent lights of varied hues. In the hallway along the stairway there was arranged the pampas grass and hydrangeas. The electric part of the decoration was the work of A. V. Searing, Jr.

The bride was gowned in white crepe de chine. She wore a veil with orange blossom adornment and carried a bouquet of bride roses. She was attended by Miss Jessie MacKillop, as maid-of-honor, who was gowned in white with trimmings of ribbon and lace. She carried pink roses. The best man was Frank Urian, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

Following the ceremony, the bride and groom received the hearty congratulations of all. From 8 until 10 o'clock a reception was held during which time Mr. and Mrs. Burroughs were showered with best wishes. While the reception was being held refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed. After all had been given an opportunity to congratulate the bride and groom they left the scene of festivities for the wedding journey in the south. Upon their return they will reside for a short time with the groom's parents prior to their beginning housekeeping.

A large collection of handsome and useful presents, including a valuable heir-loom, were received by the bride. This heir-loom was a full tea set, a gift to the mother of the groom when she was married. Other gifts included furniture, glass, silver and goldware, pictures, bric-a-brac and chinaware.

The bride and groom are both active members of the First Presbyterian church and are identified with nearly every department of work there. The groom is a valued employe of the Manhattan Electric Supply Company, of New York, and both he and his wife have a host of friends. At the reception there were guests present from Hempstead, L. I., Brooklyn, New York, Westfield and Plainfield.

Settled With Trolley Co.

Hetfield & Hetfield, counsel for John L. Force, of Westfield, have effected an amicable settlement in a suit for damages brought by their client against the Elizabeth, Plainfield and Central New Jersey Street Railway Company. Mr. Force injured an ankle while stepping from a car at Westfield in December last.

Few to be Vaccinated.

The Borough Board of Health has discontinued the vaccination treatment. Six persons were treated yesterday afternoon by Drs. Pittis and Dundon, in the Council chamber. It is thought that the small number of applicants presenting themselves for treatment does not warrant the board in further continuing the practice.

Finishing Touches.

Workmen are now engaged in finishing the work at the Smalley building on North avenue. When the building first occupied there yet remained a few things needing attention. It is this work that is now being done.

FORMAL VOTE FOR SENATOR

John F. Dryden Formally Chosen U. S. Senator at Joint Session.

WAS HELD YESTERDAY.

The Vote Was Taken in the Two Houses of the Legislature Tuesday—Met in Joint Session Yesterday and Announced.

Trenton, Jan. 29—John F. Dryden, of Newark, was formally declared elected to a seat in the United States Senate at the joint session of the upper and lower houses today, and is now privileged to be sworn in at Washington at such time as he may select. Senator John Kean will present the credentials of his colleague to the President of the Senate some time this week, it is expected.

By a strict party vote, the Senate and House of Assembly here at noon, yesterday, declared him to be the choice of the majority, and at noon today the journals of the two branches of the legislative body were compared and the election was duly ratified in joint session. The yesterday vote stood: Senate—Dryden, 17; McDermott, 4. House—Dryden, 46; McDermott, 14.

Assemblyman Bachelor named Dryden in the House and McCarter in the Senate, while McDermott was named by Assemblyman Hammill and Senator Gebhardt. Hammill's speech was rewarded with applause from both sides of the house. Generous tributes were paid to the memory of General Sewell by both of the Republican nominators.

The State Republican leaders will accompany Senator Dryden to Washington and will witness his installation as the junior representative in the upper house of Congress. It is said that an effort will be made to change the seat of power, which has been belonged to Camden, to Newark, the home of the senator-elect.

PROGRESSIVE HEARTS.

Last Evening's Attraction at the Park Club Attracted Many There.

Progressive hearts were the attraction at the Park Club last Tuesday, and as usual, a most pleasant evening was spent by the members and their friends. LOST WHILE DRUNK.

Such Was Lacey's Defence to the Charge of Larceny.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Somerville, Jan. 29 — Yesterday Jacob Lacey, of Lambertville was arraigned before Justice William R. Sutphen on a charge of having purloined $30 worth of Thomas Richards' clothing. Lacey was employed by Gatson & Richards, who have the contract for the repairs the New Jersey Central is making at Mauch Chunk, and Richards says he gave Lacey the clothes to take there, but he never showed up with them. Lacey claims he was intoxicated and left them on the train. He was held for the Grand jury.

Keep Away From Washington.

Upon the conviction for such an act the employe is liable to removal.

To Change Location.

George Richter, the Somerset street barber, will shortly remove his shop from its present location to one several doors below. In connection with his tonsorial work he will conduct a cigar store and pool room.

THINGS POLITICAL ARE BEGINNING TO MOVE

An Election is Drawing Nigh in North Plainfield and There is Talk of It.

IT'S RATHER EARLY YET

LIKELY THAT ROBERT CLARK, JR., WILL BE RENOMINATED.

Not Anxious to Go Back, But Administration Wants Him—Some Democratic Possibilities For Councilmen.

It's a little early for the game yet, but a political contest is due in the borough, Monday, March 10. The cards haven't been shuffled, of course, and it is hard to predict at this time just how things stand. At any rate there will be two vacancies in the Council to fill, for the terms of two of the present members expire in March. Those men are Robert Clark, Jr., and S. S. Swackhamer.

Mr. Clark has excellent chances of being renominated, even against his will. It is well known that this conscientious member of that body is adverse to continuing in office after the expiration of his present term, but his services are so valuable that it seems improbable that he will be allowed to decline a renomination without a strong protest. He is the president head of the street committee, and the general opinion appears to be that the borough will suffer by his retirement.

Should Mr. Clark consent to run again there will be but one other name to be placed on the Republican ticket. Who will be selected is a pure matter of conjecture. Several names have been suggested, but the administration is said to favor only such men as will be able to devote a share of their time to the interests of the community. The present trouble seems to be that the time of the "commuter" members is too much taxed by other affairs, and consequently the borough is made to suffer, as matters are delayed frequently.

It is improbable that Mr. Swackhamer will receive a renomination from the minority party. He is the Democratic representative of the Democrats at the present time, and has not taken much interest in the proceedings of the councilmanic body. In fact he seldom attends the sessions, possibly by reason of lack of spare time. This will make it imperative for the Democrats to choose two men for their ticket.

Among those who have been mentioned as desirable men to represent the Democratic party are A. J. Winckler, of Park place; John Becker, of Somerset street; Frank Krewson, of Summit avenue; and Andrew Love, Sr., of Duer street. With the present Republican majority it is not likely that the Democrats will be able to land a man in office, but it is considered that there is a fighting chance, provided good men are named.

Injured in Explosion.

Among the guests at the Murray Hill Hotel in New York, which on Monday sustained such a great shock from the explosion of dynamite in the subway near, were Mrs. Louise Worthington and her daughter. Miss Laura Worthington, who formerly resided in Plainfield, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Keep, of Brookline, Mass., who spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Keep's sister, Mrs. John H. French, of West Seventh street.

Ready for Business.

Health Inspector William Addis recently had an excellent photograph taken representing him in his contagious disease regimentals. This comprises a rubber outfit, coat, hat, gloves and boots, with an arrangement for protecting the face. Of course, Mr. Addis does not take any unnecessary risks in going about, but when called upon he is thoroughly protected by his suit.

Nearly An Accident.

Not understanding the brakeman's signal, the engineer of a drill engine continued forcing a train of freight cars along the siding at Boice, Runyon & Company's yards, yesterday afternoon. The end car collided the settlement and stopped only when it overlooked Park avenue. It was returned with some difficulty.

Invitations Are Out.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Brinkley have issued invitations to the marriage of their sister, Alice, to Luther L. Brinkley, Wednesday evening, February 19, at 9 o'clock, at their home, 420 East Third street.

ROAD BUILDERS IN SESSION

R. A. MEEKER CHOSEN SECRETARY OF STATE ORGANIZATION.

Annual Meeting of New Jersey State Association of County Engineers.

Trenton, Jan. 29—The road builders of New Jersey met in this city yesterday afternoon. It was the annual meeting of the New Jersey State Association of County Engineers, the meeting being held at the Road Commissioner's office here.

James Owen, of Essex county, the president of the organization, was in the chair. In the course of his remarks he said that the State had passed through the missionary stage so far as good roads are concerned, and now it is a matter of refinement. The education of the people concerning roads is complete. Now the sole question is that of methods. The kind of stone, size, manner in which it should be applied, and the kind of binder, are the problems.

Many diverse views were expressed and this added interest to the discussion. The talk could not be completed and it will be taken up at the next meeting, which will be on the third Tuesday in May.

The officers selected are: President, James Owen; vice president, J. J. Albertson, of Camden county; secretary, State Supervisor R. A. Meeker, of Plainfield; treasurer, Joshua Doughty, Jr., of Somerset county.

Invitations for Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Dunham, of 235 East Fifth street, have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Jennie Andrews Quick to Archibald Harvey Derby, Tuesday afternoon, February 11, at 5:30 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents. The bride and groom will be "at home," Saturday afternoon and evening, February 22.

Case Laid Over.

In Justice Mattison's court the trial in the contract case brought by Jesse Burdick against B. K. Cain and Wm. Kirch, trading as Cain & Co., was continued this morning for two weeks. Bird & Runyon represent the plaintiff, while R. S. Swackhamer is counsel for the defendant firm.

The President has sent to the Senate the following nominations of postmasters for New Jersey: Richard F. Goodman, Newton; Samuel V. Davis, Phillipsburg; William H. Lashear, Short Hills; DeWitt C. Winchell, Carteret; C. M. Thurston, Delmont.

J. H. Blair is Moving.

James R. Blair, proprietor of the men's furnishing store, is removing to the Marsh building, where he has secured commodious quarters. Mr. Blair will open his new store for business for the first time Saturday morning.

A Second Gift.

The officers of the Children's Home gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a generous gift of a second and well-selected supply of wall-papers from Janeway & Carpender, manufacturers at New Brunswick.

Mr. Kitch is Improving.

J. P. D. Kirch, of Somerset street, is slowly recovering from his illness. He is reported to be able to sit up and at times he appears to be in a better mood.

WAS HELD TUESDAY

THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSION WAS NAMED TO PASS ON MEMBERS.

Incorporators of Union County Bar Association Adopted By-Laws and Organized With Frank Bergen as President.

The first day of the present term of the Union county courts, January 7, a meeting of lawyers of Union county was held at the Courthouse, Elizabeth, and preliminary steps were taken to organize a Bar Association. A committee was appointed to prepare a plan and report at an adjourned meeting to be held January 22.

On that day a very largely attended meeting was held. The plan reported by the committee was carefully examined, amended and adopted. According to the plan an incorporation consisting of seven members was formed, the seven members being Frank Bergen, Edward S. Atwater, Craig A. Marsh, N. C. J. Ehgfish, George T. Parrot, Patrick H. Gilhooley and James C. Connolly. The incorporators met Tuesday afternoon at Mr. Bergen's office at Elizabeth, all being present, adopted by-laws and organized.

It is the intention of the members of the Bar of this county who have taken the lead in organizing the association to make it an effective influence for the administration of justice

FAMILY DEPARTED.

Oscar Green Said He Didn't Take Trouble to Look Them Up, Will Do So Hereafter.

Oscar Green, a waiter employed in a local restaurant, was the defendant in the city court, yesterday, in a non-support case brought against him by Overseer of the Poor Ayres. The complaint was made on behalf of Mrs. Green who declared her better half had wilfully deserted her.

Oscar declared that he and his wife had lived together for sixteen years until a short time ago in perfect peace and harmony. On returning home from work a few evenings ago he found his wife had departed from their home on Manning avenue, taking the furniture and their five children. He never took the trouble to find where she was located and has since been keeping the even tenor of his way in single harness.

A little persuasion from City Judge Runyon resulted in Oscar's agreement to look after his family.

DIME SOCIAL.

Last of a Series at Hope Chapel Held Last Night.

The last of a series of dime socials, which have been held in Hope chapel under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, took place, last evening. The attendance was very good and the final affair will no doubt prove as successful in a financial way as its predecessors.

A musical and literary programme was rendered as follows: Piano selections, Miss Pearl Eeckman; recitation, Miss Hattie Walls; piano duet, Miss Lillie Duckworth and Josie Chamberlain; recitation, Miss Mary Radford; vocal solo, Miss Edith Robinson; piano selections, Miss Lillie Duckworth; humorous monologue, Mrs. Elizabeth Firsthrook.

Refreshments were served at the close and an hour was spent in a social way.

—Neuman Brothers have a coffee which cannot be equalled by other stores at the price. It is Old Government Java at twenty-eight cents per pound.

The OLD FASHIONED and the MODERN MOTHER

"IT feels so queer having the children around the house!" laughed the young mother gayly.

"No: I can't promise to accept any invitation until they have gone back to school again. I declare I have not one minute to myself the whole day long."

"These vacations are rather wearing," assented the friend sympathetically.

A white haired old lady, the third woman in the party, now spoke for the first time. "Mothers are different now from what they used to be," she murmured half to herself. The other women looked at each other and smiled.

"Why, what do you mean, Aunt Frances?" exclaimed the taller of the two.

"Just this," said the old lady, with some decision. "Mothers were mothers in those times. When a girl married, she settled down and didn't expect to be on the move and gallivanting all her days. She had a good sized family of children, and she brought them up herself instead of trusting them to servants. Take my mother, for instance. She was well to do, yet she nursed every one of her twelve children. She used to give them their bath with her own hands every day, put them to bed at night, hear their prayers and watch them until they had fallen to sleep. When they grew older, she taught them their letters and the first rudiments of knowledge; she watched their manners and trained them to be little ladies and gentlemen. The girls under her able instruction were taught how to keep house, how to dust, how to cook. They also learned from her how to sew and do fine embroidery. She even formed their taste in reading and taught them the piano until they became proficient enough to have a teacher."

"But women had more time in those days," interrupted her niece.

"Did they?" cried the old lady sarcastically. "They had more time for balls, theatres and receptions, but they had no more time for their children. The moment a baby was born, it was handed over to a nurse, and the mother saw little of it until it was old enough to be sent to school. Then it was packed off to a boarding school, where it was brought up in almost total ignorance of her mother, and the boy is bestowed upon some military or preparatory school where he remains only to enter college. When the girl finally completes her education, she is introduced to society and married off at the first opportunity. And that's the modern idea of bringing up children." Aunt Frances concluded triumphantly.

And the two gayly dressed young women looked shocked at her denunciation of them. MAUD ROBINSON.

TRUNK PACKING.

A New Business in Which Women Are Meeting With Success.

"Why don't you become a professional packer of trunks?" These words were uttered half in jest, but the wide-awake young western woman to whom they were addressed took them seriously, and today she is making a neat income from her rather unusual trade. A careful trunk packer is born, not made. There are some women who can put twice as much into a trunk as others and so arrange everything that there will not be the slightest disorder or crumple. The girl in question was one of these. First she began by packing for her friends. Then, through them, she heard of other women who were too busy or too helpless to undertake the stowing away of their own wardrobes. Now she is regularly employed by a great hotel and is as important a feature as the resident masseuse or hairdresser.

This is the way in which she proceeds: Armed with bales of tissue paper, heavy white paper and string, she appears at the residence of the person who desires her services. She takes a careful inventory of the goods to be put in the trunk and then proceeds to work. As much as possible she packs in layers. The secret of good packing is to pack tightly and evenly, for thus breakages and creases are avoided. In the bottom layer she places all books, boots and other heavy things, and she fills up the crannies with stockings, ties and other uncrushable articles. Next follow firm layers of undergarments and then heavy dress skirts. These skirts she folds as nearly as possible in the lines they will take in wear. They are laid alternately in different directions, so that if the waistband of one is to the left side of the trunk the waistband of the next is at the right side. Between the dark and light dresses she places a layer of heavy white paper. The bodices she stuffs with tissue paper, and the sashes and loops are stuffed out also. In this manner wrinkles are avoided. When a skirt has to be folded across, she places a wad of tissue paper in the fold. Last and not least, when she has finished her dainty work she lays on the top of the uppermost tray a neat slip of paper which is an alphabetically arranged inventory of everything in the trunk. It tells also exactly where each article is placed, so that on arriving at her destination the owner will not have the slightest difficulty in finding even her smallest belongings.

She tells me that her services are constantly required and that in the spring and fall she has more work than she can do. I wonder why more girls do not adopt her profession.

HELEN CLIFTON.

An Odd New Fad.

A new fad has made its appearance in the fancy of making the sleeves so that there is no arm size—that is to say, the upper part of the sleeve reaches to the very neck, being fitted so across the shoulder. The idea probably had its rise in the raglan sleeve, but this one goes much beyond that. When set in a cloak or jacket, it reaches up to the ears and there is no visible part of the collar. In waists it is even more curious. One blouse waist made of brown albatross and recently displayed had this idea carried out by having the sleeve and shoulder part laid in folds along down to the elbow. It was made wider at the elbow so that it formed a puff, and the folds reached to the very ears. The lower part of the sleeve was tight. The rest of the blouse was not unlike many others. Very many sleeves are showing signs of a growing liking for more ample size.

The Use of Fur.

Fur is seen as much on the prettiest of the waists, but only in the narrowest possible strips—just a suspicion of fur, as we might call it.

NEWSBOY'S HEAT GAME.

By Clever Use of a Handkerchief This Youngster Does a Very Profitable Business.

She was a pretty, well-dressed young woman. She and her escort were leisurely walking west on Randolph street, says the Chicago Tribune, evidently on their way to the theater.

As they came to the Clark street corner a small street Arab ran up from the rear and touched the young woman on the arm. In one dirty hand he held out a small and rumpled square of cambric.

"Here, lady," he said, "you've dropped your handkerchief." The lady, a bit startled at first by the touch on her arm, turned and looked at the bright face of the small boy. Then she felt in her belt bag.

"No," she said, "it's not mine. But I thank you for asking me."

"Please, lady," went on the boy, bringing forth a bunch of evening papers, "won't you buy a paper from me? I'm stuck on a lot."

Of course under the circumstances the young woman's escort felt it incumbent upon him to reward the newsboy's honesty by handing him a dime, refusing at the same time to take a paper.

"The little chap deserved it, anyway, for offering to return the handkerchief he thought was mine," said the girl with a smile, and other spectators smiled, too, at the pretty little comedy of the streets.

But the climax of the plot came later when a second couple of young people approached on their way to the show.

Again the same small newsboy darted up behind them, and again he touched the young woman on the arm with a hand in which was held the same square of cambric.

"You've dropped your handkerchief, lady," he said again, and a minute later another dime had slipped into his pocket. Half a dozen times between eight and 9:30 o'clock the game was played on as many unsuspecting young couples, and in each instance a coin passed into the possession of the ingenious young swindler.

"That's a new one on me," said the copper on the corner, "but I'm sure that there's anything to be done about it."

MILLIONS FOR GEMS.

Diamond Battle Between Ladies of the Court Has Just Begun in Great Britain.

Preparations for King Edward's coronation are already taking definite and costly shape. Mrs. Bradley Martin is having a tiara made in Paris.

DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND. (One of the Principal Figures of the British Coronation.)

It is reported, at a cost of £250,000. It is a replica of the diadem which shone on the head of Empress Josephine. Queen Alexandra, not to be outdone by the wealthy Americans, is having the Koh-i-Noor diamond set in her new crown. The inclusion of this stone will make her crown the most valuable in the world, a distinction now held by the king of Portugal.

Peeresses are trying to outvie each other in the brilliancy of their tiaras. Lady Kilmorey, one of the most beautiful women in London and the wife of the earl of Kilmorey, who was a friend of the late friend of the king, Lady Londonderry, the duchess of Devonshire and the duchess of Portland are all said to be spending vast sums in order to celebrate the coronation by a display of jewels worthy of the occasion.

It is reported that King Edward, at the coronation, will confer the semiroyal title of duke of Inverness on the duke of Fife, son-in-law of his majesty.

AMERICA MUST RULE.

W. T. Stead, in His Review of Reviews, Says United States Will Dominate the World.

William T. Stead's forthcoming annual review in his magazine, the Review of Reviews, will be devoted to an exposition of the movement which he calls the Americanization of the world. The magazine will appear with a cover bearing a striking illustration of the American flag floating full across a representation of the earth. The author says in his prospectus:

"No movement now visible of progress amongst us is so significant and none is fraught with issues so momentous as the triumphant advance of the Americans to the first place among the leading nations of the world. The nineteenth century was that of the British empire; the twentieth is that of the American republic.

"The full import of this shifting of international gravity is as yet but dimly appreciated by the citizens of the republic and is resented rather than recognized by the subjects of the king. We stand on the threshold of a new era, pregnant with immense possibilities for weal or woe, not merely for those who speak the English language, but for all the children of men, not only in this island, but in the farthest seas too remote to feel the effect of the change in the relative position of Great Britain and the United States.

"Among all nations, peoples, kindreds and tongues the slow ascent of the stars and stripes over the union jack is a recognized portent to some of deliverance and hope, to others of desolation and doom."

Mr. Stead promises incidentally to discuss "the probable effect of the law of gravitation on the loosely compacted congeries of commonwealths which in the nineteenth century belonged to the British empire, but which may in the twentieth gravitate to the republic which now promises to become the center of the political system of our race."

Mr. Stead does not think that the world will be damaged. America "placing the resistless inventive genius, restless energy and limitless resources of the continent at the disposal of the whole human family."

ROUGH ALPINE GAME.

It Is a Neck and Neck Contest Which Tests Endurance as Well as Strength.

One of the queerest sports is that known as "Streeck Katzenziehen" (a word which absolutely defies translation)—which is practiced by the sturdy sons of the Bavarian Alps.

The winner usually receives a cash prize, and the contest is invariably followed by a hearty meal at which where the bloody conflict was pulled," as the local prints describe it.

Prizes Was Level-Headed.

A story is being told in London clubs about King Edward. A discussion once arose among a circle of his intimate friends as to how they would each meet a sudden reverse of fortune. One of them turned to the prince—it was before his accession—and said: "If the monarchy was overthrown here, sir, what would you do?" The prince of Wales thought for a moment, and then replied: "Well, I think I might support my family by becoming in the United States upon how it feels to be prince of Wales."

BULLDOG IS STRONG.

Be Positively Has No Equal for His Size on Earth.

You've Met Him Frequently, But Perhaps You Do Not Know All His Fine Points, Which Are Here Described.

In point of strength, tenacity and endurance no animal in the world can compare, size for size, with a well-set-up bulldog. Its fighting qualities are, of course, proverbial. Most people, however, only know its exploits from the pictures in the comic papers. Anyone who will take the trouble to examine the peculiar equipment of one of these powerful little engines will end by having a greatly increased respect for its qualities, says the New York World.

The enormous strength of the bulldog lies not so much in the size of its muscles as in their arrangement. Years of careful breeding have developed great layers of muscle where they may be used to the best possible bulldog advantage.

Compared with most dogs a bulldog may be said to be deformed. The head, shoulders and forelegs have been developed at the expense of the rest of the body so far as symmetry is concerned. It would almost seem that the breeders had gone out of their way to produce as ugly a specimen of dogflesh as possible.

A bulldog, of course, never runs away. Though it can, therefore, is growing legs on him which would give him speed. His appearance, on the contrary, suggests a battering-ram. The muscles seem to be placed on the legs for pulling, not for propelling the body. In extreme cases we find the bulldog bowlegged, which gives greater power to drag heavy objects or to resist being dragged. The shortness of the legs by bringing the body as near as possible to the ground, also suggests great stability. In training a bulldog it is found that all superfluous flesh disappears more quickly than in the case of other dogs, and that a bulldog in condition carries less superfluous weight than any other breed.

The heaviest layers of muscles are laid on the bulldog's head and neck. The efficiency of a fighter is, of course, measured principally by his quickness and the strength of his jaws. Every well-set-up dog, it will be found, has a thick bunch of muscles at the side of its jaws. In any other breed of dogs this abnormal development would be considered a deformity. It is this powerful little group of muscles which gives the jaw its vise-like grip. The form of the jaw is particularly well adapted to the work it is called upon to do. It is long and broad and set with unusually heavy teeth.

The two long teeth which help to give the bulldog its ferocious appearance are also very valuable weapons. They serve, as it were, to lock up the vise-like jaws when they are once closed upon an object.

The most powerful muscles in the entire frame of the bulldog are those which control the jaws. In case the prey, whatever it may be, slips from this grip, it is certain to be caught and held by the interlocking teeth in the front of the jaw.

Almost any bulldog, whether in or out of condition, can support its own weight by the grip of its jaw. The marvelous tenacity of this grip is largely due to its ability to hold its own weight by the grip of its front teeth.

Even the young bull pup can lift its own weight by the grip of his jaws. As the dog grows this grip becomes so strong that a bulldog may be swung and jerked about violently without disturbing its hold.

The muscles come to maturity about the sixth year. A bulldog is considered capable of doing its best fighting in its fifth and sixth years.

The average life of a bulldog is 14 years.

New Cure for Seasickness.

Sea water is recommended as a cure for seasickness. In addition to a light diet, a mild purge before starting on a voyage, and loose clothing and a recumbent position in the open air on board ship, the remedy never known to fail is a pint of sea water. This usually acts as an emetic and often as a saline aperient, giving prompt relief from all unpleasant feelings.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

Honesty Pays Better Profits Than Trickery or Deceit.

Senator Chauncey M. Depew Preaches a Sermon to Young Men Who Want to Become Rich and Respected.

Honesty is too much talked about as if it were scarce in these days. The business principles of to-day are better, purer and more universally honest than they were in the days of my boyhood. Then the motto of life ran something like this: "All is fair in love, war and trade." But this generation has tabooed that maxim and business methods were never better or more reputable than they are at this minute.

Many immense fortunes, says Chauncey M. Depew, in the Chicago Chronicle, have been made by men of this generation who employed strictly honest means to attain their ultimate success and great wealth. Take Bessemer as an apt illustration. He invented the steel which is used so extensively all over the world for car rails and revolutionized the manufacture of steel, giving employment to thousands of persons and bringing wealth to many besides himself. He only made $16,000,000 out of the invention, and I have heard people say they they thought this amount was entirely too small a sum for the invention of so wonderful an improvement. I think myself that it was quite a respectable sum.

Many a man, as we all know, has made a fortune through judicious advertising. Take two men starting in business at the same time, one uses all the money he makes in living well, and sometimes even extravagantly. The other invests all the surplus cash that he can lay his hands on in advertising here, there, everywhere that he thinks will attract public notice. What is the result? The man who advertises has crowds flocking to his shop to see the beauties of the advertised goods, and as the public begin to run so they will continue from sheer force of habit. The first shopkeeper will in the meantime be sitting unthought of and uncared for, aghast at the crowds that daily throng the counters of his competitor and bitterly bewailing the bad luck which has followed his own venture into trade. Yet he has no one to blame for it but himself.

Some persons might consider that old Commodore Vanderbilt was dishonest because he did not refund the money which the stockholders of the Hudson River & Harlem railroads would have made if they had continued to hold their stock after he took hold of the roads. But he was not. They cheated themselves out of the money by not being far-sighted enough to hold on to their stock.

When the commodore had made $20,000,000 in shipping of various sorts he looked about for something good in which he might invest his capital. He found these railroads, which were then in a most deplorable, out-of-date condition—the stock only worth $5 on $100 and the bonds you could not sell for love or money. But he took hold, built new bridges, put all modern improvements into the car service, advocated new signal systems, in short, he infused new blood into the entire service of the road at an enormous outlay of capital—and then he waited. And all the capital came back, bringing to him additional wealth with it.

I have seen many men who have become wealthy through dishonest methods, and my experience with them has taught me this: That most men who gain wealth dishonestly, if they live long enough, get poor again. It is almost an invariable rule.

The main temptation with which the ordinary business man of to-day is beset is the temptation to misrepresent his capital or business prospects, and thus obtain greater credit. But don't do it. It does not pay. The old, old adage, "Honesty is the best policy," is the safest motto for every business man to follow. And I know what I am talking about, too.

The good world you'll be happy, but you won't have a good time; may sound very smart and elicit rounds of applause, but it is a fallacy through and through. It is easier, much easier, for an honest man to become wealthy than for a rascal. The honest brother, who may seem to prosper at a time, but, mark my words, it is only temporary success.

Many Happy Old Couples.

A Boston paper has found 818 couples in New England who were married over 50 years ago, and are ready to celebrate their diamond wedding, surrounded, in most cases, by many descendants.

A GOOD INVESTMENT. COACHED BY SISTER.

Little Ethel Rothwell Trained "Young Corbett" for Ring.

First Champion Pugilist Who Owes All His Skill, Fame and Prowess to the Clever Advice of a Little Woman.

"Young Corbett," the champion light-weight pugilist of the world, owes his supremacy to a woman.

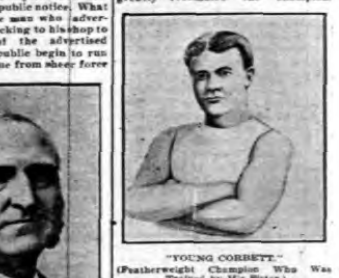
Not in the ordinary romantic sense. Young Corbett's athletic greatness has no sentimental basis. On the contrary, in the most literal sense of the words, "Young Corbett," otherwise William Rothwell, has been expertly coached for his great part by his younger sister.

Plainly, therefore, glory ought to fall where glory is due. Miss Ethel Rothwell, who is 14 in the matter of years, but infinitely more mature in the matter of common sense, ought to have at least as much credit as the "trainers" of other great fighters have had. Indeed, if the extent of the service she has rendered her brother were widely known, Miss Ethel, who is now the most domestic and retiring of misses, would be in demand as an expert authority by light-weights the world over.

As a "coach" Ethel was born, not made. In her well-balanced little head the principles of successful prize-fighting were providentially innate. Or this at least was inferred by the representative of the New York World who called upon her at her home in Denver.

It is useless to deny, though this is incidental, that Miss Ethel is exceptionally attractive. She is a vivacious red-cheeked young lady, with deep blue eyes and two heavy braids of auburn hair.

The main point is that in build she greatly resembles the champion.



"YOUNG CORBETT." (Featherweight Champion Who Was Trained by His Sister.)

Young ladies who may be moved to emulate her may be interested to know that the Denver Diana is only four feet eleven inches tall. She is, however, extraordinarily muscular with no extra pounds. Her exact measurements are as follows: Forearm, 9 inches; biceps, 9 inches; wrist, 5 inches; calf, 11 inches; thigh, 16½ inches; waist, 18 inches; neck, 12 inches; chest, 30 inches; reach, 60 inches.

Now, in addition to her muscle and pretty face, Miss Ethel is a young lady of marked initiative. When her stalwart young brother confided to her quite in secret his pugilistic ambitions she said to him:

"Listen to me, Will. If you want to be a fighter skip rope. It will help your wind and it will make your feet nimble."

The budding champion laughed. Whereupon his sister explained further and he took her advice. This was two years ago. Today he is the champion. This illustrates the remarkable sagacity of woman.

Having become an expert rope-skipper and demonstrated the wisdom of the exercise to his own satisfaction, young Will Rothwell needed no persuasion to adopt the next piece of advice his sister gave him.

This was that he should fly sawing wood. In the back yard of the Rothwell house there is always an enormous stack of logs and a large saw. She advised him to saw with his right hand for 15 or 20 minutes and then do the same with his left. This was to help him as a puncher. She was always present to see that he did it well.

If he grew tired she still kept him at it.

Before entering a battle Young Corbett was coached at home or at his training quarters by this sister. At almost every fight she accompanied him as far as the amphitheater, when she would go home and await the result of his encounter. Her advice was always: "Keep cool and let the other fellow do the worrying."

She declared that he would have a better show of winning by sidestepping his opponent and delivering his famous punches to the right or left jaw. It was seen about two years ago that the "kid" changed his tactics in the fight. He was at his sister's advice that he did so.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

Fur Is Used for Trimming All Sorts of Swell Garments.

Little Change Noticeable in Cut of Skirts and Sleeves — Blouses and Tendencies as Popular as Ever.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

THE impulse that provokes every woman to fine dressing, and to outdress every other woman if she possibly can, is not hard to understand after a careful inspection of the prevailing fashions. Never since the time when the extravagant styles of the French court were so faithfully followed by fashion's devotees has dress been so luxurious and gorgeous as at the present moment; not that sweet simplicity has been entirely overlooked, but it is a simplicity only to be achieved by the cunning of the master hand.

Any woman who has made a study of this interesting subject knows that fashion, after all, is but a huge wheel, constantly revolving and coming back, with more or less regularity, to the starting point; and out of one fashion is evolved another. It is for this reason that the woman who gazes tolefully at the balance which threatens to be on the wrong side of her bank account may take heart of grace, for who knows but that another turn or two of this same wheel may bring a revival of the pretty, simple fashions of other years, and in the meantime, if she keeps her wits about her, she can turn herself out smartly attired at a moderate cost, everything considered.

We hear a great deal just now about the full skirt; but certainly the latest models indicate very little, if any, change. They continue to show the same wonderful amount of frou-frouing round the feet as of yore, and still keep the graceful clinging appearance about the hips seen in all the well-fitting skirts of the last two seasons. Let us hope that the present style will remain with us for a long time to come, for the full skirt is not pretty or generally becoming.

Dame Fashion evinces a decidedly strong tendency towards shortening the skirt to all tailored gowns, which is an extremely sensible idea and one we can all approve so long as it is confined to the walking skirt, but according to my mind the skirt of our best gowns, for grace and beauty, should always be long and trailing.

Perhaps the most noticeable change in fashion this season is to be found in the newest sleeves, though with few exceptions they have not reached very voluminous proportions as yet. As the very full sleeve can only be worn becomingly by the very few, let us trust the present happy medium may remain in vogue for many months to come, but I much doubt it, for there are always some women who try to out-fashion Fashion, regardless of appearances. However, for the moment we are safe. The only garment in which the big sleeve should find a place is the long evening coat. There it is appropriate and comfortable, because easy to slip off and on over the dainty evening bodice.

In the interesting matter of trimming furs is the thing most sought after. In fact, there is a perfect craze for this royal looking ornamentation, and when mixed with lace, according to the latest edict of Dame Fashion, makes so rich and effective trimming as one could well desire. On skirts the fur trimming usually takes the form of bands, varying in width from one to twelve inches, while quite often the bodices, particularly those selling from Paris, have a small pouched vest made of it, over which is placed a small jabot of cream tinted lace, the soft meshes of the fine lace serving to bring out the beauty of the fur beneath. House and street gowns, with their rich and varied trimming, continue to grow more beautiful and elaborate with each passing hour.

Material showing a rough and somewhat hairy surface is used almost exclusively for handsome street gowns, while for house wear smooth-faced cloth, silk and silk and wool mixtures are most in evidence.

There is a well-defined rumor from Paris that real empire dresses will be worn this winter—not in the modified form of those seen early in the season, but exact copies of those worn in the time of Napoleon's reign, but from what can be learned nobody seems anxious to adopt such a costume in this country. However, time alone can solve the interesting question.

As each season approaches there is always a feeling of some uncertainty about the continued popularity of the ever useful and generally becoming blouse. Some authorities claim its prestige is decidedly on the wane, while others, equally well-informed on all matters pertaining to fashionable dress, emphatically declare it will never die. That its requeim will not be sung this season is certain, but further than that I cannot say. Within the week I have seen some charming models, from the garment of utility to a mysterious dream of lace, fur and chiffon. Most certainly the cult of the blouse is thoroughly understood by the fashionable dressmaker of the day who well knows that no matter for what occasion a blouse is required, it must be as well cut and as well made as our best dress bodices. Some of the new evening blouses are beautiful beyond description. The handsomest are either plain white or black and white in combination, very elaborately embroidered and trimmed with fur and yards upon yards of fine lace. Spotted silks are still being used, and so are plain and spotted pannes and velvets, and rich satin orientals, as well as charming novelties in flannels, the latter, of course, being for more useful wear.

For smart afternoon and evening wear lace and accordion-plaited chiffon, mingled with a sparing fairylike touch, and sometimes bordered with mink or sable, compose some of the most delightful new models. Russian blouses made of velvet and trimmed with mink are to be reckoned among the handsomest and highest-priced models. On the plainer blouses, made of silk or flannel, big collars give place to very neat high collars and soft stocks of black and colored satins or velvet, always surmounted by a dainty little muslin turn-over collar.

There is nothing more delightfully restful after a hard day's shopping than to get quickly into a garment in which one feels at perfect ease.

The sharp contrast between the hard lines of the boned bodice and the comfortable looseness of the tea jacket appeals very strongly to the majority of womankind. They count the tea jacket among their most valuable possessions, and it is perhaps for this reason that fashion makers have devoted so much time and attention to this ideal garment. It would be quite impossible to imagine another more becoming than the new models in tea jackets and lounging robes, and it really seems as if originality of design and perfection in workmanship could go no further. The materials for which they are composed seem to have been worn for this special purpose, while the trimming used is appropriate and beautiful in the extreme. Sumptuous embroideries appear on some of the most exclusive models, and on others fur and lace in combination reign supreme. In the matter of style the designs are quite varied, but at the present moment the empire shape seems to be the general favorite. Other designs which are fashionable after the Watteau period in the long are of that time. The Japanese shape also plays an important part this season, and for those who like this rather severe style nothing could be more effective than the Japanese silk, turned back with revers of a contrasting color.

KATE GARDNER.

A GERMAN NEW WOMAN.

Dr. Elizabeth von Richthofen and Her Work as Factory Inspector.

We could put it all into one word in German, the phrase "protective legislation for working women," and the word would be "arbeiterinnenschutzgesetzgebung." At any rate, whether you can pronounce it or not, that is "it," and it is claiming public attention in the German states in a manner astonishing for the feminine sex.

Within the past two or three years the innovation has been made of the appointment of women as factory inspectors for operatives of their own sex, of course, inside of very narrow bounds and altogether dependent on and responsible to masculine superiors. The German ladies' paper, Frauen Dehein, contains a resume of the first full reports from the newly appointed women officials. Public sentiment in the empire favors the new system, and the report shows its excellent workings. The writer in Frauen Daheim says that after America, England and France had approved and generally adopted the system of factory inspectors at length in 1897 Saxe-Weimar cautiously ventured to make the experiment. Other states followed. The last one of all to appoint the woman inspector was, mark you, that stronghold of militarism and imperialism, Prussia.

The studious, careful German mind paid a degree of attention to the qualifications for their office of the women inspectors which may well be commended to Americans. The fine lady from society who goes mincing into work places with patronizing air, holding up her skirts daintily and sticking out her little finger, concerning the needs and labors of factory women knowing or caring as little as a bird does about Sunday—this fine ladyish person has place on none of the German lists. Heretofore in Prussia the two women assistant inspectors were both actively employed in factory work in the department overseers or superintendents. In Wurttemberg the post was given to the widow of a former factory owner, while in Hesse a practicing woman physician was made inspectress. In Baden one of the most learned ladies in all Germany, Elizabeth von Richthofen, doctor of philosophy, who passed her Heidelberg university examinations summa cum laude—with highest honors—has accepted the office of factory inspectress. One admirable requirement for all the women is that they shall have sound health and be able to endure perfectly the fatigues of travel and extremes of heat and cold.

Elizabeth von Richthofen was born at Metz twenty-seven years ago. When she was eighteen, she passed her examinations and became a teacher, first in Metz, later in Heidelberg. It was in the classic old university town in 1897 that she resolved to study for a university degree. She was educated partly in Berlin, partly in Heidelberg. In the summer of 1901 she passed her final examinations magnificently before the faculty of philosophy at Heidelberg, winning the most Illustrious honors in political economy.

Such is the woman who in Germany does not esteem it beneath her to accept a place under the government as inspector of factories where women are employed. The precedent might well be followed by American women university graduates as well as by those who have the appointing of factory inspectors. Oddly enough, however, this very fact of her brilliant qualifications for her office at first created a prejudice against Dr. von Richthofen in the dumb and stupid minds of many women artisans. Ignorance and stupidity ever look on learning with suspicion. This prejudice, however, is decidedly lessening, and Dr. von Richthofen is rapidly overcoming.

In Germany, as elsewhere, the worst obstacles to righting the wrongs of women are the indifference and more or less sullen resignation of the women themselves. German female factory operatives know their wrongs, but they are used to them, and they are often too ignorant to comprehend that any human being can really desire a disinterested desire to do justice done them.

Velvet Is Popular.

Velvet costumes are popular this winter, but unless a woman is prepared to pay for a good quality of this material it is better for her to confine herself to cloth gowns. Nothing wears so poorly or looks so tawdry as cheap velvet.

The NEW WOMAN and HER SPHERE

MRS. J. C. CROLY (Jennie June) was the only president the New York Woman's Press club ever had, she herself founded the club about thirteen years ago. How much she was loved by its members may be judged from the fact that at every biennial election she was returned as its head, and the appearance of any candidate against her was a mere matter of form to satisfy the requirements of the by-laws of the organization. Although Jennie June was past seventy at the time of her death, no one could think of her as an old woman. Her figure was girlish, her hair was still dark brown, she still took a young woman's interest in the active pursuits and advancement of her sex. We must always remember these two facts concerning her—she opened the way for woman's employment on the daily newspapers; she was the mother and founder of women's clubs. Two American women before her had been known as contributors to newspapers, but they were never regularly members of the home staff of one. These were Margaret Fuller and Mrs. Lippincott (Grace Greenwood). Mrs. Lippincott still lives. She was present at the October meeting of the New York Woman's Press club, and Mrs. Croly introduced her to the audience in a few graceful, tender words. In response Grace Greenwood, who wrote European letters for Horace Greeley, made a little speech to the club. It was something to remember to see Grace Greenwood introduced to an audience by Jennie June. And already Jennie June, the younger of the two, has gone from this earth. May she enjoy the rest she never knew here!

Miss Norma Munro, daughter of Norman Munro, the publisher, has control and personally managed all the business interests of her father since his death. Miss Munro is an accomplished musician, a graduate of law and an all round athlete. She is as fearless as she is clever.

Mrs. Lydia Biggs of New Castle is one of the best farmers in Delaware. Her lands, fences and various buildings are as neat and in as good order as is a well kept front yard. Mrs. Biggs is a dairy farmer, keeping thirty cows and selling their milk. She is entirely prosperous and is laying up money, proving in one case, at least, that a woman farmer can succeed where a man did not do so, for her husband died heavily in debt. Besides having his obligations to pay, his widow had a family of small children to rear, but this brave, capable woman was equal to all the demands on her.

It is strange that more women do not carry on the business of farming. A woman is by nature a born gardener, and makes an admirable farmer. It is true she cannot do the hard work a man can, but the art of amassing money consists not in hard work, but in utilizing the hard work of other people. This is a profound truth.

The solar plexus is the largest nerve center in the body. It is situated behind the stomach, just above the waist. It practically controls a large portion of the nervous system. Breathe deeply and as you do so mentally send sensation to this solar plexus. This will wake it up and develop it and increase your nervous power if you persist. "Wake up the solar plexus," says Elizabeth Towne.

The committee of revision on the tenets of the Presbyterian faith have been extremely busy and have recommended various changes. Gentlemen, while you are about it wake up your solar plexus and recommend also that the word obey be stricken from your marriage service. The creed that a woman must obey a man has long since dropped into desuetude among enlightened people, and it is time to drop it out of the Christian churches.

It gives me very great pleasure to make note of the fact that both house and senate of the legislature of Wyoming have passed a resolution heartily indorsing woman suffrage and recommending the enfranchisement of women in every state and territory of the Union "as a measure tending to the advancement of higher and better social order." What is more, the legislature requested the governor of Wyoming to forward a copy of the resolution to the legislature of every other state and territory in the Union, and the press of the United States was also asked to call attention to the resolution. Splendid! The slow old world does move.

Talk of your spry old men! Mrs. Mercy L. Day, a Maine woman, eighty-one years old, not long since rose early one morning, fed the calves and pigs and helped milk eight cows. Then she had a waggon load of corn apples, all her and eggs and drove alone to the town, twenty-three miles away, to market them. She sold out her wares immediately, did some shopping while her horse was resting and eating and then started on her return trip, completing most of it the same day. The age of a woman is not a matter of years, you see. It is a matter of slumping and giving up mostly.

ELIZA ARCHARD CONNER.

THREE NEW STYLES.

France, Germany and England at Odds Concerning the Modes.

Three distinct styles are being pushed forward for precedence by the modistes of three countries, and an interesting question is, Which will win? In France the determination is that a woman shall accept the dressmaker models, which demand twice as much material as the close and severely simple skirt of today. So the Parisian dressmakers are employing every device to bring about this result. The Berlin modistes are not second to those of Paris in designing elegant garments, and Berlin is determined that we shall adopt the empire, with its short waist and long, narrow skirt. England still favors the prim and becoming shapes and tailored firms, which have become almost inseparably connected with the English woman. America in consequence has an almost cosmopolitan style particularly her own made up of what is best in all these other styles.

While it is true that too many of our women follow blindly the Paris fashions, there are numerous others who seek something peculiar to their own style and figure. Thus we have all that is best and most artistic. And so it happens that we have gowns with flounces, empire robes and princess shapes, all fashionable and all handsome. Perhaps the empire gowns are the least desirable, for not many women look well in them. But when one does, she is a "dream of beauty."

I found today in one of our largest and most important houses a dinner dress in which all the striving styles are most artfully combined. The short waisted effect is produced by narrow graduated tucks which mold the dress to the waist outlines in a graceful manner.

A deep lace and chiffon bertha effect is produced around the neck, and from that to the bottom of the skirt are two lines of the new passementerie motifs done in lace and chenille on chiffon. They are made separate and are sewed on at will. They make an effective trimming. The skirt itself is of the new printed liberty, lined with taffeta in the prevailing tint in the liberty, which in this instance is faint purple and green, representing deuxde-lis with the petals all broken off from the stem and scattered among the crushed and bent leaves. Some of the designs on this new printed liberty are exquisite and could have been done by no one not a real artist. The upper part of the gown is being suggestive of the empire shape, the waist is formed into a princess by the tucks, and the bottom of the skirt has the flounces to recall the days so longed for by the manufacturers. But these flounces are made of black chiffon and are edged with hello gauze ribbons. So are all the ruffles at the waist and sleeves. These sleeves are as composite as is the rest of the gown.

I have been thus particular in giving a description of this dinner dress as it is one of those leaders in styles which can be adopted for a very general use, and it would be very pretty in the new cotton goods which are now being shown charming for this and sheer material with chantilly or some light lace, white or ecru, as garniture.

Much stress is laid on the mercerized cottons, and with reason, for they are as pretty as silks and have all the luster without the price. They also wear better and offer effects that no other cotton goods can approach in point of beauty. Very many of the ginghams of all kinds and chambrays are mercerized, a fact of importance to those who like a richer effect than the plain goods can afford.

In the more expensive summer goods are silk lace net mull, something new and desirable; silk dotted grenadine stripes, Swiss and India muslins in high art Persian effects and designs, and silk crape grenadines. Mercerized silk poplins are entirely new and have an incredible richness and sumptuousness. Mercerized sateens are also very rich in appearance, and they wear well. The rich bloom does not rub off. A dress made of this material has all the luster of the best silk and costs but a mere trifle in comparison.

Dollars, Buckles and Chains Dear to the Feminine Heart.

in a narrow rim of brilliants. Renaissance buckles are also among the novelties. Indeed, chains, purses, combs, etc., are modeled on the renaissance style. They look very stunning on a black gown.

The La Vallière chains are most popular. This ornament consists of a thin gold chain, from which hangs a pendant in the shape of a jeweled flower.

A French visiting costume is shown in today's sketch. It is made of old rose wool veiling. The waist is made up with a yoke of velvet and a corselet effect of ecru lace. There are tucked bands of the goods coming from each shoulder to the waist line. The sleeves are full at the wrists and show undersleeves of soft lace. The skirt has a cluster of V shaped tucks around the hips, and lower down a similar V shaped band of tucking heads the flounce.

White Cloth Costumes—Raised Embroidery on Dresses.

White cloth costumes are very fashionable for visiting. They are trimmed with fur, chiefly sable, and have muff and boa to match, the hat being also edged and trimmed with the fur.

Embroidery to be chic should be rather heavy and in dull shades of silk or wool. In some cases the leaves of the flowers are padded to give them the necessary raised effect. Sometimes also gold and silver threads are introduced into the pattern to lend it greater richness. The materials which are thus embroidered are either the material of the dress itself or canvas.

Today's picture shows a very neat tailor made of royal blue broadcloth trimmed with Persian lamb. The coat is made blouse fashion, with two strapped bands going across the bust. From these starts a series of perpendicular bands reaching down to the waist line both back and front. The belt is of the cloth, stitched. The skirt is made with perpendicular strappings running to within half way the distance between the knee and the foot. There is a long train. The turnover collar and revers are of the Persian lamb, and there is also a wide flare cuff of this at the bottom of the close fitting sleeves.

With this is worn a hat made of the same material and trimmed with two variegated bird's wings.

A FEMININE METHOD of "RAISING CAIN"

WOMEN flatter themselves that they are better than men, and undoubtedly they are in a general way. But there is one special phase of viciousness to be laid at their door which masculinity, to its credit, is seldom guilty of. It is the sending of malicious anonymous letters. The man assassin stabs another in the dark. The woman assassin sends an anonymous letter.

A certain women's club whose name I do not mention because I am ashamed of it grew and flourished till it had several hundred members. As women's clubs go, this one was progressive and harmonious. The sisterhood of all the land pointed to it with pride as to evidence that women need not necessarily squabble among themselves. Of the good it accomplished even men newspaper writers made once in awhile mention.

Well, all this good was destroyed by an anonymous letter.

An election was on in the club. In imitation of the noble superior example of man in such cases made and provided the women became so excited over the rival candidates that their election fight waxed almost as bitter and desperate as a senatorial contest in a state legislature. In the critical nick of time the executive committee received an anonymous letter accusing a prominent member of being, let us say, a villain and a horse thief. What would you have done if you had been chairman of that executive committee? What would any woman or man of common sense have done with this packet of poison? Simply have burned it to ashes and forever after been silent as the grave, and the wicked, cowardly sender would never have had the satisfaction of knowing her packet had even been received.

But no, but no! What does this committee do but lay the thing bare to the whole club! A hullabaloo and a typhoon which can only be compared to an official investigation at Washington or a state capital ensued. A committee was appointed to discover the writer. The committee incubated the letter duly and produced the verdict that a certain member was the guilty person. They decided, however, not to give the verdict out publicly to the club. They said they would not tell. But, really and truly, is woman in her present stage of development so constituted that she cannot hold fast a secret? Must she always, always tell? Believe me, woman will never be the equal of man till she has learned self control enough to keep her mouth shut! The outlook is discouraging.

The decision as to the supposed authorship of the letter was not laid before the club honestly and openly, but it dribbled out privately from the committee one by one, and that fine progressive club became the arena of a historical scandal. Lawyers, handwriting experts and excited women sat up nights with the case, and for once the members of a woman's club did not have to complain that the newspapers paid no attention to their meetings. No, indeed!

The talk became so wrought up in their speeches that they even unclasped their hands from the front of their waists and shook accusing fingers at one another. Threats were made of heavy suits for damages, wherever some of the members may be scared at the row they had raised that they sought to have the club disband in order to dodge the consequences.

Moral.—But you see it for yourself. In fact, there are two. Of course if you are a lady in search of a moral you will never send an anonymous letter. The other moral is this: Train yourself to keep your mouth shut.

LOSSES ON TRAINS.

The annual report of the passenger department of the Lehigh Valley Railroad as regards the matter of baggage handled during the year 1901, brings up a rather interesting point in connection with articles that are left on trains by careless passengers.

The writer had occasion recently to read over a report of a certain railroad, which stated that during the year, 1,370 articles of various description were found in the coaches of passenger trains on that line, not including the articles found in Pullman cars. Of these articles, 298 were claimed and returned to owners, the balance of the number, 992, still remaining in the hands of the baggage department of the company, awaiting claimants.

The law of nearly all states in the Union provides that if these articles are not claimed by the owners within one year, they may be sold at public sale, after due notice, after which the claimant has no right to any article so found. The articles left on trains are varied in character, ranging from books to umbrellas, pocketbooks, wraps, valises, merchandise, etc.

It is hard to explain the low percentage of calls made for such articles left on trains, unless it be that passengers, in the main, do not understand that such articles that are found and turned into the baggage departments of the various railroads, are held there subject to orders of the owners. There are probably some articles that are left on trains by passengers and picked up by other passengers, but as a general thing such articles are found by the trainmen, and turned into the railroad companies' offices, as stated above.

COMMENDABLE COURSE.

The course of the First Baptist church, in adopting individual communion cups, commends itself to all thinking people and could well be followed by the other churches of the city. Cautious of past years has kept many to the old way but a common sense view of the direct sanitary advantages cannot fail to win supporters to this plan of individual cups, which is now in use in two of the local churches and has just been adopted in a third.

As in everything else, there is a right and a wrong way of doing it. The Communion service in which the individual cups are used can be made just as impressive and solemn, or even more so, as that in which the old style cups figure. Several of the prominent New York churches have introduced the system with general satisfaction and those who were the chief objectors now admit that the small cups detract nothing from the solemnity or impressiveness of the service.

The hygienic reasons for the change are so manifest that it is a wonder that the action was not taken years ago. At one's own house, one would not think of asking his guest to drink from the same cup from which another had already partaken. How much worse is it, therefore, for hundreds of people to drink from the same cup in the house of God. The practice contains unlimited possibilities for the transmission of many diseases. With no other reason against it than that our forefathers used the same means, it is very proper that the local congregations should take this action.

SENATOR CROSS' ACT.

The fact that it was the vote of State Senator Joseph Cross, of Union county, which finally decided the legislative caucus in favor of John M. Dryden as the Republican candidate for United States Senator, has naturally led to many conjectures as to the Senator's reasons for changing his vote from the Griggs column when the nineteenth ballot came around. As Senator Cross comes from the same county as does U. S. Senator John Kean and is a warm friend of that gentleman, his course was generally looked upon as being more or less influenced by the other from Union county.

While Senator Cross might be slightly influenced by the desires of his warm political friends, he is not the kind of a man to accept dictation from any party leader. He is the kind of a man who can be counted on to follow the dictates of his own conscience. In supporting the candidacy of John W. Griggs, there is no doubt that he did so because he believed that Mr. Griggs was the best man for the place. It is a known fact that the so-called Kean faction had no desire to see Mr. Griggs in the United States Senate so Senator Cross' support of that man was undoubtedly from the best of motives.

When it was a sure thing, however, that Mr. Griggs could not be elected, Senator Cross followed a course which was undoubtedly "good politics" from the point of view of Senator Kean and his friends. Mr. Dryden had thirty-one votes and only lacked one more. In a way which called particular attention to the act, Senator Cross asked to have his vote changed from the Griggs to the Dryden column. It decided the contest and put Mr. Dryden and his friends from Essex under direct obligations to the Kean faction in Union county.

When U. S. Senator Kean's term expires, he is going to have a hard fight to secure re-election, South Jersey is going to make a very strong fight to have a representative in the Upper House of Congress from the southern end of the State. If both south Jersey and Essex county are then lined up against the present Senator, he might as well give up the fight at once. With Essex county's support, there is hope for him. As it was the vote of one of John Kean's friends which gave Mr. Dryden the place in the Senate, the former ought to be able to count on some kind of assistance from Essex when the time comes.

WAKE UP!

In many respects the administrations of Mayor Smalley have been marked by a spirit of progressiveness. The material interests of the borough have been considerably advanced under the guidance of himself and a number of efficient councilmen. Take for instance the improvements made on Somerset street, including the storm sewer, and the renovating of other thoroughfares. These have demonstrated that the present administration is generally alive to the interests of the taxpayers.

Recently, however, several propositions of importance have not received the attention they deserve. Committees appointed in a number of matters, which have come before the councilmanic body, have been dilatory. There's the sewerage question. A long time ago a committee of citizens was delegated to investigate the subject and report upon the feasibility of introducing such a system in the central part of the borough. Practically nothing has been accomplished. Nothing has been done, unless it be that two members of the committee have tendered their resignations and one vacancy has been filled. What the prospects are for an early and satisfactory report, is a matter of conjecture.

Again the progress made by the committee on municipal ownership may well be cited as a case in point. For a time it appeared that the members meant business, but months have passed and the fruit of their labors is summed up in the customary report, made at the council meetings from time to time. This has been "progress," nothing more. Still another example is the matter of a building line ordinance. The proper committee was entrusted to frame a suitable ordinance. Delay has characterized its record. This has also been the case with the proposition to establish a fire line; that is, a limit where the erection of frame structures is prohibited. The aim of these proposed ordinances is for the welfare of the community. The interests of the citizens may be conserved by prompt action on the part of those entrusted with the work. Wake up!

AN ENJOYABLE ENTERTAINMENT

A LARGE CROWD APPRECIATED AFFAIR AT Y. M. C. A.

Lovett's Boston Stars Was the Attraction, in Regular Course, Last Monday.

A large crowd, which completely filled the place, thoroughly enjoyed the entertainment given by Lovett's Boston Stars, at the Y. M. C. A. last Monday. The affair was one of the series in the Star course, and proved to be a happy feature.

Probably the feature of the programme was the clever comic recitations of Frank Reynolds, a general favorite. His Ex-Toll Tales were specially laughable. In one of these he told of the man who wanted to be president, and could not tell his policy until each member of his family told what a chief executive of the Nation should do. When it finally became the turn of the head of the household to say what he would do, he declared that he would resign forthwith. It was an amusing number. Mr. Reynolds' selection, Charlestown, Mass., was also a funny piece.

Miss Emma Denham, as a violinist, won much applause, particularly by her rendition of the Hungarian Rhapsody. The charming soprano contributions of Miss Alice Mailyn received a warm reception, as did also the recitation of Miss Georgia Harvey.

As a concluding number the comedietta, the Interview, was rendered and it provoked tumultuous applause. In this sketch were Miss Harvey, Miss Natalie Norris, Martin Grange and Mr. Reynolds.

LITERARY.

The February issue of The Ladies' Home Journal opens with the first part of Miss Porter's new romance of the south, "Those Days in Old Virginia," illustrated by W. L. Taylor. This is followed by Joseph Blethen's story of "The Girls of Flat G," a tale of four girls who established "bachelors' hall." A most interesting and timely contribution is "My Impressions of American Women," by His Excellency, Wu Ting-fang, Chinese Minister to the United States. For the children are "The Journal's Puzzle-School," a new game, and a description of how to make "smoke pictures." The Valentine cover is by Henry Hutt; and the pictorial features include a page of most attractive pictures of dogs, and a double page showing "The College Girl in Music and Drama." By the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

Frank Leslie's popular monthly for February is advertised as "an old name, but a new magazine," and nothing could be more literally true. From the first page to the last the magazine is thoroughly modern, and both in the character of its reading matter and of its illustrations, printed in colors and in black and white, it is in the running with the most expensive magazines. The opening article, called "The City's Edge," is a very human account of the life along the water front of New York City.

The fiction in the number is plentiful, and really first rate. Onoto Watanna's story, "A Pot of Paint," is, as she says herself, the very best thing she has done. Robert Barr, Carolyn Wells, W. B. MacHarg, and several other story-tellers of note, fill up the good measure of short fiction in this number, while this number, unhappily, sees the last of Maurice Hewlett's stories, "The Fond Adventure," which has been running since last November.

Among the things of note in the February magazine number of The Outlook, may be mentioned: A beautifully illustrated article by George Cram Cook (now acting as The Outlook's, Washington representative) on the proposal for enlarging the White House, with architects plans; an article on Vereschagin by Charles De-Kay, of the National Arts Club, with reproductions of famous paintings; a portrait of President-elect Palma, of Cuba, taken by The Outlook's own photographer; "The Centenary of Victor Hugo," by Kenyon West, with portrait; "The Story of Home Gardens" (illustrated decoratively) which describes an interesting movement in Cleveland; Dr. Edward Everett Hale's "Memories of a Hundred Years," which deals this month chiefly with the war of 1812; a remarkable whole-page portrait of Archbishop Ireland; an article appropriate to Washington's Birthday, called "In the Footsteps of Washington," by Charles Hemstreet; together with the usual book reviews, history of the week, and editorial comments on important questions of the day.

The publishers of "The American Boy," have secured from Will Levington Comfort, who was the youngest newspaper correspondent in the Philippines at the time of the death of General Lawton, an exciting story based upon facts relating the experiences of the youngest correspondent in General Lawton's army. The hero of the story was the first of the new paper correspondents to cable to America the news of the death of General Lawton at the hands of the insurgents. By an almost superhuman effort the boy correspondent, who was with the army at the time of the shooting, made his way through the enemy's country to the cable office and flashed the news to America three hours before the other correspondents got possession of the cable. It was a notable achievement on the part of a boy. The story begins in the February number of "The American Boy."

Scribner's Magazine for February contains discussions of the greatest material importance; short fiction by clever writers, beautifully illustrated; several art articles; an instalment of F. Hopkinson Smith's serial of artist life in New York; and poems by Winston Churchill, Edith Wharton and others. There are four short stories in this number. Henry James returns to the field in which he as won his best success—the contrast of a certain type of American girl with a phase of the old civilisation of England. "Flickerbridge" is delighted in its satire and play of humor—with unusual characters. A new writer of short stories appears in this number. "Crowned with Glory and Honor" is written by Mary R. S. Andrews. It is a pathetic sketch of a young West Pointer's romance. Cyrus Townsend Brady, who as archdeacon of Kansas witnessed one of the rushes of settlers into Oklahoma, tells a most dramatic tale, with the "rush" as a main incident. Christy illustrates it. Francis Lynd contributes a railroad story illustrated by E. B. Child.

McClure's Magazine for February is one of the best all-around numbers its editors have got out The timeliness of the articles, their range of subject and the variety of short stories make it possible to read the number from cover to cover without monotony.

Two articles stand out for special notice as among the most opportune and readable magazine articles for the month—"Marconi's Achievement," by Ray Stannard Baker, and "Grover Cleveland," by William Allen White.

An article of much importance is Sir Harry Johnston's account of the pygmies of the great Congo Forest.

"Roberts Peary and His Campaign for the Pole" furnishes the subject for a capital article by Stargis B. Rand, which is fully illustrated by photographs at Peary's summer camp at Cape Sabine. A splendid account is given of Peary's famous "white march" across Greenland by which was first established the insularity of that great frozen land.

The short stories are so good that it is hard to pick out any one for first mention. For every story the right illustrator seems to have been chosen.

In this number also is concluded Stewart Edward White's serial, "The Forest Runner."

THEATRICAL.

Proctor's, Newark, is open. There is not in all America a handsomer vaudeville theatre than this. Opened to the public on Jan. 6, the attendance has been phenomenally big ever since. The interior is done in refined vaudeville fashion by theatre-goers perverts that Proctor's fills a long felt want.

"Hon. John Grigsby," which was the last play presented by Sol Smith Russell, and in which he was succeeded by Frank Keenan, will have its first New York production at the Manhattan Theatre this evening, following the season of Mrs. Fiske, who goes on the road in repertoire. The fact that Mr. Keenan has been chosen from a large number of applicants for "time" at this theatre may be considered highly complimentary, since the policy of the house is to present only high class American attractions. Mr. Keenan has been very successful throughout the country, and will make a special production of "The Hon. John Grigsby" for his metropolitan stellar debut.

A programme which commands immediate attention, and challenges comparison, has been prepared for next week at Keith's Theatre, New York. The motto of the theatre, "The best show in town," but feebly expresses the magnitude of such a collection of famous vaudeville stars. Every artist of vaudeville who can boast of the distinction of being under contract to appear at Keith's, is undoubtedly the recognized peer in his particular line of amusement, and it is a fact that such a contract is the medal of superiority among the artists. Next week the great Rudinoff, distinguished entertainer, who has appeared before all the Royalty of Europe, will offer his novel performance, including artistic smoke pictures, bird imitations, and his wonderful Finger Shadows. Lillian Burkhart and her excellent company also appear; and R. J. Jose, the famous contra tenor, supported by fifty voices, will offer a grand revival of the popular "Song Sheet." The other stars include the three Dumonds, French musical grotesques; the famous Valdis sisters; Fred Niblo, the star of monologue; the Gullaw trio; Joe Maxwell & Co.; Colville and Mc Birdie; Kleist Bros.; Dolan and Willard; Collins and Hardt, and the wonderful Biograph. CLERGYMAN ASSAILS HIGHER CRITICISM

Rev. Mr. Richardson Declares Bible Is An Inspired Book.

AN ABLE ARGUMENT.

RELIES ON BIBLICAL QUOTATIONS TO PROVE HIS STATEMENTS.

Utterances of Prophets Inspired by Christ—Says Theories of Critics Are a Slander Against God's Wisdom.

The theologians called "higher critics" were attacked Sunday morning by Rev. J. W. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church. At the morning service his subject was "An Inspired Bible Against the Higher Critics."

The speaker took for a text Isaiah XLI, 8—The Word of our Lord shall stand forever. He said in the course of his remarks: "The man who asserts that the Scriptures merely contain the Word of God, juggles with phrases, and suffers from literary hysteria. We claim that all the Scriptures are inspired of God, and from His Word. Jesus Christ supervised the construction of that Word. True He did not inspire Ahab to use the impious language he did; but the Lord did inspire the sacred writer to select such portions of Ahab's language, which the Lord wished to use as a basis for conveying correction to the world. Inspiration either directed the speaker what to say; or the writer what to write. He directed the historian to select portions from the language of others; also what scene to describe, a topic to treat.

"In the first five books, this significant phrase 'The Lord spake unto Moses,' occurs 560 times; in the 12 historical books the phrase 'The Lord said,' or its equivalent, occurs 200 times; in the 17 peophetical books the phrase 'Hear the Word of the Lord,' or kindred expressions, occurs 1,300 times. 1,900 times is the reader of the Old Testament reminded, that it is God's Word he is reading. Yet, in the face of these facts, the higher critics tell us, that the Scriptures are not any more inspired, than Shakespear or Milton. The facts are against the vagaries of the critics. The Apostle Peter settles this whole question of 'inspiration,' also the kind. In I Peter ii 1n says, 'The prophets made a most earnest search, what time, or manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did point unto, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glories that should follow them.' Peter teaches that Christ was in the world inspiring the prophets what to say and write, ages before He came in the flesh.

"It was Christ who gave the prophet visions of coming history. He gave them insight into 'truth.' It was He, who inspired the Apostles of the New Testament how to preach the gospel, based on the Old Testament prophecies; so in the New Testament there are 830 quotations from the Old Testament. Peter teaches that the utterances of the prophets were the utterances of Christ. The prophets knew the difference between their own thoughts and the thoughts Jesus placed in their minds to utter. So the prophets inquired diligently what those communicated thoughts meant. Those men wrote under the supernatural influence; and according to Peter, they understood they were so writing. This statement of Peter settles the question of Inspiration. The spirit of living and everlasting Christ, supervised the creation of the Holy Scriptures. The notions and theories of the Higher Critics are a slander against God's wisdom and creative ability. 'These men are too presumptive for safety, and too visionary for reliability."

WILL NOT SPRINKLE STREETS

CITY STREET COMMITTEE WILL NOT ACT FOR THE PRESENT.

Will Delay Action So As Not to Increase the Tax Rate at Present.

After the special meeting of the Common Council last Monday, Chairman Tolles, of the street committee, called the members of his committee together to discuss still further the question of street sprinkling by the city. The committee has already had several meetings to consider this subject, but little progress is made each time. At Monday's meeting of the committee it was believed, after a discussion, that it would not be practical to attempt to sprinkle. There was no definite decision to this effect, but it seemed to be the general opinion of all.

If the city decides to do this work it will mean an increase in the tax rate. The members do not want to make this increase, especially as the Board of Health will require and must have money this year on account of the extra expense attendant upon the outbreak of small-pox and free vaccination. As previously stated, if the committee can see its way clear to advise sprinkling by the city at a rate that is reasonable, this will be done, otherwise the report will be adverse. The committee, it is said, is not in doubt as to the wisdom of such work being performed by the city, believing that in the end it would mean a saving in the wear and tear on the macadam streets, but it is not willing to recommend such action when the expense is likely to be such that will prove a burden to the tax-payers generally.

JOHN RADLEY MARSH DIED MONDAY MORNING

Wealthy Resident of Scotch Plains Known Throughout County.

ILL BUT A SHORT TIME.

BUILT UP A BIG TRADE IN THE BEEF BUSINESS.

Leaves a Wife, Two Sons and a Daughter—Funeral to be Held This Afternoon at 2:30 o'Clock.

John Radley Marsh, one of Scotch Plains' oldest citizens and numbered among the wealthiest men of Union county, died at his home there at 2 o'clock Monday morning. He was taken ill one week ago Saturday and despite medical skill of the highest order furnished by Drs. Hedges and Probasco, of this city, and Dr. Westcott, of Fanwood, continued to sink rapidly. Death was due to pneumonia and heart trouble.

The deceased was the son of Nathan and Hannah Marsh and was born at Willow Grove in 1822. Soon after he moved to Scotch Plains and with the exception of six years at Newark always lived there. When a very young man he engaged in the wholesale and retail meat business and not having to compete with the modern western packing houses, he prospered rapidly. His business reached such proportions that at one time he supplied this section, for miles in every direction, with dressed beef and provisions. With the introduction of western beef and its transportation east in refrigerator cars his wholesale trade declined until he gave it up entirely.

He had amassed a fortune at the business but still continued to cater to the retail trade, personally caring for a route through the country. He drove his wagon summer and winter through all sorts and conditions of weather and was in his accustomed seat the day before he was taken ill.

In addition to his meat business he had many real estate dealings and loaned out large sums taking property in security. He was generally very shrewd in these matters but one year he lost $35,000 through depreciation of land on which he was compelled to foreclose mortgages. Most of his holdings are located in Union, Somerset and Middlesex counties. The fortune accummulated by him is variously estimated at from $250,000 to half a million, although it is a matter of conjecture as not even his family knows.

Mr. Marsh leaves a wife and two sons, George and John Marsh, of Scotch Plains, one daughter, Mrs. Albert Darby, of this city, a brother, Lyons Marsh, of Scotch Plains and one sister, Mrs. Lewis P. Clark, of Bound Brook.

The funeral services will be held from his late residence, this afternoon, at 2:30.

A Profitable Investment.

"I was troubled for about seven years with my stomach and in bed half my time," says E. Demick, Somerville, Ind. "I spent about $1,000 and never could get anything to help me until I tried Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I have taken a few bottles and am entirely well." You don't live by what you eat, but by what you digest and assimilate. If your stomach doesn't digest your food you are really starving. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure does the stomach's work by digesting the food. You don't have to diet. Eat all you want. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cures all stomach troubles. L. W. Randolph.

NO ACTION YET TAKEN CONCERNING OFFICES

Adjournment of City Fathers Without Deciding Matter of Change.

OFFER OF THE SMALLEY'S

MORE DEFINITE PROPOSITION IS AT PRESENT DESIRED.

Outline of Offer Made—Question to be Settled at the Regular February Meeting of the Common Council.

It was expected that the question of changing the location of the city offices would be definitely determined at the special meeting of the Common Council last Monday. When it was learned that the finance committee, to whom both propositions, one from J. B. Coward, the present landlord, and Smalley Brothers, the prospective ones, was ready to report, it was believed that the question would be settled, but such was not the case.

It is confidently believed by many that the Council will move to the Smalley building, and that it is only a question of a short time when a vote will make the change, but in the absence of Chairman George P. Mellick, of the finance committee, who is in the west, no vote was taken. Councilman Leslie M. Daniel stated that he expected Mr. Mellick home in time for the meeting, but had received word from him that the proposition of Smalley Brothers would be received and that action could be taken. Mr. Daniel stated further that the proposition did not arrive and late Saturday night he called at Smalley Brothers place of business and received it. This he presented to the Council.

By the proposition Smalley Brothers offer the city for one year with the privilege of a renewal for a term of years, the easterly store room in their building located on the ground floor, for the city offices, and promise to erect a vault for the safe keeping of the city's documents and books. They also agree to install such fixtures as are necessary to divide the same into offices. They offer the third floor for the Council room, furnished with proper desks, revolving chairs and also rooms for the use of committees. The rental for this room is $1,000 a year. If the Council want room No. 1, on the second floor, for the use of the Mayor, this will be rented for $100 additional.

After the reading of the proposition it was referred to the finance committee. Then Mr. Tolles moved that Council take a recess for a time to consider the matter. The members were only out a short time, when they returned and Mr. Daniel offered a report of progress. A motion to adjourn was offered and the meeting came to an abrupt end.

It was learned after the meeting that the reason for deferring the matter was that the proposition was not in the shape desired by the members. They want a more definite proposition. So far can be learned there is not much opposition to the proposed change. The question will be brought up next Monday evening at the regular February meeting, when in all probability a decision will be made.

The only members absent from last night's meeting were Councilmen van Herwerden and Mellick.

WRONGED HUSBAND CATCHES ELOPERS

Perfidious Man Arrested Here With His Friend's Wife.

HEARING IN CITY COURT

HUSBAND RELENTS AND WIFE RETURNS HOME.

City Judge Runyon in Scathing Terms Arraigns the Man Who Betrayed Friendship—Parties Came From Somerville.

An angry and deceived husband, an erring wife begging for forgiveness and a perfidious friend were the dramatis personae in a one-act drama at police headquarters, Sunday afternoon. But for the intervention of the police it might have terminated in a tragedy.

The principals were Andrew Paff, Jr., of Somerville, his wife and his hitherto regarded friend, Albert Matthews, of the same place. Taking advantage of the husband's absence at business, Matthews installed himself in the household and gained the good graces of Mrs. Paff to such an extent that Saturday afternoon she consented to elope with him. They were arrested early Sunday morning at the North avenue station as they were about to depart for New York. Both spent the rest of the night in cells at the police station, and were later arraigned before City Judge Runyon. The husband weakened, however, and they were allowed to depart.

According to Paff's version of the affair, his wife secured his consent Saturday to visit relatives at Cranford. Although he had no previous reasons for believing so, he conceived the idea that she was deceiving him, and resolved to follow her. He traced her to this city where he found she had come instead of Cranford but then lost the trail. Becoming convinced that something was wrong he visited the Plainfield hotel and on looking over the register found the entry "Mr. and Mrs. Hill and wife, of Trenton," in writing he at once recognized as that of his friend, Albert Matthews. He at first thought of accusing the pair at the hostelry, but wishing to avoid a scene, he informed the police and asked that they be arrested. He then returned to his home in order to avoid trouble if he came in contact with Matthews.

In the meantime someone had informed "Mr. Hill" that an angry husband was below and he immediately departed by a rear door to the North avenue station where he purchased the New York tickets. Returning he secured his companion with the intention of taking the 2:14 train. They were placed under arrest by Sergeant Fredericksen as they were about to step aboard the cars.

Paff was communicated with and was present when the pair were arraigned. Matthews gras in abject fear of his meeting with the husband and trembled like an aspen leaf. He asked the police to protect him as he feared Paff would not stop anything short of killing him.

Both defendants admitted their guilt and asked to be forgiven. Paff relented at the last moment and stated he would not prosecute Matthews, provided he remain away forever from Somerville and that his wife return home with him. He declared openly that if Matthews came near him again, he would have to suffer the consequences.

There was nothing to do but dismiss the case, but before this was done the court rebuked Matthews and the erring wife in the most scathing terms. Both felt their position keenly and appeared greaty crestfallen.

The Paffs have been married eighteen years and have three children the eldest being fifteen. Mrs. Paff is thirty-four years old and fairly good looking. Matthews is small of stature and his appearance is anything but the kind that would seek to attract feminine hearts.

Narrow Escape.

While the 8:34 train from this city was passing through the Fanwood cut, Saturday morning, a tramp, who was platly seen standing on the embankment, hurled a large stone through one of the car windows. It knocked the hat from a Somerville commuter and then fell in the lap of Lawyer I. P. Runyon, of this city. The former was cut by flying glass but Mr. Runyon escaped injury. No attempt was made to capture the tramp.

Operatic Production.

The opera of "Patience" by Gilbert & Sullivan will be given in this city in April with a chorus of thirty and the following soloists: Sopranos, Mrs. Robert Giddes and Miss Etta Raybert; contralto, Mrs. F. M. Ward, Mrs. C. M. Ross and Miss Grace Phillips; tenors, George H. Smith and William J. Tallamy; baritones, Fred R. Pope and William Holmes; bass, Raymond McGee.

MINISTER BOWEN MARRIES

WEDDING HELD AT POST OF DUTY IN CARACAS.

Brother of Herbert E. Bowen, of Watchung Avenue—Nieces From Plainfield at Function.

The marriage of Herbert W. Bowen, United States Minister to Venezuela, and brother of Henry E. Bowen, of Watchung avenue, to Miss Carolyn Clegg, of Galveston, Texas, took place last Friday at Caracas. Miss Clegg, accompanied by the Misses Edna and Marion Bowen, nieces of the groom, who live in this city, sailed for Caracas on November 30, for the purpose of spending the winter at that place. Mr. Bowen's friends in Brooklyn did not know that he contemplated a second marriage. He has been acquainted with his bride for many years.

Mr. Bowen is a son of the late Henry C. Bowen, who was for years one of Brooklyn's most prominent citizens. He was appointed Counsel to Barcelona, in 1890, by President Harrison, and President Cleveland promoted him to the rank of Consul-General.

He distinguished himself by defending the Consulate from a mob during the Spanish-American war.

He subsequently became Minister Resident and Consul-General in Persia. Last year was appointed to his present office by President McKinley. Mr. Bowen was born in Brooklyn and was prominent in athletic circles in that city for many years. He is 6 feet 2 inches tall. His mother is living at the old homestead at 90 Willow street, Brooklyn.

Mr. Bowen's first wife was Miss Augusta Floyd Vinges. They lived together some years and had one child, a son. They finally separated and Mrs. Bowen and her child went to live at Newport, R. I., where she secured a divorce from him in April last on the ground of desertion.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

BOROUGH SCHOOLS ARE MUCH OVERCROWDED

School Board Tried to Make Temporary Arrangement to Relieve Existing Condition.

HAVE DIVIDED A CLASS.

ONE HALF TO BE TAUGHT IN MORNING AND OTHER IN AFTERNOON.

Superintendent Wightman Will Make the Arrangements for Temporary Quarters—Committee Couldn't Find Any.

Lack of sufficient accommodations for the pupils of the borough schools has given rise to an intricate problem, which formed a topic for solution at meeting of the North Plainfield Shcool Board, held last Monday. No satisfactory decision was arrived at but, in its place, a temporary arrangement was made.

It appeared to be the unanimous opinion of the members of the educational body that the time is rapidly approaching when permanent quarters will have to be secured as the increase in the number of pupils has passed all expectations. It was pointed out that there is absolutely no available space in the Somerset street school building for the seventh year grammar grade. Many pupils are in a position to be advanced but the room for their use is wanting.

Dr. H. H. Cooley, chairman of the buildings committee, reported that after a thorough search none could be found to answer the purpose. The committee had considered a number of places with the result that some were not suited as school rooms while others would not answer the sanitary requirements. The only relief could be found in erecting a new building but this was not touched upon seriously.

It was finally agreed that the superintendent of schools, Homer J. Wightman, be instructed to make such temporary arrangements as he should see fit, while the board continue its labors. The class, which can not be accommodated satisfactorily, numbers seventy pupils. For the present, it will be sub-divided, one section receiving instruction in the morning and the other in the afternoon. The hours for the first section of thirty-five will be from 8:30 until 12:30 o'clock in the morning and for the second section from 1 until 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

This will mean increased work. In order not to overtax the present teaching corps an additional teacher was selected. The appointee is Miss Mary Yoran, who was graduated from the classical department of the Cortlandt Normal School several years ago. She has been an instructor in the Herkimer, New York, schools for the last three years. Miss Yoran will have charge of the afternoon class.

Miss Beadle Ross, of Bound Brook, is the guest of Miss Estelle Brooks, of Duer street.

BALTIMORE, Md., March 30, 1901.

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case: It is the kind at your discretion to use. About five years ago my right ear began to sing, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in this ear entirely.

I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the oldest one here in the specialist of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.

I then met a gentleman accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours,

LARGE WEDDING HELD AT SOUTH PLAINFIELD

Miss Lenwilla I. Faulks Was Wedded to Harry I. Tappen, of Newark.

HELD AT BRIDE'S HOME.

PRETTY BRIDAL PARTY ASSISTED IN THE CEREMONY.

Was One of The Social Events of the Season at South Plainfield — Ceremony Performed by Rev. J. A. Cubberley.

Miss Lenwilla Irene Faulks, daughter Mr. and Mrs. William Faulks, of of Maple avenue, South Plainfield, and Harry Irving Tappen, of Newark, were married at the home of the bride Wednesday evening, Jan. 22, before a large assemblage of friends from Elizabeth, Tarrytown, Franklin Park, Shelton, Freehold, Plainfield and that town. It was a brilliant nuptial function and one of the most important events of the season in the social life of that place.

The interior of the old and quaint homestead was decorated with Christmas greens and potted plants and palms. Bows of white ribbon judiciously distributed here and there added to the pleasing effect. The tables were trimmed with pink carnations.

It was precisely at 7 o'clock when Miss Hazel Myers, of Elizabeth, a cousin of the bride, commenced the opening strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin." At that moment the bridal party entered the parlor where the clergyman was awaiting to pronounce the solemn words of marriage.

The ushers came first. They were Frank K. Faulks, the bride's brother, Harry J. Manning, Earl Myers, of Elizabeth, and Fred N. Manning. Preceding the bride, who was accompanied by her father, William E. Faulks, was the maid-of-honor, Miss Emma C. Faulks, the sister of the bride.

At a spot designated by a rug, the groom and his best man, joined the bridal party and the nuptial ceremony was performed. Rev. J. A. Cubberley, pastor of the First Baptist church of which the bride is an active member, was the officiating clergyman.

After Mr. and Mrs. Tappen had received the hearty congratulations of the guests a wedding supper was served, soon after which they departed for a destination that was kept a profound secret. For favors dainty boxes of wedding cake were given.

The bride was gowned in white silk trimmed with point d'esprit lace. She carried a bouquet of bridal roses. Her veil of tulle was caught up with a spray of smilax.

The maid-of-honor, Miss Emma C. Faulks, was gowned in white organdie trimmed with cream lace. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses, tied with white ribbon. Pink roses were the boutinnieres of the ushers. The flower girls, who were Miss Marion Bigley and Miss Marion Faulks, were neatly attired in white, trimmed with blue.

At the conclusion of their short honeymoon trip, Mr. and Mrs. Tappen will repair to their new home at 34 Vanderpool street, Newark, where the groom will resume his duties as clerk with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

The guests present were Mr. and Mrs. David Bigley, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Thorn, Miss Gladys Thorn, Howard Soodon, Mrs. Reune B. Manning, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Manning, Miss Nellie Manning, Mr. and Mrs. David Randolph, Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Cubberley, and Jas. H. Cubberley, of South Plainfield; Miss C. Maud Uhler, of Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Myers, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Myers, Mrs. P. V. Servis, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Faulks, Wilfred Faulks, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Myers, Earl Myers, Mrs. Samuel Estelle, the Misses Hettie and Viola Stell and Isaac Faulks, all of Elizabeth; Jas. and Mrs. Ira VanArsdale, of Bound Brook; Miss Clara E. Ward, of Verona, N. ICE PLANT SHUT DOWN.

Hygeia Ice Company Has Stocked its House for the Present.

The Hygeia Ice Company plant was shut down the first of this month for a few weeks. The ice houses are well stocked with ice sufficient to meet the present demand. It is expected that by the first of March the work of making ice will be resumed. There is a steady increase in the demand for this ice, as the people are learning that it is the only absolutely pure ice that can be used for drinking purposes.

OLD NEW YORK TRICKS.

Case of Diamond Cut Diamond on an Arizona Stage—How He Lost and Regained His Seat.

There is at least one old-fashioned stage line in Arizona, a memorial of frontier days, says a writer in the New York Press. "I made a trip out there the other day," says one of our fellow citizens who is interested in great lumbering operations in the Flagstaff territory, "and found the ride on the coach a rare treat. To the front seat there was room for three. The driver sat on the right, I on the left, and a stranger in between. The latter began to look uneasy after we had gone about 15 miles, and finally whispered to me: 'I am afraid I am about to be sick, sir; would you exchange places with me for a moment?' I could not make the exchange too quickly.

"The seat in the middle was a tight squeeze, but I patiently submitted. Five miles passed, ten, twenty, forty, an hour. Not a sign from my friend. He seemed to be enjoying the scenery. I said at last: 'I understood you to say that you felt sick.'

"'Yes, quite true; I had a decided feeling of nausea. But the air out here appears to agree with me, and the feeling has passed off.'

"'Then you will give me back my seat.'

"'Oh, not at all. This is an old trick I learned in New York; get anything you can in any way you can, and hold on to it.'

"I gave him a sudden push that keeled him over by the roadside, remarking, as I put my hand on my pistol: 'That's an old trick I learned in New York in the free school for hogs.'

"He got up, brushed the dust off, and entered the coach in silence."

SEA SERPENT VINDICATED.

Official Report of Monster One Hundred Feet Long Is Recorded in the Government Archives.

After being the subject for many years of uncertainty, doubt, and even downright disbelief, the sea serpent has been vindicated officially and evidence of his reality recorded in the government archives at Washington. In a report to the hydrographic office of the navy department Henry H. Nelligan, one of the regular observers of marine events designated by the chief hydrographer, officially puts on file the existence of one of these monsters of the deep. Mr. Nelligan's report was mailed in Liverpool, where he arrived November 30, on the Prada. The serpent was seen while the Prada was on his last trip from Galveston to Liverpool, and he was 100 feet long. Mr. Nelligan thus describes the monster: "The head of the serpent had a blunt, square nose and was ejecting water to the height of two or three feet from its nostrils. The animal's fish had three distinct sets of fins and a tail lying across like a porpoise. On its back was a series of humps like a camel." The latitude and longitude observed by Mr. Nelligan is in the Gulf of Mexico, about 120 miles southwest of the mouth of the Mississippi. Neligan's responsibility is vouched for by the officers of the hydrographic office.

DIFFERENCES IN FOGS.

Sea Mist and London Gloom Have Nothing in Common—The Word Traced Back.

The fog of London and the fog of the sea alike discompose traffic, and omnibusers and steamships alike have had to lay to for safety. But while the London fog gets into your inmost room and baffles even the electric light (though the electric cure is triumphant, curiously), the densest fog at sea does not disturb the saloon or the stateroom. Why is that?

The word "fog," says the New York Commercial Advertiser, has not been traced further back than the fourteenth century, but the thing was known in the early years of the fourteenth. The commons, with the prelates and nobles visiting London for the parliaments and on other occasions, united to petition Edward I. to compel the burning only of dry wood and charcoal, as the growing use of sea coal corrupted the air with its stink and smoke, to the great prejudice and detriment of health. In 1306 a royal proclamation the use of coal; heavy ransom and fines were inflicted for disobedience; in the case of recalcitrant brewers, dyers and other artificers the furnaces and kilns were destroyed. But the restriction was evidently presently relaxed, for in 1350 ($250 (probably equal to $4,000 now) was paid from the exchequer for wood and coal for the coronation of Edward II.

The Force of Habit.

An amusing instance of force of habit is reported in England. A lady walking in the country with a brother lately returned from the front was greatly alarmed at the sound of blasting from a neighboring quarry, but at her brother's falling flat to the ground at the instant. She, of course, assumed that he had been injured, but it soon came out that he had been in the habit, for months, by order, of prostrating himself on the veldt at the sound of a gun. Mechanical obedience of this kind has been effectively utilized in the case of suspected deserters. An abrupt shout of "Halt" brings any man who was lately in the ranks to a sudden standstill.

Insurance in Germany.

The Germans are a cautious people. There are 17,000,000 people insured in the empire.

Use of Cotton Goods.

The world uses $500,000,000 worth of cotton goods in a year. Of this Great Britain manufactures 56 per cent.

WHAT IT COST TO HAVE NEW GOVERNOR

Estimated That Inaugural Ceremonies of the Governor Will Cost $10,000.

THE JOINT COMMITTEE.

LARGEST ITEM IS THE COST OF CARING FOR THE TROOPS.

White Transportation and Subsistence Were Furnished, the Troops Will Receive No Pay —Other Items of Expense.

While the bills have not yet all been received, it is estimated by the joint committee of arrangements from the Legislature that the inauguration of Governor Franklin Murphy will cost the State about $10,000. The joint committee consists of Senators Elijah C. Hutchinson, of Mercer, Charles A. Reed, of Somerset, and Lewis J. Martin, of Essex, and Assemblymen Harry B. Leavitt, of Mercer, Ephraim T. Gill, of Camden, Edward E. Gutchell, of Essex, Somers T. Champion, of Monmouth, and John A. Dennin, of Hudson.

The largest item of expense was the transportation and subsistence of the troops. Quartermaster-General Richard A. Donnelly says this will foot up to about $6,500. Other items of expense were the decorations, luncheon for distinguished guests, carriage hire, music, the erection of the reviewing stand, pay of detectives and a mass of petty outlays for messenger hire, and the like.

To guard against pickpockets at the Governor's reception at the State House Tuesday afternoon and night, fifty special detectives were on duty, circulating through the crowd. Some of the detectives were from New York, some from Philadelphia, and the rest represented Jersey City, Newark, Paterson and all the large cities and towns of New Jersey.

The detectives were engaged from all the neighboring cities for the reason that each set would be able to recognize and checkmate notorious crooks from its own town.

The reviewing stand in front of the State House was a pine structure, 80 by 120 feet in dimensions, with a seating capacity for 800 persons. It was the largest ever built for an inaugural review.

The members of the National Guard received no pay for taking part in the inauguration. It was a voluntary turnout on their part.

At the obsequies of the late Gen. Sewell the soldiers who attended in uniform received a day's pay, having been called out by Brig.-Gen. Wanser, with the approval of the Governor.

The pay for soldiers on such occasions is $1.50 a day, and the officers, according to rank, receive from $2.50 per day for a lieutenant up to $5 for a colonel.

HE RECITED FAMOUS WORKS

ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN AT REFORM HALL BY RICHARD FOOTE.

Tragedian From California Gave Recital for the Local School Children.

Richard Foote, a tragedian from California, gave a free entertainment in the form of a recital at Reform Hall, Jan. 22. The affair was tendered to the pupils of the city and borough schools, and was well attended.

It was called a Shakespearean recital, but notwithstanding that fact the programme was made up to some extent from other sources. In opening he made a short address on the use of elocutionary training, and had something to say of his career as a speaker and actor.

Hamlet's advice to the player and also his soliloquy on death were rendered in an able manner. This was followed by "The Seven Ages." Later in the evening he recited the trial scene from "The Merchant of Venice," and it served to show his ability.

Among the other pieces which engaged his attention and entertained the audience were Meredith's "Aux Italiens" and Poe's "Bells." He also gave several humorous selections. A feature of the evening was the singing of "Beyond the Gates of Paradise" by Miss Suzanne Kraus, Miss Margaret Hoffman acted as accompanist.

Don't Live Together.

Constipation and health never go together. DeWitt's Little Early Risers promote easy action of the bowels without distress. "I have been troubled with costiveness nine years," says J. O. Greene, Depauw, Ind. "I have tried many remedies but Little Early Risers give best results." L. W. Randolph.

MULTIPLICITY OF "FAKES."

This Writer Proposed International Exhibition of Bogus Articles.

Every collector has some things—pictures, books, ivories, enamels, caskets, guns, what not—which he in his heart suspects, and which his friends know, to be "fakes." There are even many "faked" charters, and autographs without number (especially of Burns) are as "fake" as the "Donation" Decretals. Could not America organize an international exhibition of "fakes?" It would be highly instructive, writes Andrew Lang, in the New York Independent. A single "fake" may deceive anybody, but an assortment of the same kind at once betrays itself. There is the famous old Greek crown, from the Chersonese, I think in French possession. German scholars say, think, or used to say, that it should be sent to this exhibition. The pictures would be numerous, if we trust accurate critics; for my part I do not —it is their profession to alter attributions of authorship. The works of Homer are a vast "fake," if we listen to critics.

Will public and private owners of collections contribute to this useful and original exhibition? Man's human vanity bars the way; people do not like to believe that they have been gulled. Yet what collection is free from imposture? Not one, I feel, and I will gladly exhibit my own forged twopenny treasures in the cause of humanity. I verily believe that there is a forged guinea of James II. and VII. on my watchchain at this moment. If not, his Majesty is the second. Therefore, Warned of these things, collectors ought to be very careful. I fear that I have put autograph collectors off with forged autographs of my own. But autograph collectors are out of fashion—happily, in general. Everything is fair against an autograph collector.

CARE OF WOUNDED SAILORS.

Their Position in Naval Battles Is a Matter of Grave Consideration.

The British Medical association was sitting at Cheltenham recently, and one day some very interesting facts were brought forward as to the position of the wounded in naval battles. Owing to the alterations in the structure of the ships, the old arrangements under which the wounded were at once carried down to the cockpit cannot be continued, and, on the opinion of Fleet Surgeon C. Kirker, the most humane course, now adopted both by the French and Japanese, is to leave the wounded sailors lie where they are until the action is over, and not to be spared to carry them down in ambulances, which it will take some mechanical skill to devise.

A light sleigh on runners of his own device is now being tested previous to approval by the Admiralty as safe on deck for a short time as elsewhere, and modern wounds do not cause dangerous loss of blood. It is essential, however, says the Spectator, that a ship of such size should have an operating room, which at present is not included in the accepted designs. It appears that the general health of sailors in warships is good, iron being much better than wood for sanitation, but some improvements are greatly required, and should be attended to by the admiralty at once.

WOMEN HAVE BEST OF IT.

Deference Shown the Feminine Sex in Transferring Salt Lake Street Car Passengers.

Women in Salt Lake City have a considerable advantage over the men when they come to patronize the street cars. In that town of Mormonism they have a system of street railway transfers which is hard to beat. The passenger who receives a transfer from a Salt Lake conductor is compelled to use it himself or throw it away.

Every ticket has printed on it, besides the usual hours and the names of intersecting lines, a row or seven small heads. Five of them are male heads, two are female. Of the male heads the first is a beardless face, the second bears a mustache, the third "mutton chop" whiskers, the fourth a chin beard and the fifth is fully bearded. Beneath the row are two plus signs, with a forty between and above the two plus signs is required to identify each passenger by punching one of the faces and one of the signs for age, the first plus being used for young men, the 40 for men of middle age and the final plus for elderly men.

Of the heads representing women one wears a hat and represents young women in general, and the other a bonnet, for matrons. With really rare delicacy, the question of age is not mentioned in regard to female passengers.

Struggles with English.

A Hindu baker's assistant in Bombay, on setting up in business for himself, bethought him of entering for the English community as well as for the native end. With this end in view he had the following notification painted over his doorway: "Rate Sur explicits respectful patronage. He is a first-class British loafer."

The Reign of the Cigar.

To-day smokers are numbered by millions, a fact to which the treasuries of most nations have to be devoutly thankful. It is estimated that 1,000,000 acres of land are devoted to the cultivation of tobacco. The world consumes each year 6,300,000,000 pounds, or 2,612,500 tons, worth £52,000,000.

THEATRICAL.

Those who have been wont to say "there is nothing new under the sun," have certainly never been to Keith's Theatre, New York. Novelty programmes are a feature to which the management lend their constant attention, and have thereby materially aided in placing the name "Keith" upon the pinnacle of vaudeville success. Week after week new faces are seen there, new acts are presented, the latest and most sensational are imported from Europe, and even the most blase theatre-goer has learned by experience that his epicurean tastes can always be gratified by their diversity of talent. Next week Keith's great bill of novelties is headed by the clever monologuist of fistiania, James J. Corbett, better known as "Gentleman Jim," whose success as an entertainer upon the vaudeville stage, has been of meteoric variety, and defies comparison. In his humorous descriptions of the many incidents of importance during his life in the prize ring; his moments of triumph which filled the whole world felt; his modest manner of speech, and a cultivated elocutionary delivery, have stamped him as the undisputed peer in that line. His *success in his new field, as a dress*suit entertainer of refined vaudeville, is a most pronounced evidence of Mr. Keith's encouragement of new artistic ability, and he has surrounded Corbett with a list of vaudeville stars of such magnitude as are seen only upon Keith's stage.

—Attention is called to the recommendation of Charles L. Lewis in the advertisement of the entertainment to be given Monday evening in the Y. M. C. A. Star Course.

Theatregoers of Newark are given further opportunity to enjoy the best features in vaudeville at Proctor's in the bill arranged for the fourth week of the season. Glancing at the list of entertainers one is readily convinced that all managerial promises are being redeemed as some of the very best acts in vaudeville are mentioned. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Milton Royle will be the topping features of next week's bill, presenting their clever little comedy, "Capt. Impudence." The Fifth Avenue will have Hoyt's "A Temperance Town" as the dramatic feature of its offering for next week. Edna Archer-Crawford and New Howard-Fowler will head the branch of the Proctor Stock Co. which will present the clever play, "Miss or Mrs" will be the comedy curtain raiser and the vaudeville which will be introduced between acts and before and after play will keep the entertainment continuous. Another strong comedy bill is provided for presentation at the Fifty-eighth Street in "Innocent as a Lamb," a comedy in which the late Roland Reed made one of his strongest successes. A specially selected branch of the Proctor Stock Co. will give the play and also interpret "Play M. Green's clever travesty "Sherlock Holmes." Continuous vaudeville remains the order of the day at the Twenty-third Street Theatre and some of the biggest bills ever known in New York vaudeville are presented weekly at this popular resort. For next week Mme. Herrmann, widow of Herrmann the Great, will be the feature, presenting her dainty specialty, "A Night in Japan." Special scenery, gorgeous costumes and elaborate electrical effects are prominent features in an exceedingly clever and entertaining act. The dramatic feature will be furnished by Milton and Dolly Hobles, who will present "Why Walker Reformed." "The Mysterious Mr. Bugle" goes up to Harlem, after a big week at the Fifth Avenue, and should serve to draw monster crowds to the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street.

"Florodora," the play that has broken all records in New York closes at the New York Theatre tonight. The success was so great that the Messrs. Sire concluded to put a new "Florodora" in the Winter Garden, and have made an agreement with Messrs. Fisher and Ryley, the proprietors of the production, whereby it will be given in the Winter Garden beginning Monday night, by the New York Winter Garden stock company. The company is one of the largest and best in the world and will present "Florodora," it is expected, better than ever. In the cast are Virginia Earle, who will be seen as "Dolores;" Thomas Q. Seabrooke as "Tweedlepunch," and the other star members in the various roles. New scenery has been prepared, new costumes made and the prettiest aggregation of young women ever seen, even in the original, will make up the sextette.

Don't Like the Ark.

Residents along Somerset street are complaining of the noise made by an old fashioned trolley car on that line. It is very antiquated in style, and presents an unsightly appearance, which reflects unfavorably on the borough, they declare.

Over Fifty Dollars Profit.

The turkey supper held at the house of Mr. VanCort, Oak Tree, last Thursday evening, has netted a trifle over $50 for Marcuscar chapel.

CEDAR BROOK TENNIS CLUB IS FLOURISHING

Annual Meeting Held Wednesday and Officers for the New Year Were Chosen.

THE CLUB HAS NO DEBT.

POSSESSES TWO COURTS WHICH ARE IN EXCELLENT CONDITION.

Another Meeting February 7, When Some Amendments to the Constitution Will be Introduced — Will Enlarge Membership.

Although only a year has passed since its organization, the Cedar Brook Tennis Club is now in flourishing condition. Its progress was revived at the annual meeting of the club, held at the residence of the president, J. Hervey Doane, of LaGrande avenue, Jan. 22.

The election of officers was held which resulted as follows: President, J. Hervey Doane; vice president and chairman of the tennis committee, Charles R. Morse; secretary, Alden E. Moore; treasurer, James A. Stafford. All the officers were re-elected except the secretary, Fred M. Letson, who will be unable to take any active part in the club's affairs this year on account of a change in business interests. The club is entirely free from debt and has a small balance in the treasury. The two courts on LaGrande avenue, near Richmond street, are in good condition and completely surrounded by wire screens. Last year the courts were graded and now will only require surface improvements to put them in fine condition. The membership of the club is full and there is a waiting list but the membership will probably be somewhat enlarged this spring. Five new applications were received.

An adjourned meeting will be held Friday evening, February 7, when a new constitution will be introduced. Charles B. Morse was appointed a committee to prepare it. It will provide for a board of governors to assume the management of the club under proper limitations. It will also provide dues for associate members and an age limit for active members.

WHY THEY VOTED NO.

Reasons for Action of Borough Councilmen on the Appropriation.

There has been some misunderstanding as to why Councilmen Lee and Northrop voted against the appropriation for free vaccination at the last meeting of the Borough Council. Both of these members, it has since been explained, acted from the standpoint that it would be best to have the advice of the Borough Counsel before doing anything in the matter. As Senator Reed was not present they desired to wait until such time as he would be able to say whether or not the body is empowered by law to make such appropriation.

Mr. Northrop was also of the opinion that the amount asked for should be itemized, in the interest of the taxpayers. Mr. Lee personally is not a believer in vaccination, but at the same time he declares that this would have no weight with him when acting in the interests of the borough.

MAY GIVE UP BANQUETS.

Series of Dinners to Agents of Prudential Co. May be Abolished.

The previous custom of the Prudential Insurance Company in giving a series of dinners every year to the district agents, is likely to be abolished this year. It is not the expense that has led to this decision, but it is realized by the superintendents, who are obliged to attend these functions, that it is quite a task to partake of so many dinners within a few weeks. While this is not known definitely to be the case for the coming year with the banquets, it is believed to be so. The banquets have always been a source of pleasure and benefit to the agents and has acted as an incentive to greater effort.

Garrett J. Powers to Wed.

Announcement is made of the approaching marriage of Garrett J. Powers, brother of John P. Powers, of Craig place, to Miss Lizzie Martin, daughter of F. H. Martin, of South Seventh street, Newark, N. J. The wedding will take place the first week in February. Miss Martin is a teacher in the Newark public schools. Her father is the superintendent of the Lister Agricultural and Chemical Works, of that place, and is well known among the business men of the State.

Glee Club Concert.

SKETCH OF JERSEY'S NEW U. S. SENATOR

Chosen by Republican Caucus, He Will Be Elected at Meeting Next Week.

ABOUT HIS PAST CAREER.

IS NOW PRESIDENT OF THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

What Part He Has Taken in State Politics—Has Large Financial Interests, Chiefly in Newark.

Here is a sketch of the man who has been chosen as candidate for United States Senator at the caucus of the Republican members of both houses of the Legislature. He will be elected at a joint session of the Legislature Tuesday:

John F. Dryden, president of The Prudential Insurance Company of

JOHN F. DRYDEN.

America, and a leading capitalist in banking, and other large enterprises, has his home in Newark. In person he is tall, spare, and well knit. In demeanor he is dignified, yet kindly and courteous. In mental ability he is equalled by few of the men who have attained, like him, great success in life, and few men are equal to the great burdens and responsibilities that Mr. Dryden has borne for years, and that he seems to bear lightly.

John F. Dryden is of old New England stock. He was born on August 7, 1839, at Farmington, Me., and was educated for the legal profession. His training in law has been of great use to him in his subsequent career. He was not very strong physically, and was of a retiring and studious disposition. At Yale University, where his parents sent him, he devoted himself closely to study, with the result of impairing his health, and by the advice of physicians he was compelled to give up his hopes of graduation and left the university.

The subject of insurance early engaged Mr. Dryden's attention, and he devoted his time to a study of its principles, mastering the theory of finance, the construction of tables, averages, percentages, compounds, futurities and scientific momentary economy. About 1865 he obtained a report on the subject of Industrial Insurance, submitted to the Massachusetts Legislature by Prof. Elizur Wright, the State Insurance Commissioner. It criticised the methods of the Prudential Assurance Company of London, England. Mr. Dryden procured all the reports of the company and analyzed them, and decided that the Insurance Commissioner was wrong. This gave him the idea of formulating an industrial insurance system for the United States. He submitted plans to some New England capitalists, but they were not received with favor.

In 1873 Mr. Dryden went to Newark, and interested such men as Noah F. Blanchard, William H. Murphy, father of Governor-elect Murphy; Horace Alling, Leslie D. Ward, and others. A bill was passed by the Legislature, and, in 1875, The Prudential Insurance Company of America was founded. From its inception Mr. Dryden was the soul and spirit of the enterprise. For several years he was secretary, and when Noah F. Blanchard, the president, retired, Mr. Dryden succeeded him.

The steady faith, the unconquerable will and indomitable energy of Mr. Dryden carried the company through several crises and overcame many formidable difficulties until the company became firmly planted and began its great growth. From the basement of the State Bank, the institution moved into the Kremlin building, and thence to the $2,000,000 stone structure at Broad and Bank streets, built by the company, which has recently been added to by other great and ornate buildings, making the finest single group of office buildings in the world.

Mr. Dryden was one of the founders of the Fidelity Trust Company, started fifteen years ago, which is about to increase its capital to $5,000,000 and to organize two or more banks into one large bank under its control.

He is largely interested in the North Jersey Street Railroad Company, and is one of the three owners of the Newark and South Orange line, a subsidiary company of the North Jersey system. These and other interests are, however, commonplace to him compared with his love for The Prudential, the great child of his creation, and his interest in its workings He is in close touch with the multitude of details of the vast system. In the construction of the office buildings he gave daily audiences to the architect, and worked on the plans and estimates with an interest that never flagged. His recreation is taken in a superb home at Bernardsville.

A Republican all his life, Mr. Dryden has taken an active interest in public affairs. In 1896 he was one of the New Jersey Republican electors, and served again in that capacity in 1900. When the term of United States Senator Smith expired, Mr. Dryden was put forward as a candidate for the seat, but he made no effort to attain it, and gave no encouragement to his friends. Engrossed with business affairs, he has shown no desire for public office, though always keenly alive to party interests. In the last campaign for governor he appeared at a public meeting in the Newark Auditorium, and made a brilliant speech in favor of the election of Franklin Murphy. To the party organization he has been a generous contributor. He is one of the State committee to raise a fund for a memorial to the late President William McKinley at Canton, Ohio, and he is a steady contributor to religious and charitable objects.

NO DANGER.

Chief Engineer Osgood Talks Regarding the Draw Bridge Over Newark Bay.

The practice of moving trains slowly on the Newark bay drawbridge has made many people anxious for fear there is something wrong with the structure. No repairing is being done and this fact tended to add to the alarm.

Chief Engineer Osgood, of the New Jersey Central, says in regard to this:

"People kick now because we take them over the draw too slowly. If we took them over at the rate of 60 miles an hour and landed them into the bay they would still kick. But, seriously, the drawbridge is all right. Two years ago, owing to the increased weight of locomotives, the company decided to build a modern draw at Newark bay, one allowing even the heaviest trains to cross at full speed. The frame work of that draw is now building, and will be put in place some time next summer.

"For many years a 'speed rule' has been issued against the draw, not because we fear the trains would land into the bay, but because we want to preserve the efficiency of the draw until the new one is finished. Locomotive engineers in some instances have made too sure of their orders and have crawled over the structure, even though they were allowed an eight-mile-an-hour speed. We, too, have been bothered with many letters of complaint, but the commuters may rest assured that the draw is all right."

THIRD OF SERIES.

Successful Dance Was Held in the Rooms of the Camera Club Thursday Evening.

The third in a series of dances given at the Camera Club rooms by a number of well-known young people, was given Thursday evening. This was the largest of the series, there being thirty couples present, including twelve guests from out of town. The music for dancing, furnished by Hersh, of New York, was in every way satisfactory. About midnight refreshments were served and the dancing was then continued until 2 o'clock.

The dance was given under the patronage of Mrs. Herbert S. Taylor, Mrs. Frank H. Smith, Mrs. H. C. VanEmburgh, Mrs. Herbert Buxton and Mrs. Fred W. Cutter. The committee in charge consisted of H. H. Cowan, F. H. Smith, J. G. McLoughlin and H. S. Taylor. The fourth dance will be given Thursday evening, February 6.

Replaced Unsightly Boards.

The officials of the New Jersey Central have caused to be removed the unsightly boards that were recently placed in the windows of the old smoking room at the North Avenue station. In their place clean strips of white muslin have been put up to cover the windows.

Took Well.

Collector Frank H. Smith is among those who have been treated to vaccine. Like the assessment of taxes, it took well and Mr. Smith says that it was a great success. For a few days he did not care whether school kept or not.

Fred Dixon, of West Front street, spent Saturday and Sunday with Perth Amboy relatives.

NORWEGIAN FIRE-ESCAPES.

Are Installed in Most Hotels of Norway with Instructions as to Their Use.

European travelers having a wholesome desire to sleep at night would do well to give the hotels of Norway a wide berth. As described by the London Daily Mail they are not places for rest or recuperation.

They are built of wood. In the chief room on every landing there is a fire-escape, but even the occupant of this room is not insured a happy night, for from hour to hour, timid travelers knock him up to see if the fire-escape is working properly. Looking over one another's shoulders, they ask:

"Is there any danger?"

"Do you really think the rope would work?"

"Have you tried it yourself?"

Angry assurances that it is all right are often powerless to convince, particularly when ancient ladies preponderate among the questioners. As a last resort the occupant of the chief room turns the minds of his visitors into another channel by permitting them to read the printed notice which gives complete instruction, in Norwegian English, to the traveler threatened by fire. It runs thus:

"Fire-escape to throw out the window."

"The plaited anotter shall be found in every room."

"To increase the hurry let down the body one by one until all shall be left."

"N. B. The cord shall put out the ground from the shoulders thereunder."

COLORADO'S FIRST GOLD.

How the Discovery of the Precious Metal Was Made in That State.

On May 8, 1859, as stated in Fossett's "Colorado" (1876), John Gregory, a prospector, climbed the hill into what is known as Gregory Gulch (midway between the present Central City and Black Hawk) scraped away the grass and leaves, filled his gold pan with dirt and took it down to the stream.

Upon panning (washing) it down, there was about $4 worth of gold in it. This was followed by a stampede to the Gregory diggings, as they were afterward called. Gregory employed five men from the new arrivals, and by means of a sluice took out $972 in one week. Other rich strikes were made almost daily and large amounts of gold were taken out in a short time.

The Bates, Bobtail, Mammoth, Gunnell, Gurroughs, Illinois and hundreds of other lodes were found, and thousands of claims were taken up. As the search advanced the wealth of the gold veins and gulches of what is now Gilpin county became more and more apparent. Over 15,000 men were congregated in Gregory, Russell and tributary gulches, and many of them were accumulating wealth rapidly; but everything valuable was soon preempted and large numbers were forced to hunt their fortunes elsewhere.

LADIES GO FROG HUNTING.

It Is a Favorite Amusement of French Women at Constantinople.

One of the favorite amusements of French ladies at Constantinople is frog hunting, says the London Telegraph. A large party is organized, the ladies all appear in dainty Parisian toilettes, with very high heels to their boots, and each carries a long bamboo rod. The gentlemen are got up in proper costume for "la chasse" and bear sticks. Then they all adjourn to some marshy spot where frogs abound and begin fishing. The bait is a piece of raw meat tied to a string at the end of the bamboo.

The ladies do the fishing, and as soon as one sees that a frog has swallowed the bait she gives a violent jerk to the rod, which brings the frog out on to the land. The attendant sportsmen then fall upon the ferocious animal and slay it with their sticks. The ladies sometimes also join in the last fatal act, but the men always try to spare them, as in their excitement they frequently mistake a man's head or foot for the frog and the sport becomes too dangerous.

Transporting Gentlewomen.

The subject of emigration for gentlewomen is attracting an increasing amount of attention throughout the British empire, both in the motherland, where the surplus and unemployed are difficult to locate, and in the colonies, where those same women are sorely needed, says the New York Tribune. It is said this is partly the result of the Boer war. The intense patriotism of the Boers and their faith in their cause is generally attributed to the lessons learned at home from the women. A life in the wilderness might not be regarded as alluring, but there are compensations for while the average woman is to old-country eyes an unappreciable unit, even if not actually "surplus," the woman in pioneer society is an acknowledged power.

English-Irish Dialect.

An expression which English writers frequently put into the mouths of their Irish peasants is "By jabers!" says the Academy. I have lived the greater part of my life in Ireland, both in the north and south, but I have never heard it. "Bedad!" and "Begor!" are quite common, but not "By jabers!" It would be advisable for English writers to leave the Irish dialect severely alone, for they are sure to come to grief when they try to represent it. They generally produce an impossible jargon, built after the conventional stage pattern.

CHURCH MEMBERS MET IN PLEASANT FASHION

Reception and Social Given at Park Ave. Baptist Church Thursday Evening.

INFORMAL PROGRAMME

AFFAIR WAS ARRANGED BY THE LADIES' AID SOCIETY.

Held in Sunday-School Room Which Was Prettily Decorated —The Committees in Charge of the Affair.

One of the most pleasant socials held recently at the Park Avenue Baptist church, was that of Thursday given under the auspices of the Laides' Aid Society of that church. The affair attracted a very large number of members of the church and their friends and all joined in having a genuine good time. The Sunday-school room, where the social was held, was prettily decorated with green and white streamers, while banquet lamps placed here and there made the scene an attractive one.

The social features were prominent, but as an extra attraction a pleasing programme was provided, consisting of a number of popular selections by an orchestra led by G. W. V. Moy. The music was all to be desired and there were frequent encores. Mrs. Harry F. Johnson, of Watchung avenue, also favored those present with several piano selections, while Miss Bessie Giles gave a recitation which was heartily applauded.

The affair was in charge of the entertainment committee of the society, of which Mrs. Frank T. Ostrom is the president. This entertainment committee consisted of Miss Julia Wyckoff and Mrs. E. Frank Vail. The refreshment committee consisted of Mrs. Theodore L. Runyon, Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowry and Mrs. A. D. Thompson. This committee was assisted by Miss Charlotte E. Tennant, Miss May E. Tennant, Miss Cora Brokaw and Miss Elsie Giles. The reception committee was composed of the following: Mrs. Martha B. Tennant, Mrs. Nelson Runyon, Mrs. J. W. Richardson and Miss Mary Coles. Those who had charge of the decorations were Aaron D. Thompson, Jr., Frank T. Ostrom, Mrs. E. Frank Vail, Miss Wyckoff and Mrs. George E. Hall. All of the committees worked in perfect harmony and the result was everyone had a good time. After the entertainment refreshments were served at a nominal price to those who wanted them.

SERVICES DURING LENT.

Rev. E. M. Rodman Has Arranged for a Series of Sermons.

Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, rector of Grace Episcopal church, has arranged to have appropriate sermons delivered by various clergymen on Thursday evenings during Lent. This season of the church year commences February Ash Wednesday and ends Easter Day, March 12. The clergymen who will make the addresses include: Revs. W. D. Dale, J. F. Fenton, Jr., H. E. Gilchrist, W. O. Jarvis, Jr., C. L. Cooder and H. B. Wright. Services will be held daily, according to custom, and there will be four services on Ash Wednesday.

TO BECOME FORESTERS.

A District Initiation in Public Has Been Arranged for Feb. 26.

The high standing committee of the Independent Order of Foresters has completed arrangements for a large class initiation and Forestric jubilee for Courts Raritan, Somerville, Dunellen, Bound Brook, Plainfield, Watchung, South Plainfield, Provident, Cranford and Roselle, to be held in Reform Hall, Wednesday evening, February 26.

It is the intention to have at that time seventy-five candidates for initiation, recruited by the members from the courts represented. The court presenting the greatest number of candidates will be awarded a prize.

In Charge of School Paper.

The board of control of "The Scout," the proposed paper to be issued by the pupils of the North Plainfield High School, has been selected. It is as follows: Editor-in-chief, Ray Stevens; associate editors, the Misses Mabel Stevens and Alice Martin, Edward Overton and Edgar Adams; business manager, Robert Hand; assistant business manager, Fred Armstrong.

State Convention of L. T. L.

Arrangements are now being perfected for the annual State convention of the Loyal Temperance Legion which is to be held in this city next April. The sessions will probably be held in the lecture room of the First Baptist church and a programme of unusual interest will be prepared.

PARCEL DELIVERY BY TUBE.

Private Company That Has Installed a System in Boston—Plan Would Save Much Traffic.

Pneumatic tubes have long been used for the transmission of change, messages, and other light articles. They were also employed for a time in Boston, New York and Philadelphia for mail transmission, although this was stopped about a year ago. It is quite possible that tubes—which have long been in extensive use on the other side of the water for the dispatch of mail, may again be employed for that purpose in this country, and not only in the cities named but also in others. In the meantime an interesting experiment in the use of pneumatic tubes for delivering ordinary parcels was begun by a private company in Boston last August and is described by the engineer of the company, Mr. Edward D. Balliet, in the Engineering News. The line starts in the midst of the retail district and has two branches. One runs to the Back Bay, a distance of a mile and a half. The other runs a mile to a point in the South end, whence a line continues a mile farther to Roxbury, and from there another line extends a mile and a quarter farther to Dorchester. Every line is really double, one tube being for outward and the other for return business. The carrier travels at the rate of a mile in two minutes. Bundles are collected by team for deposit and are distributed by team from the other end. It is obvious that a proper pneumatic tube parcel delivery system, having direct connections with big stores and other centers of distribution in the downtown district in any large city, would obviate a great amount of traffic in that district. The Boston system is not such a one, but so far as it goes the results of its use will be instructive.

THE PEOPLE OF MARS.

New Convert to Theory That Planet Is Inhabited—Says Communication Is Impossible.

Prof. Samuel A. Harker, occupying the chair of mathematics and astronomy in the University of Indianapolis, lately gave out a statement that he is a convert to the theories advanced by the Rev. Joseph Stevens Jones and others, that the planet Mars is inhabited, and that its people are exceedingly intelligent and enterprising, but it is impossible to communicate with them.

Prof. Harker further says, according to the Cincinnati Enquirer, that "the Martians are a people of stupendous power and wonderful engineering skill. Were it possible to signal them, there is little doubt that they would understand and reply, as they are a race of enormous brain development."

Prof. Harker further adds that in all of the thousands of years of the earth's history there have been recorded in changing the face of the planet to any such extent as the people of Mars have changed theirs, but he sees no way of signalling to them. He does not take kindly to the theory advanced by Tesla, of electric signals conveyed through the ether, as Prof. Harker believes it an impossibility to develop the requisite energy to transmit the waves so far.

THE ORIGINAL JUDGE LYNCH.

No One Condemned Lawlessness More Heartily Than He—Strange Freak of Tradition.

Tradition sometimes plays strange pranks with dead men's reputations, says Thomas Walker Page in Atlantic. It would make an interesting half hour for the eavesdropper beyond the Styx, if he could hear the exchange of amenities between Dana Scotus and "Judge" Lynch—the one a shrewd, clear reasoner, who, some may signifies a fool; the other, a simple Quaker gentleman, whose name has come to stand for organized savagery. Charles Lynch was a man whose services to his country as a brave pioneer and statesman, as legislator and a statesman, are by no means deserving of oblivion, still less of obloquy. It seems, indeed, one of the iniquities of fate that his name should now be universally applied to proceedings that no one would condemn more heartily than he. The records of the court of Bedford county, in Virginia, and those of various Quaker meetings, the journals of the Virginia house of burgesses and of the first constitutional convention, taken together with family documents and traditions, show him to have been an upright and useful member of society and a wise and energetic leader at the most important crisis of American history.

Cheap Railroad Fare.

India is the land of cheap railway traveling. The returns of the East India railway show that in 12 months 18,500,000 passengers used the line and that of these 17,500,000 traveled third or lowest class. The cost of carrying was one-eighteenth of a penny per mile, and the charge to the passengers was a little more than one farthing. Great as is the difference between the cost of transit by this line and parliamentary rates on workmen's rates, the comparison between incomes of the lowest class of passengers in India and Great Britain is still greater. The average monthly income of the Great Indian Railway passenger with the number of pounds earned by the latter in a like period.

TROLLEY CAR TELEPHONES

THE SYSTEM IS BEING CONSIDERED BY LOCAL COMPANY.

They Are Operated Successfully Elsewhere—What the Objects Are.

It appears that the management of the Elizabeth, Plainfield and Central Jersey Street Railway Company, intends to introduce a system of telephones for each trolley car on the main line. Thomas G. Barr, now at the head of the line between this city and Westfield, is considering plans for this system, which has been successfully operated by the Worcester, Mass., Traction Company, where Mr. Barr was formerly in charge.

A wire, supported on the trolley poles, will be strung from the power house in Westfield to the ends of the road. In Westfield a telephone instrument will be connected with the wire, and each car will also contain the talking mechanism, and attached to the telephone in the car will be two long flexible wires. If a motor on the car burns out, or if any sort of an accident happens, the conductor attaches the flexible wires to the main line, rings the bell and calls up Westfield power house. The nature of the trouble is explained and a relief car sent out.

In case of a highway robbery the conductor could notify the Westfield power house and the men there could give a police alarm and start out on an extra trolley to relieve the "held up" passengers. It is believed the new system will be introduced in the near future.

AT METUCHEN.

St. Patrick's Alliance Will Hold Its State Convention There on Monday.

Great preparations are being made by the members of St. Patrick's Alliance for the great State convention to be held in Robins Hall Metuchen, Monday. The local committee is bestirring itself and everything indicates that Monday will be one of the biggest days in Metuchen's history.

Very seldom, if ever, Metuchen is chosen for a State convention of such a large body as St. Patrick's Alliance. There are over 800 branches of the Alliance in New Jersey and delegates will be present from the majority of them. Robins Hall undoubtedly be packed. D. C. Whalen used his influence to get the alliance to convene here. He is chairman of the local committee and is assisted by John Powers, Jr., and Thomas Tynan.

The business before the convention, such as electing State officers, will be gotten through with in the one day, if possible. If there should be any business left undone it will be laid over to the National convention which will be held in Rahway. The Metuchen branch, which is Branch No. 2, of District No. 8, consists of nearly seventy members. D. C. Whalen is making preparations to serve dinner to 125 people. There should be at least 500 people from all parts of Jersey in town that day. In the evening there will be a grand ball.

PATROL WAGON.

May Not be Long Before City Has One Together With a Police Call-System.

Among the possibilities in the near future is the introduction in this city of a police call system and a patrol wagon. The police board have from time to time had this matter under consideration, but no definite plans have been formed as yet. As soon as the committee can see its way clear to recommend this to the Common Council as one of the needed improvements, it will be done.

It is a recognized fact that it would greatly improve the efficiency of the department. Under the present system if a patrolman arrests a man any distance from headquarters he is obliged to leave his beat unprotected for some time while he takes his prisoner to the lockup. With a call system and a patrol wagon the work of arrest would be made easy and would add much to the general protection of the city.

It is understood that every member of the police board favors the introduction of the above system.

Child Worth Millions.

"My child is worth millions to me," says Mrs. Mary Bird, of Harrisburg, Pa., "yet I would have lost her by croup had I not purchased a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure." One Minute Cough Cure is sure cure for coughs, croup and throat and lung troubles. An absolutely safe cough cure which acts immediately. The youngest child can take it with entire safety. The little ones like the taste and remember how often it helped them. Every family should have a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure handy. At this season especially it may be needed suddenly. L. W. STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOLS TO HOLD CONVENTION

Executive Committee Decided to Hold It at Trenton on November 20 and 21.

MANY WILL ATTEND.

ANNUAL REPORT OF GENERAL SECRETARY WAS PRESENTED.

Some Very Satisfactory Figures Were Contained Therein—A Growth During the Year—All Reports Satisfactory.

It has been decided to hold the annual State Sunday-school convention of New Jersey in Trenton, Thursday and Friday, November 20 and 21 and it is predicted that fully eight hundred representative Sunday-school workers will attend. Heretofore the convention has been held triennially. This year it is proposed to make it annually. The interest, helpfulness and spiritual power say that the association has held since its organization in 1859.

The decision to meet in Trenton was made recently when the executive committee held a meeting in that city. Of the thirty-seven members of the committee, twenty-six were present, representing most of the counties. Rev. E. Morris Ferguson, of Trenton, the general secretary, presented the invitation to the association to meet in Trenton. The general plan will be that the delegates will have their expenses paid by the schools sending them.

General Secretary Ferguson's annual report dealt with the condition of the Sunday-schools, the State, the county and department work, and the work of the State headquarters. There is now a total membership in the Sunday-schools of more than 7,000 larger than the number reported last year, and, with the home department members added, more than 9,000 larger.

The exact figures are as follows: Officers and teachers, 28,988; scholars, 311,509; home department members, 14,583; total, 366,080. The number of Sunday-schools in New Jersey is 2,353, being 29 more than last year. The number of scholars uniting with the church is slightly larger. The condition of the organization work is good, and promises to be better.

Miss Josephine L. Baldwin, of Newark, the State primary superintendent, reported eighteen primary institutes held during the year, twenty-one primary unions in active existence, and a very successful session of the School of Primary Methods at Asbury Park last July.

The treasurer's report showed a balance of $266, with outstanding notes of $500. The estimates for the year, amounting to $6,000, were cut to $5,350, of which about $2,600 is expected to be collected from the Sunday-schools through the county associations and the balance from individual subscribers.

At a re-organization of the work was effected with quarterly meetings of the executive committee, a strong committee on finance, with Rev. Frank A. Smith, of Somerville, temporary chairman, and the other committees as follows: State convention, J. V. Forster, chairman; printing and supplies, James P. Bryan, chairman; normal work, Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, chairman; primary work, Henry H. Dawson, chairman; international convention, Rev E. M. Ferguson, chairman.

This last committee is to appoint forty-eight delegates to represent New Jersey in the International Sunday-school convention at Denver, June 26 to July 1 next, and to make arrangements for transportation.

Previous to the assembling of the committee, a meeting was held of the executive committee of the New Jersey Superintendents' Union. Plans were made for superintendents in the counties, and a committee was appointed to arrange for the banquet at the State convention.

AGRICULTURAL PROGRESS IN SOMERSET COUNTY

The Annual Report of Secretary of Somerset County Board of Agriculture.

SENT TO STATE BOARD.

THE AVERAGE PRODUCT AND PRICES OF CROPS AND STOCK.

Some Interesting Facts in Annual Report of Secretary A. P. Sutphen—He Makes Some Recommendations.

Secretary A. P. Sutphen, of the Somerset County Board of Agriculture, has submitted his report to the secretary of the State Board, to be printed in the annual report. It is as follows:

"Only three meetings have been held during the past year. At the last meeting, the members of the board voted to hold six meetings during the coming year, and, by the distribution among the farmers in the county, of an address, to make an attempt to increase the membership to at least five hundred farmers. Fruit and berry growers ought to become members of this board, then it would be able to get about what it ought to, both for the benefit of its members and of the county.

"There should be a trolley system from Peapack to the Mercer county line, so that both limestone and burnt lime can be transported cheaply all the way down through the center of this county. Peapack can furnish an inexhaustible supply of the best lime, and when the time comes (and I trust it will be soon) that our railroad companies as public servants, are compelled to accommodate the people who gave them the franchise, and to cart coal at living rates, and not at the exhorbitant prices now demanded for freight, then lime can be burnt and furnished the farmers at reasonable rates, and will be commonly used as a fertiliser, and by its use our farmers will be better for all kinds of crops, and much freer of noxious weeds. In the meantime, and while waiting for this cross trolley through the country, the farmers should take advantage of the stone road from Far Hills through Somerville and Harlingen, and with the use of lime and bara yard manure and composts, they can greatly enrich their farms, and their crops will richly pay them. In proof of this, visit the Peapack valley, and the limestone sections of the Muskinetcong and German valleys where lime is freely applied. Crops are kept clean, and the soil is much more easily cultivated. Lime applied judiciously upon our red shale proves a wonderful incentive to the growth of grass, and if a farmer can produce grass, he is almost sure of corn and wheat.

"The oats corp in our county was a failure. Corn, wheat and hay yielded fairly. Prices are much better, and the outlook for farmers is encouraging. Take advantage of the times by intelligent, earnest effort, confer with each other. See that the prices of your products are fixed by you, that the cost of production is reduced, and that you get the right kind of fertilizers, and apply them to the best advantage. Raise the best and get the highest market price.

"It is noted that the organization of this board has proved very beneficial to farmers in the county, that many have improved their methods of farming and become more successful, and we hope to increase the interest in the meetings of the board."

At the close of this report was a report on farm crops, stock, prices, etc., for the year ending December 1, 1901; 100 per cent. being the basis of estimate.

Farm Crops.

Corn 105, an increase of 5 per cent.; average yield per acre, 36 bushels; average price 56 cents.

Swine 85, average price 7½ cents.

Poultry, turkeys 75, average price 12½ cents.

Chickens 100, average price 10½ cents.

Winter wheat 100.

Winter rye 105.

The number of farm laborers is reported on the decrease, because mills and factories pay the same wages for shorter hours, and less work. The price of farm help remains stationery. Corn and hay have received the most attention, and oats very little. Entomology is gaining the favors of the county. Farmers are paid on an average three cents per quart wholesale for milk, while consumers pay the retailers six cents.

FIRST APPOINTEE.

Claude L. Stillman, of Newark, Named as Private Secretary of Governor Murphy.

To Claud L. Stillman, of Newark, came the distinction of being the first appointee of Governor Murphy. The announcement of the Governor that he had chosen Mr. Stillman as his private secretary was forcast by those who knew of the intimate relationship that had for a long period existed between the two men and by the confidence that the Governor, in his capacity as a citizen and business man, reposed in Mr. Stillman.

For several years, Mr. Stillman has occupied the important post of assistant secretary of the Murphy Varnish Company, his duties as such including the functions of private secretary to Mr. Murphy as president of the company.

The private business interests of the Governor's secretary will not permit him to give all his time to the official duties of the post of private secretary to the Governor, so, it is understood, Mr. Stillman will occupy the position only temporarily, until such time as the Governor can select a permanent secretary and confidential aid.

ON STRUCTURE OF NOVEL.

Third of Series of Talks by Miss Antoinette Carroll Thursday.

The third in the series of talks on the structure of the English novel given by Miss Antoinette Carroll, of Jersey City, was delivered at the home of Mrs. Henry E. Brewster, of Watchung avenue, Thursday afternoon, before a good sized audience. The topic was the "Minor Motif."

Miss Cartoll spoke in a pleasing way and she handled her topic in a manner that proved her mastery of the construction of the novel. She dwelt upon the idea of the minor motive of a modern work of fiction, and illustrated her remarks with quotations from representative authors. The theme of the next talk will be "Robert Louis Stevenson."

WANT NO SHIP SUBSIDIES

SUBJECT OF DEBATE AT Y. M. C. A. SATURDAY NIGHT.

Under Auspices of Literary Society—Negative Side Presents Better Arguments.

The merits and demerits of shipping subsidies, as a National policy, were ably brought out in a debate on that subject held under the auspices of the Plainfield Literary Society, at Y. M. C. A. Hall, Saturday evening. The effect on the merchant marines not only of this land but of other countries as well by the adoption and practice of the system was thoroughly discussed pro and con and a decision was given to the opponents of the theory for having presented the better argument.

The subject was: Resolved, That the United States should establish a system of shipping subsidies. George S. Clay, of LaGrande avenue, acted as judge and carefully weighed every point made by the debaters. The first speaker for the affirmative was Harvey E. Linbarger. His chief contention was that the policy would be beneficial to the government, because it would permit it to take possession of the marine craft in time of war. For the negative Carl E. Drange declared that the statistics prove that the merchant marine is growing rapidly and it does not need to be fostered. The repeal of the present navigation laws, he argued, would be more helpful. As a question of economics, said he, the proposed policy, is objectionable, and he named several reasons for this statement.

N. Douglass Drake, in advocating the policy, declared that the American flag is hardly known at the great shipping ports of the world and that other countries had found that this policy has increased the number of their shipping vessels. The last speaker was Charles E. Dolliver whose endeavor was to show that the cause of the prosperity of the shipping marine of other nations is not due to the policy of subsidies. The repeal of antiquated navigation laws of Great Britain is responsible for the excellent condition of its commerce. France, with all its subsidies, is behind the United States, in this respect, said Mr. The United States, he declared, had tried the policy and it did not give satisfactory results. Mr. Drange summed up for the negative and Mr. Drake followed for the affirmative.

After reviewing the various points made by the debaters, Mr. Clay made a decision in favor of those presenting the negative arguments.

TREATMENT IS ENDED.

Board of Health Concludes Free Vaccination, But Work Commences in Schools.

The free vaccination treatment under the auspices of the Board of Health was discontinued Saturday evening. During the hours in the afternoon twenty persons were treated. As usual many called to have their arms attended to. In some cases the vaccination had taken exceptionally well and had given the persons much trouble. Severe cases were rare. Today the free treatment began at the public schools, although no one was treated without the consent of the parents.

There is nothing new regarding the smallpox situation. There are only the four cases and these continue to improve every day. The Board of Health does not at present expect any further development of the disease. Every precaution has been taken against it. So many persons have been vaccinated that in almost every quarter of the city the only known preventive has been applied.

HAD ITS FIGHT OUT.

Pickerel Waited Until Kimble Went and Killed a Deer.

Then the Old Wallaper Made Things Lively for His Human Antagonist, But in the End Was Inconsiderately Vanquished.

"The biggest pickerel I ever caught," said Jack Kimble, of Panpack, Pa., to a New York Sun correspondent, "waited to have its fight out with me while I went and killed one of the biggest doe deers I ever saw, although I didn't want to kill the doe. I had to.

"It was over on Big Pond, in Palmyra. George Killam and I were fishing through the ice. One of my tip-ups had tipped with a vim that only a big fish could put into a tip-up, and the minute I grabbed the line and began to haul in I knew the boss pickerel was on the hook.

"Big pickerel like that are apt not to stay on the hook a great while, and you want to land 'em you don't want to give 'em much time to dally with the hook, and at the same time you want to be mighty careful how you haul 'em up from below and out of the hole in the ice.

"I knew right off below any more time than I thought was necessary for him to get a good hold on the hook, and I was hauling him up without any delay a the hauling. I had got him where I could see him surging in the water and doing his best to get loose, and his jaws stood open like an alligator's.

"'Gosh'lmighty!' said I. 'He's the daddy of 'em all.'

"Just then I heard something that I hadn't expected to hear, but I knew instantly what it was. It was the plaintive bleat that a doe deer gives when in horror or pain. I forgot about the big pickerel. I dropped the line, and it went whizzing back through the hole in the ice.

"I looked in the direction from which the cry of the deer had come. A quarter of a mile away, near the upper edge of the pond, I saw the doe. She was a big one, and was struggling on the ice with three dogs, which had chased and captured her.

"I started on a run toward the deer, hoping to get to her in time to rescue her from the dogs and save her life, but although I got there in very quick time, and clubbed the dogs off of the doe, they had injured her so badly that I had to kill her. The reason for legal killing of deer was over, but neither George Killam nor I could see any good reason why we should let that nice fat lot of venison, although we had to kill it against our will, lie there and be fed to the dogs, so we took it ourselves.

"HE'S THE DADDY OF 'EM ALL!"

"'Those infernal dogs,' said I to George. 'have cost me the landing of the boss pickerel of Big Pond,' for I hadn't the slightest idea that the pickerel would stay on the hook and wait to have the fight out with me.

"Consequently, when I got back to my tip-up and saw it still in the air, I was considerably surprised, but when I took hold of the line to haul it up and got a jerk that almost pulled me into the hole, I could hardly believe it could be. A second jerk, though, woke me up.

"'George,' I hollered, 'blamed if he hain't waited for me!'

"I took up the fight where I had left it, and by and by had the old wallopper out on the ice, where he tried his best to get at me and snap his jaws on me, until I knocked him in the head with an ax.

"Now, to say a pickerel weighed nine pounds may not seem very big, but in a country where, if a fellow catches that weighs three pounds he will walk ten miles to tell about it, a nine-pounder is more than a whopper. And that is what this one that waited to have its fight out with me until I went and killed a deer weighed—nine pounds."

Lizards Change Their Color.

The common lizard changes its color like the chameleon. It will become black after remaining upon black soil for about half a minute, but upon an old-fashioned wooden fence the animal soon assumes the mottley gray hue of a weather-worn rail. Upon a green leaf the same lizard will take on a greenish tint.

The anniversary closed with the entire assemblage singing "Auld Lang Syne" with a hearty good will. The committee in charge during the evening consisted of James Cousen, Mr. and Mrs. William Nicholson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas [Hendry, Mr. and Mrs. William Gray.

The Christian Endeavor Society meeting last Friday at the Park Avenue Baptist church was one of the most interesting held in some time. Mrs. David M. Mrs. Booth and her husband have been in Africa eight years and she told of their work in that land.

They have organized industrial schools in Africa and instead of giving the natives money, they are given clothing and necessary food, in return for their labor. Mrs. Booth told of the habits of the people, of their eagerness to learn about Christ and of their willingness to work for the articles given in return.

She said that while she and her husband have been in Africa they have established fifty-two industrials school and there have been nearly 400 converts. Numbered among the latter are some of the most earnest, sincere and devoted Christians to be found anywhere. After once learning about Christ and the principles of Christianity they welcome the change from the old superstitions.

After the meeting Mrs. Booth exhibited many curios including the skins of a leopard, snake, baboon and white cat. She also exhibited specimens of the clothing worn by the natives. The service was as interesting and helpful one and at the close many of those present thanked Mrs. Booth for her talk.

GOTHAM RESCUE WORK SUBJECT OF TALK

Mrs. Whittemore Speaks Eloquently at Warren Chapel Missionary Meeting.

TASK OF DOOR OF HOPE

AN INSTIUTION WERE FALLEN CREATURES ARE HELPED.

Large Congregation Listens Very Attentively to Experiences of the Lecturer—What is Being Done to Save Weak Mortals.

An address on the subject of missionary work among the fallen women in New York city, delivered by Mrs. E. M. Whittemore, at Warren chapel, Friday evening, was listened to by a large and attentive congregation. For over an hour, Mrs. Whittemore, who is the responsible head of the Door of Hope, on East Sixty-first street, talked of her experiences during the years she has labored to redeem those unfortunate creatures, and her remarks showed that she is making a life's work of the task.

In the course of her talk she told many pathetic incidents in the lives of frightfully dissipated mortals, whom she said, were frequently more sinned against than sinning. In all New York, she declared, there are 10,000 places where woman can be dragged down and only five, like the Door of Hope, where they may be raised up. This statement she based on official statistics. The simple Christian methods she uses in leading these fallen women to a sense of their disgrace was related in a feeling manner.

Mrs. Whittemore had something to say of the attitude of the women of the land today toward these creatures. She administered a rebuke to those who brush by these fallen women with a look of scorn, never thinking of their duty to help them. The work by the Door of Hope was dwelt upon at some length by her. It has been established for over a decade and during that period she has never solicited funds for the purpose of its maintenance, relying wholly on voluntary subscriptions of philanthropic persons. All the collections received through her lectures are devoted to the general missionary cause. A number of pamphlets concerning the work she is doing and attending circumstances in the conversion of these fallen women, were placed on sale at the conclusion of the meeting and quite a number of persons purchased the interesting booklets.

REED BEATEN BY ONE VOTE

Frank O. Briggs Named For State Treasurer at Joint Legislative Caucus.

ON THE FIRST BALLOT.

Senator McCarter Was Only Member of Upper House to Fight Somerset's Senator—Paired His Vote With Mr. Reed's—Held Tuesday Afternoon—The Vote.

Trenton, Feb. 5—In a neck and neck race for the State treasurership, Senator Charles A. Reed, of Somerset county, was defeated by former Mayor Frank O. Briggs, of this city, in the Republican joint caucus, yesterday afternoon. The ad interim appointee, Mr. Briggs, pulled through with a bare majority of one vote.

Up to the hour of meeting no conservate man was willing to declare positively who would be selected, it being nip and tuck. As it turned out Senator Reed received the entire senatorial vote with one exception, but the assemblymen were largely against him. In the last fifteen minutes preceding the caucus, four assemblymen, hitherto favorable to Mr. Reed, shifted to the other faction and decided the vote.

Senator McCarter, of Passaic, was the lone senator opposed to Reed, but his ballot was cast for him, by an agreement between himself and Senator Reed, who promised to vote for his opponent. Assemblyman Elvins, of Atlantic, nominated Reed, and Senator E. C. Hutchinson, of Mercer, seconded the nomination. Assemblyman H. W. Hoagland, of Somerset, also seconded Reed's nomination. Senator Cross, of Union, took occasion to make a few remarks in advocacy on Mr. Reed's candidacy. Mr. Briggs was named by Assemblyman Leavitt, of Mercer, in a short speech.

The roll call was speedily made and Senator McCarter was about to announce the result, when Senator Lee asked that the vote be read in detail. There were no mistakes and the presiding officer announced the result of the ballot, 32 to 31, in favor of the Mercer county man. The only Union county man to cast his lot with Mr. Briggs was Assemblyman William Newcorn, of Plainfield.

The vote was as follows:

For Mr. Reed—Bradley, W. T. Brown, Champion, Cross, Elvins, Francis, Gill, Gulick, Haines, Hall, Hand, Hoagland, Howland, Hutchinson, Jackson, Johnson, Lee, McCarter, McKee, F. Miller, R. C. Miller, Misch, Montgomery, Shinn, Stanger, Strong, Waite, Wakelee, Welsh, Whitehead and Whitford—31.

For Mr. Briggs—Avis, Bacheller, Bogert, Boyd, R. W. Brown, Crease, Cummings, Davisdon, Garrabrants, Guichtel, Hoffman, Holman, Horner, Howe, Keasler, Laire, Leavitt, Lord, Mercer, L. H. Miller, Moore, Newcorn, Page, Reed, Schmidt, Scarvell, Stelter, Tillotson, Tyler, VanBlarcom, William and Wright—32.

Concerning the result of Tuesday's legislative caucus, Senator Reed was interviewed yesterday by a Daily Press reporter.

"I made a hard fight," said Senator Reed, "and I was defeated. That's all there is to it. No, there is no truth in the rumor that I am to be a candidate for Congressional honors. I have denied that rumor many times before and I see no reason to change my mind now. You may unqualifiedly deny the report whenever you hear it."

RED MEN'S FAIR CONTINUES

ANOTHER LARGE CROWD ATTENDED THE SECOND NIGHT OF IT.

Dancing Was the Chief Attraction, But An Informal Programme Was Rendered.

A big crowd was present Tuesday at the week's fair being conducted under the auspices of the Red Men in Saengerbund Hall. The hall was filled with people, the majority of whom enjoyed the dance, which is the leading feature of the affair.

During the evening some entertainment was provided. The Randall Brothers, of this city, entertained the audience. Walter Randall, as a banjoist, and Joseph Randall, as a mandolin player, rendered several good duets. They were followed by Miss Try Mattox, who recited "Not Opposed to Matrimony," which won much applause. Joseph Randall sang a solo entitled "Wait." Following this was a recitation, "The Picture on the Floor," given by W. R. Mattox, an old time favorite. Encores were rendered by each of the participants on the programme.

As on the opening night the contests were a feature of the affair. Several minor articles were chanced off and many helped those who are striving to win the most valuable prizes. The bowling alley was an attraction, and several good games were rolled, prizes being awarded the best bowlers.

Raymond Schenck and Lafayette Rosenstiehl were the firemen detailed by the North Plainfield department to guard any damage by fire.

PREPARING FOR BASEBALL

MANAGER AND CAPTAIN ELECTED BY Y. M. A. OF HOPE CHAPEL.

John H. Case and David B. Martin Named for the Places—To Register a Basket Ball Team.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Young Men's Association, of Hope chapel, held last evening, considerable business of importance was transacted.

Baseball matters occupied the greater part of the session and steps were taken to get this branch of the association's athletics in shape at once. With this idea in view, John H. Case was elected manager for the season of 1902 and David B. Martin, captain. Both have had years of experience in their respective capacities and under their guidance the Hope team is expected to rank high at the close of the coming summer.

It was voted to register the association basket ball team, recently formed, in the A. A. U. This will entitle it to play with the best teams of the State.

Owing to the pressure of other matters which exist at the present time, the question of establishing the night school classes was laid over until the first business meeting in September.

The meeting closed with a general discussion and the formation of minor plans for the minstrel show which the association is to give in March.

TO GIVE A BALL.

Warren Engine Company Arranges for Dance on February 21.

Warren Engine Company, at its regular monthly meeting held last evening, decided to hold a ball in the near future. The affair will be given in Saengerbund Hall, and it will take place Friday evening, February 21.

A committee on arrangements was appointed. It consists of L. B. Bodine, chairman, Frank Kesselring, secretary, John Schenck, treasurer, Charles Stahl, William Doud, Lafayette Rosenstiehl, William Conover and Lewis Feiring. Since the recent parade of the department the funds of the company have been low, and this affair is planned to put the treasury in a better condition.

The only other business of importance was the election of Philip H. Currin as a member of the company.

Talented Artists.

Miss Aimee Emmons, reciter, and Elmer D. Cutting, tenor soloist, have been secured to take part in the entertainment to be given at the Y. M. C. A. tomorrow evening under the auspices of the Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church. A fine programme has been prepared.

A Splendid Result.

Mrs. Seaman Williams, chairman of the Trinity Reformed church supper committee, has paid all bills incurred and will turn over to the treasurer between $140 and $150 profits.

Frederick Schaerlein, of New York, is visiting relatives in the borough.

YOUNG FOLK WEDDED IN SOCIAL SPLENDOR

Marriage of Miss Susie Milne and Edward T. Wilson at First Baptist Church.

SOCIETY WAS PRESENT.

CHARMING CEREMONY WAS HELD AT CHURCH LAST EVENING.

Reception to the Relatives Followed at the Home of the Bride—Have Gone South on Bridal Trip—Will Reside in the Borough.

Miss Susie Milne, the eldest daughter of Mrs. Isabel Milne, of Willow avenue, and Edward Taylor Wilson, of Sycamore avenue, were married in social splendor at the First Baptist church last evening. A throng of the fashionable set of this city and elsewhere thronged the handsome edifice and the nuptial event was one of the brilliant society affairs of the season.

The young couple are active in all the gay functions of fashionable Plainfield and this fact unquestionably intensified the interest generally taken in the event. Long before the hour for the service had arrived, which was precisely 8 o'clock, the church was well filled and when the bridal party arrived the congregation nearly packed the edifice. The decorations were not elaborate but exceeding good taste was shown in their arrangement. Similax, palms and ferns mingled with a profusion of Easter lilies banked the pulpit and were also well distributed about the body of the church.

At the appointed time the bridal party entered and wended its way up the main aisle, while Howard M. Case, the regular organist, played with much expression the wedding march from "Lohengrin." The ushers, who joined the party at the church doors, were Howard Huntington, Thomas Rowe VanBoskerck, Dr. B. vanD. Hedges, Henry W. Lowe and Walter F. Murray, of this city, and Thomas Buck, a cousin of the bride, of New York. Following closely were the bridesmaids, the Misses Agnes Hutton and Grace Howe, of Brooklyn, cousins of the bride, and the Misses Bessie Valiant and Elsie Brokaw, of Washington Park. Miss Isabel Milne, the younger sister of the bride, was the maid of honor. The bride walked with her brother, Alexander Milne, who gave her in marriage. The flower girl was Miss Elizabeth McGee, a cousin of the groom, and the page was Earle Bigelow, a cousin of the bride.

The party was met at the front of the pulpit by the groom who was attended by Orville G. Waring, of this city, as best man. Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, who is an uncle of the groom, officiated and he used the ceremony of the Episcopal church. During the nuptial ceremony soft strains of Handel's Largo pealed forth from the organ. When the service was concluded the party marched gayly down the aisle while Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered.

Preceding the ceremony the following recital was given by Mr. Case: Offertoire, Tours; benediction, Dubuis; minuet, Handel; fiat lux, Dubuis; the answer, Westhelmon; and minuet, Selby.

Immediately after the ceremony at the church, the bride and groom held a reception at the home of Mrs. Milne. The house was handsomely adorned, the color effect being green and white. All during the reception an orchestra, under the direction of Herbert J. Harold, rendered musical selections. Only the relatives of the young couple attended this affair.

At a late hour Mr. and Mrs. Wilson departed for their honeymoon trip. They will travel in the south and are expected to return in a fortnight. On their arrival in Plainfield, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson will reside in the large house on the northwest corner of Willow and Sycamore avenues, in the Park. The groom is connected with the Standard Oil Company and has offices in New York.

For the wedding ceremony the bride was gowned in white chantille trimmed with duchesse and point Berha lace. She wore a veil of tulle and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Miss Milne, the maid of honor, was gowned in white chiffon, and she carried Easter lilies. The gowns of the bridesmaids were of crepe de chine. They carried huge bouquets of American beauty roses with exceedingly long stems.

The presents received by the bride were magnificent and the collection included costly specimens of the jeweler's art, elaborately designed silver, beautiful cut glass, ornaments and household furniture.

The gifts of the bride to the maid of honor and the bridesmaids were orchid brooches of a neat design, while the presents of the groom to his best man and the ushers were link sleeve buttons with the initials "M.-W.," standing for the names of the young couple.

Mrs. Wilson and her mother and sister will give two "at homes" during the early part of the coming month.

OLD CRESCENT RINK ABLAZE

OIL DRIPPINGS ON THE ROOF CAUGHT FIRE FROM BURNING SOOT.

Promised a Spectacular Fire, But Proved of Slight Importance—Little Damage Done.

An alarm from box No. 21 for what promised to be a spectacular fire in one of the city's largest buildings, caused a flurry among the firemen and late pedestrians at 10:25 Tuesday. To Patrolman Charles Flynn, who pulled the box, it appeared as if the entire rear end of the old Crescent rink, now the home of Hernig & Kapp's skirt factory, was a mass of flames. It turned out to be the burning of an accumulation of oil on the slate roof which was extinguished with a possible loss of $25.

The motive power for the skirt factory is furnished by a kerosene engine, which has an exhaust on the roof. It is covered by a muffler, to drown the noise, in which soot had gathered. A spark from this was evidently blown to the slate covering of the building where oil drippings had spread about. The firemen turned two streams on the blaze and extinguished it in a few minutes.

As a precautionary matter, Manager Kapp, of the factory firm, dismissed his employes this morning and placed plumbers at work overhauling the pipes on the roof. There was no damage to the machinery and work was resumed this afternoon.

WEDDED IN NEWARK.

Newark, Feb. 5—Garrett J. Powers, of Craig place, North Plainfield, and Miss Elizabeth Martin, daughter of P. J. Martin, of this city, were married here yesterday afternoon. The wedding took place in the Dominican church.

The nuptial event was a quiet affair owing to the wishes of the bride, who is in mourning. It was 3:30 o'clock when the ceremony was performed, Rev. Father Grady, being the officiating priest. Miss Tessie Martin, the younger sister of the bride, was the only bridesmaid. James Gallagher, of this city, attended Mr. Powers, as best man.

After the festal service, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Powers left for Washington, D. C., late in the afternoon. On the return from their honeymoon trip they will reside on Somerset street, North Plainfield. A large number of friends of the groom from Plainfield and North Plainfield attended the wedding festivities, among them being John P. Powers, his brother.

PARK CLUB AND ROSELLE CASINO MEET FOR SERIES OF THREE.

Then Roselle Will Roll Three More With Cranford on the Former's Alleys—One Game Lost Means a Tie With Westfield.

The concluding matches in The Daily Press Bowling League promise to be of special interest this year. By winning three straight from the Park Club last week the Westfield team has become a decidedly prominent factor in the race for the championship of the league and only the greatest kind of bowling can save the day for the Roselle Casino.

As they stand today, the Westfield Club is in the lead with Roselle Casino a close second. Westfield has, however, completed its schedule of eighteen games while Roselle has only rolled twelve. Friday evening the Roselle cracks will come here for a series of three with the Park Club, while Thursday evening, February 13, the Cranford Casino will send its team to Roselle to roll the last scheduled games in the league. While these are not very difficult games for Roselle, the exegencies of the situation require an unbroken string of victories for Roselle if that club is to win The Daily Press trophy for the third time.

Last season saw a somewhat similar situation which resulted in a tie between Roselle and Westfield, the deciding series of games being rolled off on neutral ground, the Cranford Casino alleys. If Roselle loses one game out of the six, which only the finest kind of rolling can prevent, there will be another tie this year to be rolled off. If more than one game is lost by Roselle it means that the trophy will pass into the hands of the Westfield bowlers to hold for another year.

As so much depends on the remaining games in the league, Friday evening's contest may be looked forward to with much interest. There are some great bowlers down at Roselle and the best of them will undoubtedly be on hand to land the trophy for that club if possible. As Roselle already has two victories to its credit, the bowlers from that town are particularly anxious to win this year as it will give them permanent possession of the cup. While the Parks are not rolling a particularly hot game this season, it is going to take some heavy work to defeat them three times running on their own alleys.

Even if the Roselle team succeeds in capturing three straight here, Cranford will still have to be met.

While Cranford is at the wrong end of the league, at present, its bowlers occasionally wake up and give their opponents a hot fight. So the result of the league will remain in doubt until the last game is rolled.

The games which the Park Club rolled last week on the Westfield alleys were partially responsible for the present state of affairs. It was a very poor showing the Plainfielders made while Westfield did not do much better. Westfield's game was good enough, however, to take three straight and give that team the lead in the league. All the Park Club bowlers were way off their usual game and some of the scores made were heart-breaking.

The scores follow:

Westfield Club.	1st.	2d.	3d.
Forster	164	134	145
Condit	139	168	107
Bogert	157	174	146

DISPOSAL BEDS ACCEPTED

ALL LACKING NOW IS THE SETTLEMENT OF A FEW DETAILS.

Council Passed Contractors' Bills—Made But Little Money on the Contract.

With the passing of the bills of Gleason, Kiely & Company, at the regular meeting of the Common Council Monday evening, the work of that firm in altering the city disposal beds was practically accepted. It will be officially recognized when certain payments are adjusted satisfactorily to the city treasurer and street commissioner.

George F. McKeough, of Syracuse, N. Y., a member of the firm, was in this city, yesterday. He brought checks with him for settlement of all claims except some small disputed amounts which are provided for by cash remaining in City Treasurer Arnold's possession. There is still $1,000 retained for six months and the company has furnished a maintenance bond of $2,000.

Through a number of mishaps and delays in construction, the profit from the contract to Gleason & Kiely, will be very small. The members have instituted suit against a Bound Brook stone firm for breaking a contract which they allege caused them a loss of at least $2,000. In bidding for the work the figures were placed very low and in consequence the city has been the profit maker.

A complete test of the beds will be made in a very short time and it is expected they will be placed in full operation before spring.

ELLIOTT T. BARROWS INJURED

BROKE HIS LEG IN FALL ON THE ICY SIDEWALK.

Was Returning From Casino When Accident Occurred—Taken Home in the Ambulance.

Former Councilman Elliott T. Barrows, of West Eighth street, met with an unfortunate accident last evening about 9:30 o'clock, while returning to his home from the Casino, where he had been attending the annual meeting of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club. He was walking home in company with George A. Chapman, president of the club. When near the home of Alexander Gilbert, at the corner of Central avenue and Eighth street, he slipped on some ice. He fell heavily and in doing so fractured his leg just above the ankle.

Mr. Chapman went to Mr. Gilbert's house and telephoned for the ambulance. This, in charge of Roundsman Flynn, hastended to the scene, and Mr. Barrows was taken home. In the meantime Dr. G. W. Endicott was sent for and he and Miss Margaret Cramer, the trained nurse, went at once to the home, arriving there just after Mr. Barrows reached there.

The break, while a bad one, has every prospect of knitting in a reasonable length of time. Mr. Barrows is a prominent member of the Produce Exchange and has always been very active. He weighs about 212 pounds and for this reason it was impossible to remove him to a house, last evening, until the ambulance arrived.

LIBRARY AFFAIRS.

Routine Business at Meeting of the Library Directors Last Tuesday.

The regular meeting of the Board of Library Directors was held last evening at the Library. There were present J. Evarts Tracy, W. H. Larrabee, Alexander Gilbert, John B. Dumont and Wm. M. Stillman.

The bills of the general library were ordered paid from the library fund, and those of the Babcock library from the Babcock fund. The sum of $500 was appropriated for the purchase of books for the general library. The librarian was authorized to purchase an extra desk for the reading room. After the reading of the librarian's report for January, the board adjourned.

TRAINED NURSE SECURED.

Placed in Charge of Carson Child Ill With Scarlet Fever.

A trained nurse was secured yesterday by Health Inspector William Addis for the care of the scarlet fever patient at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Carson. There is one child remaining who has the fever and everything possible will be done to save her. The fever at this home has been of a most violent type. The three children, who recently died there, were ill but a comparatively short time.

OFFICERS FOR HILLSIDE CLUB

Annual Meeting of Hillside Tennis and Golf Club Was Held Last Tuesday.

CLUB IS FLOURISHING.

George A. Chapman Was Re-elected President—Only One Change—Finances in Excellent Condition—Tennis to Take a Prominent Part in the Life of the Club.

The interest in the affairs of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, as evidenced at the annual meeting held last Tuesday at the Casino, speak well for the success of the club for the coming season. Last season was considered to be the most successful one since the organization of the club, and it is proposed to make it even more so this year. There will be both tennis and golf to interest the members. The club will have a subcommittee on tennis, with one women member, and the game will be made a decided feature.

The reports of the officers were received, including a circular letter issued by the president, George A. Chapman, on behalf of himself and the trustees. This gives a summary of the past season's work; also a hint as to what may be expected during the coming season.

The report of the treasurer, J. van-Herwerden, shows the receipts for the past year to be $35,373.78, including $21,000 from the sale of the first mortgage bonds. There is a balance remaining of $290.48. The club's assets are $23,372.84 and the liabilities, which include first mortgage bonds, $20,500, tally with the assets. The estimated expenses to April 1, next, are $290 for care of property and $25 for sundry expenses.

Elliott T. Barrows, A. H. Atterbury and Thomas R. VanBoskerck were elected trustees for three years. Roger F. Murray, D. H. Rowland and C. Westley Abbott were chosen from the membership at large as a nominating committee for 1903.

After the meeting the trustees met and organized by electing the following officers for 1902: President, George A. Chapman; vice president, Ernest R. Ackerman; secretary, A. H. Atterbury; treasurer, J. vanHerwerden; chairman greens committee, Elliott T. Barrows; chairman golf committee, secretary for golf, Thomas R. VanBoskerck; chairman house committee, George P. Mellick.

The changes in the officers are that Mr. Ackerman takes Charles J. Fisk's place, the latter's term having expired, and Mr. VanBoskerck takes Dr. Atd's place, the latter having resigned.

MR. PUTNAM COMING.

Will Appear at F. H. S. A. A. Entertainment Next Week.

The Plainfield High School Athletic Association completed arrangements with Manager Maze Edwards yesterday, for a benefit at the Casino, Tuesday night of next week, on which occasion they will present one of the strongest and most entertaining attractions of the present season. The services of Wellington Putnam, lecturer on elocution, Columbia University 1898-1901, and Professor of elocution, American Academy of Dramatic Arts, New York City, has been secured. He will give his wonderful impersonation of Stephen Phillips' great drama, "Herod" as presented by him at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, two weeks ago.

Mr. Putnam will be remembered for his presentation of the story of "David Harum" at the Y. M. C. A. course a year ago, and it was then said the same was the best offered during that season. Tickets now for sale by all the High School, and at the usual places.

Made Address at Bethlehem.

Superintendent H. M. Maxson was last Tuesday the guest of President Drown, of Lehigh University, at Bethlehem, where he repeated an address on charity which he recently gave at Easton, the home of Lafayette College.

—Included in the list of White Label canned goods at Meeman Brothers are extra fancy peas, small green lima beans, the noted Hudson sugar, agas tips and large three-pound cans of solid packed tomatoes.

"SUBURBAN" ENGINES FOR JERSEY CENTRAL

New Type of Locomotive to be Installed on Newark and New York Division.

IT WILL SHORTEN TRIP

THESE NEW ENGINES WILL ALSO BE USED FOR ROSELLE-NEWARK TRAINS.

Are Built to be Used in Either Direction—Reasons For Their Use—Other New Rolling Stock Ordered.

With the elevation of its tracks in Newark the Central Railroad of New Jersey intends to make several new departures in the manner of handling its traffic there. The most important of the changes will be the adoption of new rolling stock, which will shorten the running time between that city and New York about five minutes.

About May 15 a type of locomotive new to Newark residents will be placed on the Newark division. It is known as the "suburban" model, and has been used with great success on the Illinois Central for its traffic near Chicago, and is used by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad for its rapid transit service.

It was the original intention of the officials of the New Jersey Central to place a turntable in the freight yards below Mulberry street, but this would entail the loss of the width of three tracks for some distance, and the room could not be spared. After a consultation between the heads of the various operating departments, it was decided to adopt the "suburban" type of locomotive for the Newark division, and accordingly a hurry order for fifteen of them was placed with the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia. The company expects to have the locomotives at work by June 1.

Among railroad men the "suburban" locomotive is known as a "saddle-back boiler double-header," and has many advantages for hauling trains on short runs. The principal objection to running an ordinary passenger locomotive backward is that the weight is not evenly distributed over the trucks. With the new style the weight is balanced over the driving wheels. This model of passenger locomotive has the advantage of getting under headway after leaving a station very quickly and is very easily controlled.

Officials of the New Jersey Central, in the department of motive power, estimate that the new locomotive will be capable, if desired, of making sixty miles an hour. The driving wheels are to be sixty-three inches in diameter, and, considering the stroke of the piston and boiler surface, it is estimated that the "suburban" should make a mile an hour for every inch in the diameter of her drivers.

It is the intention of the officials to substitute modern passenger coaches for the old ones now in service on the Newark division, and an order has been placed with the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company, of Wilmington, Del., for forty new passenger, combination and vestibule cars of the latest type.

That the Central intends to improve its facilities over its whole system, is indicated by recent orders placed with the Brooks Locomotive Works, of Dunkirk, N. Y., and with the Baldwin Locomotive Works, of Philadelphia, which calls for sixty locomotives, classified as follows: Fifteen switching, twelve suburban, twenty-five ten-wheel passenger, three "Chautauqua" fast express type, three "Atlantic" fast express type and two ten-wheel fast freight locomotives of the "4837" type.

Of the new locomotives, as many of the "suburban" class as are necessary to handle the traffic between Newark and New York will be placed on that division, and probably three of the switch engines will be used in the Newark freight yards.

As soon as the new freight depot on Mulberry street is completed, the old row of buildings on Lafayette street, now used as a freight station, will be removed, and the space filled with switches. When this is done, excursionists can be landed, if desired, on the sidewalk on Lafayette street.

With the completion of the elevated tracks change will be made in the schedule, and it is said that during the rush hours trains will be run at fifteen minute intervals. The "suburban" class of locomotives will also be run on trains to Elizabeth, Elizabethport and Roselle, and the schedule on that branch will be run improved.

Handsome New Office.

Charles H. Hand, the real estate dealer, has taken possession of a handsome new office on Watchung avenue, adjoining the one formerly occupied by him. The office is a modern one in every respect and well adapted for Mr. Hand's increasing business.

THE BOROUGH POSSIBILITIES

F. I. BLATZ HAS BEEN MENTIONED FOR RECORDER.

Some Other Places to be Filled When the New Council is Organized.

Immediately after the borough election in March the reorganization of the Borough Council will be effected. This will bring with it various appointments and the selection of committees.

It is a trifle early to guess what the completion of these committees will be and harder still to define who will be favored with appointments. There is some talk of booming Francis I. Blatz to succeed Thomas Dood as recorder. Whether the latter desires reappointment is not known, but even should he not be adverse to continuing in office it is understood that the mayor will be asked to consider other names. Mr. Blatz, it is contended, by reason of his profession as a lawyer, is admirably qualified to discharge the duties of recorder. He has a host of friends in the borough and it is believed that his appointment would be favorably received by the people generally.

As for the offices of chief of the fire department and overseer of the poor it is improbable that any change will be made. J. J. Stahl as the incumbent of the former place and William G. Debele, of the latter, it is declared have attended to their duties well, and there is no reason for making any changes.

Together with these two appointees, Dr. Albert Pittis will in all likelihood receive a reappointment as borough physician, in which capacity he has shown so much energy. The office is not a lucrative one, the fact being that it is rather expensive to the holder. Dr. Arthur H. Dundon's name has been broached in this connection, but, although he stands well with the political powers that be, it is considered that Dr. Pittis is the man entitled to the place.

TEACHERS TO MEET.

Regular Meeting of the Union County Teachers' Association.

The one hundred and first regular meeting of the Union County Teachers' Association will be held in Public School No. 2, Morrell street, Elizabeth, Saturday, Feb. 15.

The meeting will begin at 9:15, and the following programme will be rendered:

Opening exercises; some geographical comparisons, Principal R. E. Clement, public school No. 3, Elizabeth; discussion, Principal Ford, of Rahway, and Principal A. B. Kline, of Union; penmanship in the public school curriculum, H. P. Smith, of New York; discussion, Principal Thomas, of Cranford, and Principal George S. Ellis, of South Roselle; reading in the public school, Supt. A. J. Demorest, of Hoboken; discussion, Principal J. J. Savitz, of Westfield, and Principal I. W. Travell, of Plainfield.

An invitation has been sent out to all the county teachers requesting their attendance.

THE MODERN NOVEL.

"The Tale and The Character Study" Were Discussed by Miss Carroll.

"The Tale and the Character Study" formed the burden of the delightful talk given by Miss Antoinette Carroll, of New York, in the fourth of her series of lectures on "The Construction of the Modern Novel," at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Bowen, of Watchung avenue, yesterday afternoon. As at the previous talks there was a large audience present, in addition to the forty-three women subscribers to the course.

Miss Carroll pointed out the many distinctions between the novel of plot and incident on the one hand and that of character on the other. One is a story or narrative and the other a study of people. Scott, Stevenson and Crawford were cited as novelists dealing with plots and Thackery, Hawthorne, Eliot and Mrs. Ward as writers of character study.

REPAIRING ROAD.

Jersey Central Will Make Improvements Where Washouts Occurred.

The New Jersey Central is improving the L. & S. division, between Manch Chunk and White Haven, where the tracks were washed away by the recent flood. An entirely new rock ballasted roadbed has been built and several bad curves which heretofore existed between these points have been done away with. It is said that the company will also build a tunnel near White Haven and make other improvements involving the expenditure of a large sum.

Resigned to Go West.

General Foreman Thompson, of the Communipaw repair shops of the New Jersey Central, has resigned his position to accept a position with the Union Pacific at Cheyenne.

Miss Nettie Weiss, of Eggert street, is the guest of relatives at Newark.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 9, "The Pathway of Peace"—Text, John xiv, 25-31; Isa. xxvi, 3.

"Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you."

Peace is quietness. It is restfulness and calm. It is the absence of agitation, fear and restlessness. It is based on confidence or assurance of safety. It has an element of contentedness and comfortableness; a consciousness that things are going well, and I am secure from harm.

Christ's legacy is the priceless boon of peace. He is declared to be the Son of God, and Paul pronounced Him to have been the Creator and Preserver of all worlds. Yet in His earthly lifetime He said of Himself, "the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." In departing from among men in the visible world He made no will appointing heirs or kingdoms among His chief followers, as did Alexander. He gave no crowns during lifetime, as did Napoleon. His sole possession at death was an outer robe, which His Roman executioners tore in pieces and divided and an inner garment for which they cast lots.

Multitudes have fought and perished for the possession of His tomb, which was not His at all, but only borrowed for a few hours at most. Other multitudes have sought for the wood of His cross as a holy thing, and it was not His at all, but Roman, and may have tortured many before and after. Crosses, sepulchers and kingdoms in plenty shall His followers find, but these are not His legacies. What the world had never before fostered and nerved into power, except as He gave it, that is the heritage left His loved ones —peace!

Isaiah foresaw and foretold, "Thou wilt keep Him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."

Peace He left with us because we now have confidence in God's plans and purposes. Never before could men rest assured that things were working for good. The problem of Job was the problem of every man, but the end of Job was reached by few, and strife in mind of peace seemed the lot of most. Hope was hardly to be indulged, but endurance must be cultivated the best possible. All is so changed by the coming of Jesus. He endured to the end, and hope for us rises with His resurrection, and does not go when He ascends. We have not seen the end of God's working, but we have seen Jesus and believe in God. We trust and have peace.

His peace! That is more than the conviction that God is ruling and that "all things work together for good." It is more than passive resting in divine protection. It is the active outgoing of passionate heart affection and yearning desire to bless. It is adoration of the excellent One with absorbing soul fervor. "Having loved His own, He loved them unto the end." He gave Himself for and to them. They find peace in this love.

"Not as the world giveth." Surely not! Not given because, dying, it can no longer be hoarded or selfishly used. The world gives what it can no longer keep. Jesus gives what He will ever increase as ages pass and our capacity enlarges. Gifts boundless, refreshing, soul satisfying, the more of quenchless love, attested by death, abiding in endless life—perfect peace!

Two Great Truths.

The Christian religion emphasizes two great truths. First, it declares with emphasis that men do not have eternal life on the ground of their merit. In this it differs from all false, earthborn religions. False religions usually represent men as seeking God in order to secure salvation. The Christian religion represents God as seeking men in order to save them. Our Lord said to His disciples and through them says to every true disciple, "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." He says again, "No man can come unto Me except the Father which sent Me draw him." The Bible reveals no less clearly and emphatically another great truth, and that is men are saved from their sins, not in them.—Presbyterian Messenger.

Our Pledge.

I will earnestly seek for myself and do what I can to help others attain the highest New Testament standard of experience and life. I will abstain from all those forms of worldly amusement forbidden by the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church, and I will attend so far as possible the religious meetings of the chapter and the church and take some active part.

In Victory or Defeat.

Two graces need to be learned by every Christian—patience and submission under defeat and modesty in victory.—Christian Intelligencer.

Wherefore?

Wherefore dost thou doubt, O soul!
Wherefore dost thou doubt?
Cannot Christ, thy loving Lord,
Work when He will?

Has He not delivered thee
Many a trying hour?
Is He not the same today
In almighty power?

Has His blood not purchased thee?
Art thou not His own?
Through the whelming waters deep
Dost thou go alone?

Would'st thou know the reason why
All these things go wrong?
His will is short and we are long;
Change thy sighs to song.

He will surely bring to thee
Whatsoe'er is best;
Guide thee all thy journey through
To His promised rest.

Doubt Him not, O troubled soul!
Wherefore be afraid?
Arms of love encompass thee!
Do thou not dismayed!

—Churchman.

DRAMATICS GIVEN FOR REFORM CLUB MEMBERS

Richard Foote, Assisted by Others, Gave Them a Pleasing Programme.

EVERY SEAT WAS TAKEN

FIRST PART OF EVENING DEVOTED TO SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS.

A One-Act Play, a Scene From "Othello," and a Temperance Sketch Found Very Much Favor With Audience.

Every seat was taken in Reform Hall, Thursday, when a dramatic entertainment was given under the auspices of the Reform Club.

The meeting opened with the customary song service led by the president, John Goodwin, Scripture reading by Chaplain W. F. Richards and prayer by Lewis E. Barkalew. Short temperance talks were then given by the president, R. W. Hand and W. C. Smith.

The rest of the evening was then devoted to the entertainment which was under the direction of Richard Foote, the California tragedian. This part of the programme opened with a one-act play entitled "The Sculptor's Daughter." Mr. Foote took the part of the sculptor, "Hugo," the hunchback. Miss Adele Ohl was "Tina," the sculptor's daughter, while Miss Hoffman was "Bianca," the betrayed wife. Miss Suzanne Kranz was "Elena," the maid in waiting.

In part second the well-known handkerchief scene from "Othello" was given. In this Mr. Foote took the part of "Othello." Miss Kranz was "Desdemona," while Miss Hoffman played the part of "Emelia." The programme closed with an original sketch entitled "The Fallen Angel," by Mr. Foote. The sketch was given by Mr. Foote and John Goodwin, and pictured the death of a brilliant mind crazed by rum and morphine. Mr. Goodwin took the part of the rum seller, while Mr. Foote played the part of "The Fallen Angel."

During the evening Miss Kranz sang the famous "Magnetic Waltz," a masterpiece of Arditi, and she was recalled, when she sang for an encore, "Comin' tho' the Rye." W. C. Smith made a strong appeal for signers to the pledge. Mr. Foote was heartily thanked for his efforts on behalf of the club.

NEW JAIL.

Present One in the Borough is Far From Satisfactory—Change May be Expected.

There is some discussion in the borough over the advisability of abandoning the jail. A new one is felt to be sorely needed. The present structure, according to the statement of one councilman, is a disgrace to the municipality.

The interior is ill fitted; it is horribly cramped and there is no ventilation. After being closed all night the air is foul. This is the opinion of the councilman in question and there are many citizens who agree with his testiments in the matter.

As one boroughite says the time is fast approaching when it will be absolutely necessary to have a new structure for the purpose and there is no reason why one should not be secured at once. The mayor won't talk on the subject, but it will not be surprising if an early date action towards the desired end is taken by the Borough Council.

Census Reports at Library.

Through Hon. Charles N. Fowler the Public Library is regularly receiving the bulletins of the Twelfth Census. It has also received through the same source the first bound volume of the Census. Others will be received as issued. All census reports are placed in the reference department, where they may be readily consulted by those interested.

Prize to Section Foreman.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has awarded to John Burke, of Phillipsburg, a section foreman on the Belvidere-Delaware division, the first prize, $60, for having sub-division No., his section of track in superior condition to all the other sections at the last inspection by the road officials.

Will Meet Here.

It has been definitely settled that the State Society of the Loyal Temperance Legion will meet in the Sunday-school room of the First Baptist church early in April.

Course is Popular.

The course of normal study of the Sunday-school lessons recently adopted by the Plainfield Primary and Junior Sunday-school Teachers' Union is very popular. It has increased the attendance and interest in the meetings.

Miss Sarre, of New York, has been spending several days with friends in this city.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 9—Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—The pathway to peace.—John xiv, 25-31; Isa. xxvi, 3.

Departing friends are always filled with a desire to leave something to the loved ones who remain behind. This desire possessed even the Lord Jesus Christ, and as He was about to leave His disciples He bequeathed to them a priceless legacy. Christ had no material effects to distribute among them, but there are legacies even among men of more value than material things—a good name, a good example, an honorable position. Christ's legacy to the disciples and to us as His disciples was peace. About to go away, He makes this bequest to all who are His: "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

Peace is an inward blessing. It is the "result of equilibrated forces, the poise of antagonistic elements, held in check by one another. Of these the most placid lake hidden in the hills and reflecting the sunshine and shadows is a remarkable example. The peace Christ leaves is power to hold the wildest fear in pause, to still a clamor or hush a cry. It is the coming of mercy to a sense of sin, of life to the fear of death."

The peace of Christ has several distinguishing characteristics. 1. It is similar to the peace which Christ Himself possessed. "My peace I give unto you." Christ's life was one of continuous conflict, and when He uttered these words He was facing the crisis of it all; yet how calm His soul, how peaceful His mien, how absolutely His will harmonized with the will of God! This peace He promises us. 2. Christ's peace is real peace. "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." The world says, "Peace, peace," but it cannot give it. Christ not only speaks peace, but gives it. 3. It is perfect peace. Isaiah says, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace." Perfect poise within, peace without, peace with God, peace of conscience, peace at all times, peace under all events, God's own peace!" What a desirable peace for all to possess! The preservation as well as the gift of peace is promised. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed in Thee." Peace possessed may be preserved on one condition. Our minds must be stayed on God, on Christ, on heavenly things. The man who centers his mind supremely on earthly things cannot keep peace. It is only the man who centers his mind supremely on God who can do so. Such a man trusts God, and God never fails.

Christ's peace is needed by all men. Life is full of strife, of struggle, of conflict. It has well been likened to the restlessness of the ever boisterous sea. Under such circumstances the soul, that it may be calm, that it may be possessed in peace, needs Jesus Christ's way to it. "Peace, be still." Only He can give peace and preserve it. Is He your peace?

BIBLE READINGS.

Num. vi, 24-26; Job xxii, 21; Ps. iv, 8; xxxiv, 14; cxxii, 1-9; Isa. lvii, 21; Rom. v, 1; Eph. ii, 14; Phil. iv, 1-7; Col. iii, 17.

Christ's Law of Love.

Christ's law of love knows no exception. It embraces all that can be loved. It looks upward to God, the giver of all good, and outward to every human being. It excludes no foreigner and no enemy, for even the enemy is to be loved as oneself. Above all, it does not forget God. It recognizes Him as the universal Father, the Creator and blessing, the fountain of goodness and love, the author of life, temporal and eternal, through whose Son we have salvation, and it gives Him the fullest love of the heart. It reaches out beyond family and neighbors and citizens to all humanity everywhere, the most ignorant and degraded, and it despises none; it loves all. It is the grandest, the most expansive of all sentiments, that which most enlarges the soul, that which brings man nearest to God. If the church by its looks is lifting, and if it shall finally conquer the world, it is because its outreach is larger than any other that the world knows. Patriotism is noble, but Christian consecration is divine. Jesus gave the highest law, the most philosophical rule of pure ethics—nay, of pure religion—the world has ever heard, that beyond which human speculation cannot rise, when He laid down that law, not of justice or of righteousness, on which Confucius dwelt, but of love to God. Thou shalt love thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself."—Independent.

The Lifelong Promise.

Just as the man who makes his will is careful to add to the specific bequests a general one disposing of "the rest, residue and remainder" of his estate, so God graciously provides in His will not only for the specific needs of His children, but covers their ever conceivable necessity by such blanket clauses as that found in Deut. xxxiii, 25, "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass; and as thy days so shall thy strength be." God enriches every life with opportunities, and so just is the economy of God that if one is quite sure he has never had his opportunity it may be safely guessed that it awaits him yet. —Examiner.

Troubles Will Pass.

Now, I want you to think that in life troubles will come which seem as if they would never pass away. The night and the storm look as if they would last forever, but the calm and the morning cannot be stayed. The storm in its very nature is transient. The effort of nature, as of the human heart, is ever to return to its repose, for God is peace.—George MacDonald.

AMENDMENTS TO THE BY-LAWS

NEXT SESSION OF GRAND LODGE, A. O. U. W., WILL ACT ON THEM.

Text of the Proposed Restrictions to the Membership Rules of the Order.

The following amendments have been proposed and will be acted upon at the next session of the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of New Jersey. These amendments are to the code of laws for subordinate lodges, and relate particularly to the eligibility of candidates.

PICTURED SONGS.

Chief Feature of Endeavor Social at First Presbyterian Church Last Thursday.

Under the auspices of the Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian church a social and entertainment was given in the chapel of the church last Thursday. Mrs. Edgar Williams was chairman of the committee in charge and an unique programme was presented.

Part first was devoted to the rendition of "The Last Chord," by the church quartette, Elmer D. Cutting, R. Maxwell Honeyman, Sydney R. Titsworth, and J. Wilson Derby. A feature of this was the illustration of the song with steropticon views. Following it "The Christmas Carol," by Dickens, was read by Miss Josephine Petrie and also illustrated with handsome views. The lantern slides were operated by A. V. Searing, Jr.

After the entertainment a social time followed and refreshments were served.

STUDYING AIR BRAKES.

Superintendent Richey Says That Certificates Will be Necessary.

Superintendent Richey, of the New Jersey Central, has just issued an order to the effect that all engineers and firemen must report without further delay to the air-brake instruction car for the purpose of being instructed and receiving an air-brake certificate. The notice also says that "the time is near at hand when we will decline to allow men in the service who are not provided with such certificates and therefore every effort should be made to secure these certificates as early as possible."

SETTLED WITHOUT SUIT.

Wm. O. Baldwin Given Damages by North Jersey Company.

Through his counsel, Francis J. Blatz, William O. Baldwin, of West Front street, effected a settlement Friday with the North Jersey Street Railway Company for injuries sustained by two horses belonging to him. Five wire, belonging to the company, struck the horses in Newark six weeks ago, disabling them temporarily.

Clerk's Wise Suggestion.

"I have lately been much troubled with dyspepsia, belching and sour stomach," writes M. S. Mead, leading pharmacist of Attleboro, Mass. "I could eat hardly anything without suffering several hours. My clerk suggested I try Kodol Dyspepsia Cure which I did with most happy results. I have had no more trouble and when one can go to eating mince pie, cheese, candy and nuts after such a time, their digestion must be pretty good. I endorse Kodol Dyspepsia Cure heartily." You don't have to diet. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests your food. L. W. Randolph.

PUBLIC LIBRARY FOR THE BOROUGH PROPOSED

Would Probably be Under Control of the Borough Board of Education.

DONATIONS OFFERED.

BOROUGH SCHOOL LIBAARY NOW CONTAINS 3,000 VOLUMES.

Would Form Nucleus for a Larger Library—Site on Vine Street Has Been Suggested—Probable Cost of a Building.

From unquestionable sources it is learned that there are good prospects of a public library being established in the borough at an early date. The plans are not ripe yet but, although the proper authorities refuse to discuss the matter, it is certain that serious consideration is being given the subject.

It is said that the institution will be under the control of the North Plainfield Board of Education, although this has not been finally decided upon. More than one man of means in the borough has signified a willingness to contribute to such a worthy institution. Contrary to all precedent, Andrew Carnegie will not be appealed to to lend his financial aid to the project. The money will be raised in the borough, if possible, and it is thought that there are a number of men who will contribute liberally.

The Vine street front of the school property has been suggested as a suitable site. The only hindrance would be the likelihood of the school authorities wishing to reserve this tract for a school building as was mentioned in yesterday's Daily Press. A rough estimate has placed the cost of the proposed library building at $2,500, and it may be that this entire amount would not be needed.

The idea is to make it as broad as possible so far as the circulating privileges are concerned. It would be thrown open to the public at large, although the primary object would be to aid the school children and young people generally. A study there is a nucleus for the library. There are no less than 3,500 volumes in the Somerset street school at present. These cover a wide range, fiction, history, biography, art, science, travel, and general literature constituting the make-up. When Superintendent Homer J. Wightman assumed charge of the schools some five years ago there were but 500 books on hand, but under his wise administration the collection has been increased rapidly.

The State gives an amount in cash equal to the purchase price of any volume placed in the school, and this revenue permits additions to the library from time to time. All tuition fees collected by the school authorities are reserved for the library fund and there is a snug little sum on hand now for such purposes.

BOROUGH YOUNG FOLKS WEDDED JANUARY 29

The Event Was a Simple But Pretty One Attended by Relatives and Friends.

AT THE BRIDE'S HOME.

MISS JESSIE M. CODDINGTON MARRIED TO WM. D. MORRISON.

Ceremony Performed by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes—Couple Unattended —Will Reside in the Borough on Return From Honeymoon.

A quiet though charming nuptial event was the marriage of Miss Jessie May Coddington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Coddington, of Mountain avenue, to William D. Morrison, of Stone street, which took place at the home of the bride's parents, January 29.

An assemblage of relatives and intimate friends, probably numbering four score in all, had gathered to witness the festal occasion, and the tastefully adorned parlors were well filled with this joyous party, when the opening strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin" came as a signal that the happy affair was about to take place. It was precisely 7:30 o'clock when Miss Lela Kibbe, of Bound Brook, commenced this bridal march and simultaneously the radiant young couple wended their way down the broad stairway to the scene of the function.

Standing beneath an artistically formed bower of palms, ferns and smilax, the religious ceremony was conducted by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church. It took but a few moments and no sooner was it solemnized than one and all of the assemblage of guests made haste to extend congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Morrison. The reception lasted for several hours. At a late hour the happy couple slipped away, although not without being showered with the white grained symbol of good luck.

The honeymoon will be spent in Washington, D. C. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Morrison will reside with the bride's parents on Mountain avenue. After the pair had left last evening the young people enjoyed the merry waltz until the midnight hour was drawing nigh. As an additional feature a number with musical ability contributed in making the affair still more delightful by rendering vocal selections.

At the wedding the bride was gowned in embroidered net over white silk. She carried a shower of bouquet roses, but wore no veil. Neither the bride nor the groom was attended, it being the desire of both to have the affair as unostentatious as possible. The house was well decorated with roses, ferns, smilax and palms, neatly arranged about the spacious rooms and hallways. Among the guests were friends and relatives from New Brunswick, Bound Brook, Elizabeth, New York and Brooklyn.

The gifts to the bride were noticeable by reason of the quality as well as the unusual number. In the array were specimens of the jeweler's art in silverware, elaborate designs in cut glass, Haviland and Dresden china, Favrile glass, quaint shapes in bric-a-brac, and useful furniture as well. Not the least welcome in the collection was a check for a substantial amount and some large sized coins in gold.

NEW PARTNER.

There Will Be Some Changes to M. Silvert's Place.

M. Silvert, proprietor of the Somerset street jewelry store, contemplates enlarging his place of business. The adjoining store room, now occupied by George Richter as a barber shop, will be added to his present quarters. The partition between the two will be removed and the entire structure thrown into one large room.

These improvements will be made by February 15, at which time Mr. Silvert will enter into partnership with his brother, Carl Silvert. The firm name will be Silvert Brothers.

T. A. B. Reception.

The T. A. B. Society of St. Mary's parish will tender a reception to the committee and friends who assisted in making the recent fair a success. The affair will be given in the organization's hall on West Fourth street, Monday evening, Feb. 10.

Gave Clever Recitation.

Miss Rita C. Pund, of Willow avenue, who was one of the graduates of the Trenton State Normal School, made a decided hit at the commencement exercises Friday evening. She recited a selection from "As You Like It" and received much applause for her clever work.

Fred F. VanEps, of Westervelt avenue, has returned from New York, where he gave a performance at the Democratic Club, Thursday evening.

LITERARY.

Advanced spring and summer styles are pictured in The American Queen for February. Dainty embroidery designs are also shown and the "Beauty and Toilet" and "Domestic Science" departments are up to the usual high standard. Articles on "A Mother's Duty to Her Daughters," "Thrown on Her Own Resources," "In the Home Circle" and "Exercise for Growing Girls" are particularly interesting. The cover, in red and black, is one of the Malcolm Strauss series and is very attractive. Price of magazine, 20 cents per year. Office of publication, 31 East 17th street, New York.

The Cosmopolitan is fortunate in its fiction for February. Stories of love, adventure and humor from the pens of famous authors make the "Midwinter Fiction Number" vitally interesting. "S. Cohn & Son" by Zangwill deals with the Anglization of a Jew and the inevitable tragedy of his love for an English girl whose race prejudice triumphs over her nobler feelings. In "The Valley of the Dead" Thomas A. Janvie pictures the struggle of a dashing young engineer between love and duty. "Mr. MacGlowrie's Widow" is the title of a western story in Bret Harte's happiest vein, and "The Fish" is one of E. W. Kemble's best humorous skits.

Western subjects and contributors are receiving much attention in the Century Magazine this year. Upon the conclusion of Mr. Hough's three papers on "The Settlement of the West," illustrated by Remington, and before the beginning of those by Ray Stannard Baker on "The Great Southwest," for which the distinguished artist, Maxfield Parrish has been secured to make illustrations, a number of miscellaneous articles of special interest to the west will appear. In the February number these comprise "Chicago's Great River-Harbor," by Elliott Flower, illustrated by Reuterdahl, in which the subject is treated in its commercial and picturesque aspects; a story of Oklahoma entitled "A Government of the People," by J. W. Piercy, a new Indiana writer, with pictures by Justice; a tale of the Southwest, entitled "A Desert Romance," by Frederic Remington, with his own pictures; a paper on "Lincoln and Kentucky," by Cicero T. Sutton, with a new Lincoln portrait; and lastly, a group of "Poems of the West," dealing with gold-digging, the old Santa Fe trail, the prairie and the Sierra. An article underlined for an early number is "The Plains Across," by Noah Brooks, a record of personal experience in the early fifties, for which Mr. Remington has made some of his most novel and dramatic pictures.

Apparently the St. Nicholas has made a change pleasing to its readers in substituting a "long short-story" complete in each number for the usual instalment of a serial. In the March number the long story is a bright bit of fanciful, humorous nonsense by Bennet W. Musson, of Rochester, N. Y. "Through Fairyland in a Hanson Cab" is the title, and this title strikes the note of incongruity that characterizes the jolly story. Little Gretchen, the heroine, the Giant Gnome, the Poet and the Objector are sure to become favorites with lovers of Snarks and Boojums. It is enriched by Miss Cory's illustrations. Next to this in length is the story called "An Anglo-American Alliance," which is based upon the adventures of two American boys in the Bermudas. "Old Strategy" is a story of the hunting of mountain lions—A sport made popular by President Roosevelt's yet recent hunting-trip in the west. Minor features of the number include bright poems by Margaret Johnson, Grace Fraser and Edwin L. Sabin, and several short articles and stories. To the children themselves of the departments of the magazine offers great attractions, there being awards of prizes in three out of the four departments.

The leading article in the February Forum is a discussion of "The Settlement with China" by Mark B. Dunnell, who is not very optimisitic as to the outcome of the action taken by the Western nations after the Boxer rising. Major J. H. Parker answers the question "What shall we do with the Philippines?" by recommending their cession to some European or Asiatic power. "The Reformation of Criminals" is discussed by J. Frankl in Pitt, Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, in a paper which recommends the employment of systems of conditional pardon and parole, and the institution of reformatories for young offenders. Merrill A. Teague, assistant to Admiral Schley's counsel, writes on "Errors Touching the Schley Court of Inquiry," and maintains that the principal error was a "fatal misconception, or, rather, confusion of duty" respecting the function of the court. Other articles are "The Young Man with Nothing but Brains," by Truman A. DeWeese; "Wanted—An Opposition," by Alan P. Gilmour; and "The Care of Dependent Children in Indiana" by W. B. Streeter.

FOUGHT THREE BEARS.

California Hunter Dispatched Them All, Killing the Last of the Trio with His Knife.

United States Government Surveyor Stoner was in Ventura, Cal., the other afternoon and he told an exceedingly interesting and exciting story regarding the killing of an enormous she grizzly bear and her two cubs. Bert Cooper, a local hunter of some fame, did the killing. The corps of government surveyors is now at work in the mountains back of Nordhoff. Cooper is cooking for the crowd. Last Thursday Cooper was riding leisurely along a frequently traveled trail not far from the camp, when suddenly he encountered the three grizzlies all standing upon their hind legs. They were but 20 feet away. Cooper quietly jumped to the ground and led his horse to a nearby tree. Then he was ready for the fray. He had but eight shells. The next moment the she bear caught sight of the intruder and made a run for him. Sure of aim Cooper sent a bullet into her head, then two more bullets followed, lodging also in the head of the beast, and she was dead. The cubs wanted to decamp. Cooper fired the remainder of his shells, killing the first cub, but the other yet remained. This latter cub was on the run.

Cooper was not to be deprived of the prize, although without ammunition. It was a hand-to-hand fight. The rifle was broken on the cub's head without serious effect on the cub. Cooper quickly brought his knife into use and slashed the cub's throat. The fight lasted but a few minutes and there were no witnesses to the single-handed combat.

During the past week the surveyors, rancers and their friends have feasted on bear meat. The heart of the cubs was delicious, according to Stoner. A large quantity of bear's grease was rendered and is being utilized for cooking purposes. The she bear weighed over 1,000 pounds.

CAME IN VERY HANDY.

His Witness Per Just Made Up His Police Court Fine and That Made Him Happy.

The often-quoted declaration that it is an ill wind that blows nobody good was again substantiated, says the Washington Star, within the past few days in one of the local criminal courts. A murder trial was in progress. A witness for the government was called, but failed to respond. The assistant United States attorney conducting the prosecution announced that he could not proceed with the introduction of testimony until this particular witness appeared.

After some little delay it was learned that the man whose name had been called was in the toils of the police department, having been arrested the night before. The prisoner was located at the police court and a deputy marshal was sent for him. Further delay ensued before the witness was escorted into the criminal court to recite what he knew of the murder.

"Can I get my witness fee right now?" anxiously inquired the man, as he was about to leave the stand.

"Any particular hurry about it?" he was asked.

"Indeed there is," the prisoner-witness eye'shoed. "I've just been fined five dollars in the police court for disorderly conduct. I've only got $3.75. If I can get my $1.25 here it will just make up my fine."

The witness fee was paid.

AS YOUTH, SOLDIER, STATESMAN AND MAN

Thus Was the Life of President McKinley Described at Memorial Meeting.

WAS VERY INTERESTING

SERIES OF TALKS GIVEN AT FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH JANUARY 29.

Many Attended Despite the Storm and All Listened With Interest to the Papers on the Martyred President.

McKinley the youth, the soldier, the statesman, and the man, formed a highly entertaining quartette of subjects at the special memorial service held in honor of the martyred president at the First Presbyterian church, January 29. A goodly sized congregation was there and it is needless to say that the remarks of the various speakers were of much interest.

E. W. Williams was in charge of the meeting and he conducted it in an able way. The early career was dwelt upon by Edwin E. Gamo, whose paper was especially well written and delivered. Grove Hinman followed up Mr. Gamo's remarks by telling the story of McKinley as the soldier boy who rose from the ranks to a majorship by pluck and bravery.

It was assigned to Rev. C. E. Herring, the pastor, to express his views on the late chief executive as a statesman. The clergyman said that three things impressed him in studying the life of Mr. McKinley in Congress and in the president's chair. The first was that he was deferential to the opinions of sober advice; the second the third that he never sacrificed principle to personal glory.

Mr. Williams closed the formal discussion by telling of McKinley the man, having gathered his information while a Washingtonian. Incidentally he told the love the Nation had for him, as was shown in its attitude at the time the mortal blow was struck and during his agony.

When the meeting was thrown open for general discussion, Miss M. J. Petrie made a short address in which she pointed out a dominating feature of the man, and that was his domestic relations. The great love he bore his frail wife and home life in general was the topic she dwelt upon.

BEAR TAKES A RIDE.

Travels to Camp in the Sled of His Would-Be Slayers.

A Hunting Comedy Which Has No Equal in Game History—Brain Proves Himself a General, Yet Loses His Life.

As soon as the first snow fell and the hunters began to bring in the deer, Harry Grant, a student at Boston university, came to Kennebis, Me., for big game. On his third day near nightfall he came upon a big buck, about four miles from camp. He shot the buck and prepared to drag it in.

The snow was deep and soft, and before he had gone a mile he was tired, and wished he had shot a smaller deer. The more he thought it over the more he was convinced that his venison would keep until morning. Then he came upon an opening in the side of a hill, large enough to hold the body of his deer. Into this he thrust the carcass, and, hastily covering it with brush and snow, went to camp for a late supper.

During the meal Bill Gerrish, an old hunter, came in and sat beside the student, who told all about his hunt.

"Yes," said Gerrish, "I reckon I've got some game down Moose mountain way, too, though I guess 'tain't dead yet. He's got a trap onto him, though, that'll tell me where he is so long as the snow holds."

He then told Grant about a bear he had been trying to trap all fall. The animal was cunning, however, and would not look at any kind of bait so long as the snow stayed away, preferring spiced nuts and fat grubs in safety to beef and honey where there was a chance of danger.

After the storm the bear became more reasonable. On two nights he had spread the trap and eaten the bait by digging below the spread jaws and jarring the trencher from below. The third night he attempted the same maneuver, but was caught by the paw, because Gerrish had taken the precaution to set the trap bottom side up.

Gerrish had followed the wide mark left by the trap all day, and was going out to take up the trail the first thing in the morning. As Grant's deer was cached near by, they agreed to go together, with the horse and sled which Grant had hired.

As the horse and sled went down the hill the men saw something big and black and shaggy emerge from the mountain, something that grunted and growled a bit at the brush as if it were alive.

"By gosh!" cried Gerrish, "I thought you told me you had a dead deer, and, darn me, if you haven't a live bear." He glanced at the hind leg of the animal, and seeing there was a trap attached, continued: "It's my bear, too, for that's my trap. What's caught in my trap is mine."

"Shoot him!" yelled Grant, fumbling with the magazine of his rifle, which was half filled with snow. "Kill him first and find out who he belongs to later."

He had freed his rifle from snow and was bringing it to his shoulder when Gerrish broke in with:

"Don't shoot, you blamed fool! You'll sure kill the horse, and then the bull camp will laugh at us."

While the men were debating the bear had gained his feet, and, looking about for the cause of the trouble, saw the horse and made haste to seek reprisals for injuries. The animal leaped to the floor of the sled and was about to assault the horse from behind when the wooden toggle in a ring of the chain attached to the trap brought up on the hind runner.

The bear could just reach the horse by stretching out his forelaws. Before he had made the second grab the horse had started so that anywhere else was safer than there, and was off for camp at a three-minute gait.

Fifteen minutes or so later a frantic and badly blown horse dashed up in front of the camp, bringing in a live and very angry bear on the sled. As a hunter was along to explain the mystery, it was inferred that the bear had killed both men and then ridden to camp to make a report.

As soon as Brain had been killed and the horse had received treatment for his wounds and been put into the stable the full force in camp was sent out to search for the bodies of the men.

Two miles out from camp they were found, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, sound in body, but much distressed in mind. Slung from a pole carried between them were the head and forequarters of Grant's deer, the bear having eaten the hind quarters for supper after crawling into the hole late at night.

THEATRICAL.

Proctor's, Newark, continues to present the best vaudeville attractions obtainable. This policy has established the theatre in immediate favor. The daily bargain matinees are thronged with women and children and the theatre is packed at night. Mme. Herrmann, the widow of Herrmann the Great, is the headliner. She will present an act entitled "A Night in Japan," introducing all of the famous feats of legerdemain which brought her husband into such remarkable renown as a magician. Hoyt's "A Midnight Bell" will be the dramatic offering of the Proctor Stock Company at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street. The bill of continuous vaudeville at the Twenty-third Street will be headed by May Edouin who will be assisted by Fred Edwards in the presentation of a little comedy entitled "All in the Family." Shean and Warren will present a travesty act under the title "Kidding the Captain." The Fifth Avenue will have one of the Rogers Brothers in the starring piece, "Innocent as a Lamb," presented by the Proctor Stock Company as the leading feature of its bill. Clay M. Green has written a new travesty, following up the success of "Sherlock Holmes," and the Proctor Stock will tell of "Four Times Foiled, or, the Marriage of Hamaronec Marsh." These travesties by Mr. Greene will be a feature of the Proctor entertainments, hereafter. The return of Peter F. Dailey to Broadway will be a special event in next week's happenings at the Fifth Avenue. He will be seen in a sketch especially written to bring out his peculiar talents and will be supported by a special company. The Proctor Stock Company will present "A Bachelor's Honeymoon" at the Fifty-eighth Street, preceded by the clever little curtain raiser, "His Little Error."

Francis Wilson and company in the London Gaiety Theatre success, "The Toreador," are drawing immense audiences to the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York. In the character of "Sammy Gigg," the English footman, who, through an adroitly conceived train of humorous complications, is mistaken for the champion bull-fighter of Spain, Mr. Wilson is seen at his best. He has never had a role which gave him such exceptional opportunities for funmaking as his present character. This production is not, however, a "one part" piece. It possesses several characters which bear a very important relation to the development of the story. These include William Broderick as the toreador; Melville Ellis as Augustus Trill; Joseph Coyne as Sir Archibald Slackett; William Blaisdell as Pettifer, the animal trainer; Adele Ritchie as Dora Selby; Christie MacDonald as Nancy Staunton; Maude Raymond as Mrs. Hoppings, and Queenie Vassar as Susan, Gigg's sweetheart. These names, those of widely known players, indicate that the leading parts are all in trained hands and that the all possesses a most interesting sentimental vein, its chief aspects are comic. Intended mainly as a vehicle for the exposition of refined stage humor, it keeps an audience in a roar of laughter when not sitting entranced by the unusually fascinating musical numbers. Miss MacDonald has two songs which have been much commended—"The Little Yaller Boy Who Sang to the Moon" and "The Language of Flowers." Miss Ritchie has a song number which she sings very effectively, called "Keep Off the Grass." Mr. Wilson has made a special hit singing "The Hall of Fame," a topical song with a timely lyric and catchy air. "The Toreador" possesses every element of an unusually successful amusement.

The great Ouida love story, "Under Two Flags," which has been so successfully dramatized by Paul M. Potter, and the heroine of which, the impetuous, passion swept Cigarette, is played by Miss Blanche Bates, will begin a season at the Academy of Music on Monday evening. The colossal production at the Academy will be made by Charles Frohman, and will surpass all the big plays like "The Sporting Duchess" and "The White Heather" which were so popular and prosperous at this house. As is already known, "Under Two Flags" deals with the love romance of the Egytian girl, Cigarette, and handsome Bertie Cecil of the Guards. Miss Bates' acting should call forth every passion and emotion that Ouida has given to her heroine. One of the tremendous scenes of the play is the sandstorm in Chellala Gorge where Miss Bates rides a horse up the steep sides of the mountain and where she is saved from the Bedouins by the timely and providential interference of a fierce sandstorm. Nothing like this sandstorm has ever been seen upon the stage. It is an extraordinary reproduction of this awesome expression of Nature's greatest moods, and it never fails to arouse the utmost enthusiasm. This is only one of the enormous scenes of the production, every one of which fills the vast stage of the Academy. Miss Bates has entirely recovered from her recent severe illness. A capable company assists her in the presentation of this strong and phenomenal drama.

MEN PREPARED SUPPER AND ENTERTAINMENT

A Novel Social Held at the Seventh-Day Baptist Church January 29.

AN ELABORATE MENU.

MASTERLY EFFORT BROUGHT OUT UNSTINTED PRAISE.

Waiters in Burnt Cork and Dress Suits—Chafing Dish Was Well Handled—The Programme for the Evening.

The men of the Seventh-Day Baptist church gave their annual dinner and entertainment in the parlors of the church January 29. If anyone had previous doubts as to the ability of the men to manage such an affair, their suspicions must have vanished during the evening. The men not only arranged the dinner, as well as the entertainment, but they cooked everything that was served in the kitchen at the church and furnished the entertainment themselves. Everyone who partook of the dinner pronounced it the best, and the men were loudly praised for their masterly effort. As a result the Woman's Society for Christian Work, for whose benefit the affair was given, will receive a large sum as profit.

The rear parlor of the church, where the dinner was served, was made attractive in decorations of pink and green, streamers of these colors in crinkle paper were prettily festooned about the room, while on each table there was an artistic arrangement of the colors in the same kind of paper.

An attractive and unique menu was a true guide for all who desired to partake of the dinner. On the outside cover was a large letter "U" and in the centre was printed the word "Men." Inside appeared the following very appetizing menu:

Blue Points.

"He was a bold man that first ate an oyster."—Lord Rochester.

Tomato soup. Mock turtle soup.

"Oh, beware, my lord, of jealousy! It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock the meat it feeds on."—Othello.

Olives. Pickles. Celery.

"Sister of parsley, a nest thou addest! And thou, oh peaceful olive, e'er inactious!"—Young.

Creamed oysters.

"What ewer delight a quiet life affords."—Drummond.

Hot roast beef. Cold roast lamb.

Cold boiled ham.

"What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?"—Taming of the Shrew.

French fried potatoes.

On the last page of the menu card appeared an excellent picture of the church. The menu was prepared under the direction of Frank J. Hubbard, who was the chairman of the main committee and also chef. He was assisted by Dr. Frank Clawson, Dr. O. B. Whitford, W. H. Rogers, Ira N. West, while William C. Hubbard was treasurer of the committee.

Probably the waiters attracted the most attention. They were Dr. Marcus L. Clawson, head waiter; O. S. Rogers, Asa F. Randolph, George L. Babcock, Charles P. Titsworth, J. L. Pope, Wendell Mosher, Arthur J. Spicer and Paul Whitford. They were all blackened and appeared in evening dress. Each one proved himself an adept in the art of waiting at a dinner and the service was perfect.

Another feature was the serving of "toothsome" dishes, by Drs. Frank L. Clawson and O. B. Whitford. They looked after the chafing dish. There were a great many dinners served, after which those present enjoyed an entertainment prepared by a committee consisting of Arthur L. Titsworth, chairman; H. M. Masson, William C. Hubbard and F. A. Dunham.

The programme consisted of an instrumental trio by Ernest Wilcox, of Westfield, flute; Arthur Mosher, violin; and Arthur L. Titsworth, organ; selections by the Zobo quartette, H. J. Martin, L. A. Hummer, J. C. Martin, H. J. Martin, Jr., and L. M. Hummer, accompanist. There were also several recitations by Arthur R. White and other selections by the Zobo quartette.

The Constitutionalist

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A LIBRARY FOR THE BOROUGH.

While at first thought, the idea of a public library for North Plainfield may seem an excellent one, yet careful consideration tends to show that the plan is not an advisible one. Although Plainfield and North Plainfield are separate municipalities and are likely to be so for some time to come, they possess many interests in common and it is only a question of time when some arrangement will be made to consolidate them. With a Public Library, which is, particularly well equipped, on this side of the brook, it would be the height of folly to build another in the borough when Plainfield's institution can be made to answer the double purpose.

There are some residents of North Plainfield who much prefer to be entirely independent of Plainfield in all things. They have opposed any scheme of annexation or consolidation from the start and may be counted on to continue that policy. They do not, however, represent the entire population of North Plainfield. The two municipalities can accomplish a great deal if they act in unison. This subject of a Public Library can certainly be worked jointly with advantage.

Under the present arrangements, residents of the borough can take out books by the payment of a small fee. This is only fair as the city alone provides for its maintenance. If, however, the people of the borough are anxious to have a library, then let the Borough Council take up the matter and make some arrangement with the city authorities which will give the desired result. One effect would certainly be to increase the efficiency of the Public Library for both places.

A school library is an excellent thing. In this city, however, the schools have the use of the Public Library and find no use for an individual one. Some similar method might be used in the borough and then the North Plainfield schools would have the use of a much finer library than they could ever hope to acquire.

NOT TOO LATE.

While Plainfield is usually to be found well in the lead in any patriotic movement, a remarkable instance, may stir the country, there has been a surprising and very deplorable lack of interest taken in this city in the Mc. Kinley Memorial fund. While cities and towns all over the State have been turning in subscriptions to assist in the establishment of a proper memorial to the martyr president, William McKinley, Plainfield has not figured at all. New Jersey's share of the national fund has almost been raised but there is still a chance for Plainfield to make up to some extent its past neglect and add its share.

When the news of the dastardly attempt at the life of President McKinley was flashed over the wires, Plainfield felt the shock as keenly as did any other city in the land. Feeling ran high here and men walked about *with clouded brows and even neg*lected business to learn the latest news from the Milburn House at Buffalo where the dying President lay. When the hour of his death came, the whole city mourned and business was suspended while the people gathered for an impressive memorial service. With such a display of feeling then, it is surprising that the people should have so far forgotten it as to neglect to aid in this most worthy movement.

New Jersey has its State McKinley Memorial Fund Association which includes in its membership some of the most prominent men of the State. Governor Franklin Murphy is president. One of the local directors is Former Mayor Alexander Gilbert, who will be glad to receive subscriptions. They may also be left at this office and will be forwarded to the proper authority at once.

BOROUGH'S GREAT NEED.

Among the various projects which are being agitated in the borough, the one which plans to erect a new public school there is probably of most real importance to the people of North Plainfield. While everyone who has made any pretense at looking into the educational situation in the borough admits that it is only a question of time before the borough will have to provide additional school facilities, this question is as to whether or not the time has arrived to build a new school building.

The departments where the classes are particularly overcrowded are the intermediate and primary. Classes have to be divided and one section given instruction in the morning and the other in the afternoon. This condition is not conducive to the very best results but no blame can rest on Superintendent Wightman for following the course as it accomplishes the best results possible under the circumstances. The only way to solve the problem is to furnish more room.

It is likely that the North Plainfield Board of Education will act in this matter in the near future. The members of the board naturally feel considerable hesitancy in saddling the borough with any more debt but the school must be built and it takes money to build it. If the people of North Plainfield do favor the erection of a new school, it will be well if they let their opinions be known, particularly to the members of the school board. This subject is one of deep interest to the municipality over the brook and any communications regarding it will be gladly given space in these columns.

ELIZABETH WANTS NEW REGIMENT ORGANIZED

The Elizabeth Journal Relates How it is Likely to be Organized.

TO MEAN A NEW ARMORY

WOULD INSURE REGIMENTAL HEADQUARTERS AT COUNTY SEAT.

Might Also Mean a Colonel From That City—Rahway Wants to Get Back Into the National Guard.

Local military men, says the Elizabeth Journal, are busily engaged in formulating plans for the organization of the new regiment of the National Guard.

The matter has been laid before Major General Wanser, and has met with his approval.

The scheme, it is said, is to organize four companies, in the vicinity of Newark, which are to replace the four Paterson companies which are now attached to the First regiment along with nine Newark companies. This would locate the entire First regiment at Newark. Just what disposition would be made of the Paterson battalion is a matter of conjecture. It is possible that it would be placed in the proposed regiment with the two Elizabeth companies and the two companies to be organized here. This would make the new regiment an eight company regiment. The two Elizabeth companies which would retire from the Second regiment would give an opportunity for a company at Rahway, as it is understood the members of the old Rahway company are anxious to re-enter the State service.

It has not been decided whether the new regiment will be an eight or twelve company regiment. Should it be a twelve company regiment the Rahway company would probably be attached to it instead of entering the Second. The balance of the regiment would be taken from nearby towns, and this county would consequently have two battalions, thus insuring Elizabeth regimental headquarters, which would indicate that the colonel of the new regiment would be a resident of the county seat.

An armory is also among the possibilities of the present year, and, as it has been pretty thoroughly agitated, Elizabeth stands a good chance of securing one.

There is talk in Rutherford, but it is not above a whisper, that a battery of artillery will be formed in that borough, which practically means the reinstatement of the defunct company L.

The prime movers in this matter of a new regiment feel disinclined, at this time, to give out any information. But there is little doubt that considerable work is being done on the quiet.

TRYING FOR TEAM.

Y. M. C. A. Gymnasts and Athletes Held a Trial Contest Saturday Evening.

Under the leadership and watchful eye of Physical Instructor C. E. A. Heywood, twelve young men belonging to the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, contested, Saturday evening, for places on a representative team. Seven are to be chosen and these will compete at Newark on March 8 with four other teams from that city, Orange, Jersey City and New Brunswick, in an inter-association athletic and gymnastic meet.

Of the young men who competed, nine made a very creditable showing but as yet the percentage have not been announced. There were seven events in all, athletic and gymnastic, most of which were very difficult. As in previous contests, those doing very well receive a stated number of points and these will be computed and the result made known this week.

Since the First . . .

ROCHESTER LAMP was made there have been many "like" it, no good as it, placed upon the market. Some were even sold in the improvements on it. One by one they fell by the wayside, and to-day there is but one lamp that is really better, and we make that, too.

THEATRICAL.

Klaw & Erlanger's production of the Drury Lane spectacle, "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast," was presented for the one hundredth time at the Broadway Theatre in New York last week Saturday evening. The indications are that it will continue here for several months longer, playing to capacity to the end of its run as it has done since the opening performance, Nov. 4. Such a really phenomenal success has never before been scored in New York City, where the greatest hits in American theatrical history have been achieved. The explanation of this is that this production is in every detail just what it is represented to be; and even more, for no matter to what a pitch of expectation one's anticipation is worked up, it is more than fulfilled. Otherwise, it gives the pulic its money's worth of amusement in an entirely unexpected quantity of high quality. Orders for seats by mail which, when accompanied by remittances, are immediately responded to, have come so numerous that Jacob Litt, manager of the Broadway Theatre, and Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger have found it necessary to establish a mail-order bureau in charge of an expert. The prices range from 50 cents to $2, and to secure the best seats to be had one has but to order them by mail, directing the letter to Jacob Litt. The Wednesday and Saturday matinees are principally patronized by women and children.

ROBBED ON STREET.

Mrs. Burke Held Up Under Washington Street Bridge Early Saturday Night—Pocketbook Taken.

A daring holdup occurred under the Washington street railroad bridge, early Saturday evening when Mrs. Jennie Burke, of 203 East Front street, was robbed of her pocket book containing 63 cents.

Mrs. Burke was returning from La-Grande avenue. It was then 7:30 o'clock. Owing to a break, the lights under the bridge were out. A man sprang out of the darkness and demanded Mrs. Burke's money. She refused. He then seized her by the throat and partially choked her and snatched the pocket book from her hand. He ran up Cottage place.

Mrs. Burke was so badly frightened that she could not scream and is unable to give any discription of the highwayman.

NOTHING IN PARTICULAR.

An Insignificant Beginning of a Thrilling Runaway Saturday.

A spirited horse belonging to Dr. J. C. Anderson, left standing on Plainfield avenue near Fourth street, Saturday afternoon, became frightened at nothing in particular and ran away. It was attached to a cutter which immediatley turned over and at South Second street, was thrown into the curb, badly battered. The frightened animal continued to Front street, thence to town and was captured near Madison avenue. It narrowly escaped knocking several pedestrians down. It was not injured.

Cannot Return.

A telegram was received by Superintendent Homer J Wightman, of the North Plainfield public schools, stating that Miss Anna L. Holcomb, one of the corps of teachers, would be unable to continue her duties. Miss Holcomb was called to her home in Trenton a few days ago on account of the death of her sister.

Made Good Returns.

The dance of the Seventh-Day Baptist church cleared nearly $30 from the supper given in the church last week. This is very good when it is considered that the expense was considerable.

Purchased Business.

Smalley Brothers, of North avenue, have purchased the retail meat business of the late John R. Marsh, at Scotch Plains. The firm commenced business at the branch shop Saturday.

Final Arrangements.

A meeting of the masquerade ball committee of the West End Hose Company was held Saturday evening. Final arrangements were made for the affair.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement is announced of Miss Adeline Manning, of Grant avenue, and Luther Anthony, of Lamington, Somerset county.

TEN YEARS AMONG KROOMEN

MISS M'ALLISTER PICTURED HER LIFE THERE AS MISSIONARY.

Spoke to Sunday-School of First M. E. Church Sunday Afternoon.

An informal though graphic description of the Kroomen was given in an interesting address made by Miss Agnes McAllister before the regular monthly missionary meeting of the First M. E. church Sunday-school, in Vincent chapel, Sunday afternoon. Together with the pupils were a number of others more or less active in this branch of the church work and all listened attentively to the address.

Miss McAllister described the Christian work being done at Garraway station, on the Kroo coast of west Africa. She lived there among the heathen for ten years and has reaped a fund of knowledge concerning these strange people. This information formed the basis for her talk.

After telling of the work being done and the needs of the mission station as well as its branches she dwelt upon the habits and customs of the people. They are, said she, eager to embrace Christianity. In this connection she *told of the actions of one of the neigh*boring kings after she had visited his tribes. He sent children as ambassadors repeatedly imploring her to come and live in his kingdom or send some other missionary. Finally she was able to send her sister, who had arrived for missionary work.

The mission station is in need of substantial buildings. The people are poor and are largely dependent on the Methodists in this country for support. $10,000 is the sum estimated as the cost of the proposed improvement. At present the mission is a frame structure and not at all suited for the purpose. For the past year, Miss McAllister has been in this country endeavoring to raise the required funds for the purpose. In the near future she proposes to return to her field of labor.

A LOVING CHARACTER.

Funeral Services of Mrs. Frances Mattison Were Held Sunday.

The funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Frances Mattison, of Somerset street, who died Friday, were held Sunday afternoon, in Trinity Reformed church, Rev. Cornelius Schenck officiating.

The pastor in the course of his sermon dwelt upon the loving Christian character of the departed woman. He said that he had enjoyed her friendship before coming to Plainfield and that when he accepted charge of the local church Mrs. Mattison was one of the first to extend to him a cordial welcome. Speaking of the uncertainties of life, Rev. Mr. Schenck said that only death was sure in mortal life. He added that the character of immortality depended upon the character of mortality.

After the services the remains were borne to the home on Somerset street and Monday they were taken to Millstone, N. J., where the interment was made. The pall bearers were L. W. Randolph, J. T. Case, Andrew Lutkins and W. H. Ludlow.

DEATH OF MRS. HICKS.

Almost a Centurian When She Passed Away Saturday.

Mrs. Mary G. Hicks, aged ninety-three years, died Saturday afternoon at the home of her son, John Hicks, of West Third street. She had been in poor health for the past two years and her death was not unexpected. Death was due to a complication of troubles.

The funeral services took place at the house Monday, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, of Flemington, former pastor of the Monroe Avenue church of which she was a member, Rev. John McMurray and Rev. L. R. Howard, of Hope chapel, officiating. The remains were taken to Richford, Vt., her former home, for interment.

Glorious Old Age.

Mrs. Mary L. Force, one of Plainfield's oldest inhabitants, today passed her eighty-seventh birthday. Mrs. Force resides at the only homestead, 203 Watchung avenue, and is in good physical condition, her only ailment being head trouble and loss of memory.

ALL SCOTCH PLAINS HONORED HIS MEMORY

Business Was Suspended During John R. Marsh's Funeral Thursday.

HELD IN AFTERNOON.

FUNERAL SERMON PREACHED BY REV. I. S. BRAKER, FORMER PASTOR.

Assisted in Conducting Services by Rev. G. M. Shott—An Impressive Service—There Were Beautiful Floral Tributes.

Scotch Plains, Jan. 31—The funeral services of John Radley Marsh were held yesterday afternoon from the late home when the residents of this town and vicinity gathered to pay respect to one of its oldest and most respected citizens. The business of the *town was practically suspended dur*ing the hours of the service, in recognition of one who for nearly a half century had been identified with its every interest.

The service was held at 2:30 o'clock. When Rev. G. M. Shott, of the Baptist church, began the obsequies, the house was filled with sorrowing friends. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. S. Braker, formerly pastor of the Baptist church and a personal friend of the deceased. Mr Braker chose for his text Epistle of James 4:14:—"What is your life? It is even as a vapor that appears for a little while and then passes away."

The speaker said that at such a time a minister was expected to speak words of admonition and consolation. Death was likened to an intermingling of him who had gone on before, while those left were to look to Him who doeth all thing well. Mr. Braker said that he would not speak reminescently of the deceased, for he had lived and moved among the townspeople for many years and all could learn some helpful lesson from the life just closed.

During the service Elmer E. Runyon sang tenderly the favorite hymn of the deceased, "There is a Green Hill Far Away." The expressions of sympathy in the way of flowers were many including set pieces and cut flowers. At the close of the service all were given an opportunity to look upon him who was respected in life and honored in death. Interment was made in the family plot in the Baptist cemetery.

STRANGE SOUNDS IN BARN

SOUNDED LIKE A REVOLVER, BUT PROVED TO BE A FIRE.

Patrolman Myers Discovered It, Sent in Still Alarm and Rescued Horses.

While on his way to police headquarters with a prisoner, at 10 o'clock Friday evening, Patrolman Myers heard a number of cracking sounds, similar to pistol shots, emanating from the rear of 324 West Third street. He made a hurried investigation but found nothing suspicious and then continued to town. On reporting the matter to Roundsman Flynn he was immediately sent back. On reaching the place, he found a barn rented by Nathan Feinberg to be on fire inside.

He sent a still alarm to headquarters and then, breaking the doors open, rescued two horses just in time to save them from suffocation. He also pulled out a number of wagons. On the arrival of the department the blaze which was about the lower partitions, was quickly extinguished. The loss is placed at $35 on the building only which is covered by $100 insurance. It is owned by Mrs. Samuel Dreier. The contents are insured for $350.

*Chief Doane made a strict examina*tion this morning, but could find no explanation for the explosions. Feinberg declared he had nothing in the barn which would cause them.

LET GOOD WORK GO ON.

Mayor Smalley Wants to Complete the Widening of Somerset Street.

Mayor Smalley is anxious to complete the work of widening Somerset street during his term in office. The improvement, extending from Green brook to Jackson avenue, has received the approval of the citizens generally, and now His Honor is anxious to let the good work go on.

In discussing the subject Saturday, he said that he believed in the motto "well begun is half done" and that he wanted to see the "boulevard" completed. The proposed improvement will extend from Jackson avenue to Johnson's drive. The Mayor is much in earnest about the matter and intends to carry out the project, provided he receives the necessary support from the councilmen.

Want Modern Houses.

Owing to many improved dwellings being erected in Plainfield and vicinity, real estate owners have difficulty in renting some of their properties which are not of a modern character. These new houses are generally leased at a price not much in excess of that charged for the older houses, and the people prefer to pay a little more and have modern dwellings.

Supervisor Resigned.

A. A. Scott, who has for some time past been supervisor of the New Jersey Central from Somerville to Easton, including the High Bridge branch, has resigned his position.

Designated as Local Preacher.

Francis E. Whiteside, of Drew Theological Seminary, has just received from Presiding Elder G. W. Smith a license designating him as a local preacher.

PRODUCED WAX WORKS AND KINDER-SYMPHONY

Double Bill Attracted Many to Entertainment at Park Club Friday Evening.

SYMPHONY REPEATED.

MRS. JARLEY'S WAX WORKS WAS THE NEW FEATURE.

Laurens H. VanBuren Took th Leading Role—The Remarkable Characters Which He Exhibited—They Made a Success.

The same degree of success, that attended the first presentation of the kinder-symphony at the Park Club recently, characterized its reproduction Friday evening, when, as an additional feature, Mrs. Jarley and her wax figures appeared for the edification of the large number. The entire entertainment was a great success and much praise was given those who arranged it as well as those who took part.

Mrs. Jarley and the wax figures appeared first. Laurens H. VanBuren was a typical Mrs. Jarley and so closely did he represent the feminine, that many of his best friends did not recognize him at first. At the start C. E. Murray and Percy C. Long were introduced as Alphonso and Clarence, the pages. It was their duty to bring the figures on the stage and see that each one properly performed.

The first figure was George Washington in the person of Harry Curtis. He carried the familiar hatchet and, upon being wound up, showed how the cherished tree of his father was cut down. Next appeared Mrs. Carrie Nation in the person of Miss Helen Phillips. She also carried a hatchet and, striking automatically with this weapon, there could be heard the breaking of glass.

The two-headed girl, Miss Frances Weir and Miss Alice Barlow, was introduced and the announcement that one was "more weird" than the other caused the young women to smile perceptibly, while the audience was convulsed with laughter. A clever representation was that of "the boy who stood on the burning deck eating peanuts by the peck." This was Arthur Peck, who held a measure marked "A Peck" and automatically ate peanuts. F. O. Ball was the well-known train boy who is to be found on the railroad trains selling candy. Upon being wound up he cried his wares in the familiar tone and produced abundant laughter. After wards he sold the candy in the audience.

Clifford M. McGee, as a representative of the North Plainfield fire department, travelled about the stage drawing a small toy engine. In his regimentals he made an ideal fireman. Miss Grace E. Overton represented Mrs. Winslow, of soothing-syrup fame. She carried a stuffed baby in one arm and a bottle in the other. Every time the baby squealed it was heroically treated to syrup.

Mrs. Clifford M. McGee, as the seeing violets, was chased by Morgan T. Townsend, who represented "Low, the poor Indian." The last figure was Signor Squeaker, in the person of Raymond A. McGee. After being wound up he sang several pathetic ballads and gave an exhibition of "heavy work" in an opera.

It was the duty of the pages to keep the figures wound up and oiled. Failure to do this often worked disastrously. After all had been brought forth the button on each was touched and each one did his or her little part in unison. The effect was mirth-provoking. Throughout this performance the applause was hearty.

During the intermission the audience was favored with two pleasing solos by Miss Starr, of New York, accompanied by Miss Saidee Mae Howell, after which the kinder-symphony was given. In the absence of Wallace Guilford, the former leader, George T. Rogers took his place and conducted the musical in a very satisfactory manner. The performance was precisely the same as given before and won additional praise. After the performance, William Demarest took a flash-light picture of the group.

The affair was given under the direction of the entertainment committee, of which Mrs. Charles A. Reed is the chairman, while Mrs. Weir-Lewis assisted in the giving of Mrs. Jarley and her wax figures. H. A. McGee assisted by giving the announcements throughout the evening.

DEATH OF MRS. MATTISON

WIFE OF DR. W. E. MATTISON PASSED AWAY AFTER LONG ILLNESS.

Is Survived by Husband and Three Children—Had Been South for Her Health.

After a long illness, Mrs. Frances Mattison, of Somerset street, died Friday afternoon, at 4 o'clock. She was the wife of Dr. William E. Mattison.

Mrs. Mattison was born in Hunterdon county in February, 1833, and spent her early life in that vicinity. In January, 1853, she married, her husband being a practicing physician there at that time. They removed to the borough in 1883 and resided there ever since. Together with the husband three children survive her. They are Miss Nettie Mattison, who is a school teacher at Demarest, Ga.; Miss Frances Mattison, who is also a school teacher, residing at Biltmore, North Carolina, and Edward Mattison, of New Brunswick.

In November, 1899, Mrs. Mattison went south and spent two years at Belmar, in the hope of regaining her strength. She did not improve as rapidly as desired and the return north did not prove beneficial.

TRACK ELEVATION BLOCKED

CHURCH HAS DELAYED THE WORK IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

Aldermen Were Ready to Act on Pennsylvania's Offer When Protest Was Made.

The repeated efforts of the Pennsylvania Railroad to secure needed municipal legislation to enable it to elevate its tracks through New Brunswick, have again been blocked, this time by a church.

A contract embodying the company's plans for the elevation of its tracks through that city and for a new passenger station was presented to the Board of Aldermen at its last meeting. The company having receded from its former position of insisting on the city paying $11,200 toward the improvement as well as being liable for damages by the proposed closing of certain streets, there appeared to be every indication of the contract being ratified.

Before action was taken by the Aldermen, however, Rev. Monsignor O'Grady, of St. Peter's church, New Brunswick, sent a committee of his parishioners to protest against the elevation of the tracks because of the noise and inconvenience which the elevated tracks would presumably cause. The rear of the church is but six feet from the tracks. The result of the protest was that but four members of the board voted in favor of the committee's report on the contract, and the matter was again delayed.

GOOD MUSIC BY COLLEGE BOYS

EXCELLENT CONCERT GIVEN BY THE RUTGERS GLEE CLUB.

At Y. M. C. A. Hall for the Benefit of Borough High School Athletic Association.

A large audience was pleasantly entertained by the Rutgers College Glee Club at the Y. M. C. A. last Friday. The affair was held under the auspices of the North Plainfield High School Athletic Association and it was truly enjoyable.

Although there were a few vacant seats the house had been sold and consequently no loss was sustained by the association by reason of unfavorable weather. From the first until the last number on the programme there was no limitation to the applause given.

"Bow-wow-wow," a college song, was the initial selection and it greatly amused the people. Mr. Shivler's tenor solo in "My Moonbeam Babe" was superb as was also the piano solo of Mr. Flanagan, which followed. A comic recitation by Mr. Fisher caused an encore which was equally well delivered. A bass solo by Mr. Jackson, which followed a humorous selection by the club, showed to advantage the rare voice possessed by the singer.

Mr. Wilmot's tenor solo, "The Gondolier's Song," was greatly appreciated as was demonstrated by the liberal applause it received. "Little Cotton Dolly," sung by a quartette, Messrs. Wilmot, Fisher, Gaston and Jackson, was one of the treats of the evening's entertainment. The performance closed with another college song "On the Banks of the Old Raritan," which was effectively rendered.

Election of Officers.

The Young Women's Mission Band, of Trinity Reformed church, will meet Friday afternoon in the parlors of the church. There will be the annual election of officers and it is earnestly hoped every member will be present.

AMATEUR PLAYS MADE BIG HITS

Entertainment at Casino to Aid Women's Exchange Was Very Successful.

MUSIC RECITAL FIRST.

Miss Harriette Cady Gave a Fine Programme, Then Followed Two Short Sketches Which Were Cleverly Given by Amateurs—Mr. Cock Made Hit.

An unqualified success was made of the amateur preformance given at the Casino, Saturday afternoon and evening, in aid of the Woman's Exchange. The triple headed bill entertained and amused the society audiences which well nigh crowded the house to its very doors on each occasion.

Preceding the farce and the comedietta, each of one act, a recital was given by an accomplished pianist, Miss Harriette Cady was the artist. Her programme was pleasingly selected, and each number in turn was a musical treat particularly enjoyed by the musically inclined. Time and again she responded to encores and this lengthened considerably the first part of the affair. The programme, as printed in Saturday's Daily Press, was followed.

The second part consisted of a clever farce, originally written for the "Hasty Pudding Club," of Harvard University. It was entitled "My Awful Chum," and although it was but a one-act sketch it contained as many laughable situations as the average four act farce. Careful training and a keen realization of the intent of the lines was portrayed in the acting of those in the dramatis personæ.

The scene of the sketch is the room of Hudson, Burleigh & Co., at Johnny Harvard. It should be stated that the "& Co." was Topsy, a pet dog. The thread of the story was the trials and tribulations of a student at college, on the occasion of the visit of members of his family. Steve Hudson, was of the general run of collegians. He was always hard pushed for money, which when he got it was "blown in." He fears that some of his sporting friends or cronies will call, while his mother and sister are visiting him in his room, and sure enough a boxing master calls. He introduces the tough as his room mate, who thy are anxious to meet. The real crony watches on from behind a screen and finally "squares himself" by exposing the unlucky son and bringing in view another student, dressed for a rehearsal in the garb of a equestrienne. The latter is desirous of meeting Steve's sister and the manner in which he is presented, adds much humor to the play.

Harry L. McGee, in what might be called the leading part, that of Steve Hudson, was exceedingly good, giving much impression to the role which was intended to depict an embarassed student. As Ned Bureligh, the chum, Frederick W. Goddard showed the grace and ease on the stage, which has characterized his laudable efforts in the past. Thomas Howe VanBoskerck, as Jack Randolph, the tormentor of Ned, did some really good acting, but the atelier attraction in the cast was William R. Cock, who as Professor Sheedy, the pugilistic friend of Steve, brought down the house time and again. He is too well known to need any special mention for his praiseworthy efforts. The parts of the mother and daughter of young Hudson were well taken by Miss Maud VanBoskerck and Miss Otterson.

"A Needless Strategem" was the appropriate title of the comedietta, which followed after a short intermission. This one-act play was written by Thomas J. Williams and it is a piece presenting an opportunity for the display of dramatic abilities. While courting a widow, a fickle lover also pays attention to her maiden sister, who finally becomes the real object of his affections. Another swain, residing on an estate adjoining that of the wealthy widow, becomes madly fatuated with her and his hatred of his supposed rival furnishes endless amusement. An elderly friend of the incorrigible lover, returning from abroad, attempts to help him out of his dilemma, by concocting a story about being robbed of all the fortune of the friend. The story of the loss fails to have the desired effect on the widow who is truly in love with her neighbor, but now proclaims that she will be loyal to the unhappy lover. Finally the friend draws out of the neighbor his desire to marry the widow and also breaks the news to him that the accepted man is in love with the sister. On top of this comes a revelation to the widow, who finds the ardent poetic effusions of her lover written to her sister. Then the friend arranges matters satisfactorily to all, and the curtain is rung down.

In this play again the work of William Cock, as Otway Sheridan Browne, the friend, was the most conspicuous. While it was not the leading part yet Mr. Cock brought to it so much strength of humor that it became a centre of attraction. William Pelletier as Peregrine Dotts, the fickle lover, received liberal applause for his funny interpretations, while Frederick W. Goddard, as Charles Hetherington, the widow's neighbor, was at his best. Charmingly realistic was the work of Mrs. C. E. Brooks, who as Mrs. Walsingham, the fascinating widow, portrayed her part in a commendable way. Notice should also be made of the well directed efforts of Miss Maud VanBoskerck, who represented Laura, the sister. The scene was laid in the morning room of Mrs. Walsingham's country home.

The stage settings in both plays were of a nature seldom seen outside of a large opera house, and the elaborateness of their detail added unquestionally to the enjoyment of the affair. As for the "make-ups" of the members of the two casts, they were faultless in every respect, especially so that of Mr. Cock in "The Needless Strategem." Douglass S. Houghton, of New York, who has managed like affairs before in this city, acted as stage director, and his ability was demonstrated by his labors at these theatricals.

During the intermissions Welton's orchestra, of Elizabeth, rendered some catchy tunes, which served to add additional life to the performance.

Saved Him From Torture.

There is no more agonizing trouble than piles. The constant itching and burning make life intolerable. No position is comfortable. The torture is unceasing. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures piles at once. For skin diseases, cuts, burns, bruises, all kinds of wounds it is unequalled. J. S. Gerall, St. Paul, Ark., says: "From 1863 I suffered with the protruding, bleeding piles and could find nothing to help me until I used DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. A few boxes completely cured me." ENDEAVOR DAY AT TRINITY

ANNIVERSARY OF ORIGINAL SOCIETY OBSERVED MONDAY EVENING.

After a Few Short Talks the Meeting Was Thrown Open to All Present.

In commemoration of the twenty-first anniversary of the general organization, the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church held a meeting, last Monday, which was largely attended despite the chilly weather.

Edgar F. Sheppard was in charge of the meeting. After he had offered an opening prayer, he made an informal address on the topic "How Has the Christian Endeavor Society Helped Me in My Christian Life?" During the course of his remarks he enumerated the many ways in which membership and activity in the organization serves to improve the spiritual welfare.

A letter from the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, who was unable to be present, was read by the leader of the meeting. The subject of his communication was "How Has the Christian Endeavor Society Helped the Church?" and it pointed out the various ways in which the organization proves beneficial to the work of the church by its active co-operation. "How Has the Christian Endeavor Society Helped the Sunday-school?" formed the basis of a talk given by F. K. Smith. The speaker is the assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school and his words were from personal observation and consequently especially valuable.

After the formal addresses were concluded the meeting was thrown open for general discussion and quite a number of the members grasped the opportunity to tell how much they have been helped by the good influence of the society. During the evening special music was a feature which served to make the meeting all the more enjoyable. The singing was hearty and the instrumental music accompanying it was particularly good. The orchestra consisted of Mrs. G. W. Sauma, violin; Miss Lillian A. Force, piano; and Elmer P. Wheeler, flute.

Just as a Fire

The cold, like the fire, should be promptly dealt with. When you begin to cough, use Allen's Lung Balsam. It will certainly heal the sore throat and lungs and 'it may save you from consumption.

I could not hear the ticking of a watch. One year's time we fought our battle to win, and this kept on getting worse, until I had my hearing entirely taken away.
I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, result. It is better of by physicians, among others, the most celebrated aurists in the country, but they told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.
I then, saw your advertisement, accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to instructions, the noises ceased. I can hear to-day better few weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours.

THE RACE PROBLEM.

Nature Will Settle It in the Course of a Few Years.

Strange Ethnological Condition of Affairs in Louisiana — White Population Gaining on the Negroes.

[Special New Orleans Letter.]

CONTRARY to general belief the white population of Louisiana is gaining over the negro population. The whites are multiplying more rapidly, and the negroes are increasing only in a small relative per cent.

This is a strange revolution of the races! Louisiana has for nearly 100 years been "black," to use a local expression. This colored majority was about 100,000, but, within the past ten years, the whites have been gaining and the negroes relatively decreasing, and the whites are now about 80,000 in the majority. This increase is not because of the immigration of whites to this state, so much as it is to the greater per cent. of the deaths of the blacks. The death rate in New Orleans, and in other cities of the state, is about 34 negroes in 1,000, and only about 17 whites to the 1,000. In the country the percentage of blacks is about 20 blacks against about 15 whites to the 1,000 inhabitants. These figures are somewhat alarming to the white planters of the state, who look far ahead into the labor market. The principal cause of this decrease of negroes, in proportion to their numbers, is their ignorance of sanitary laws, and the indifference to those laws by the few who do understand them. As a rule, the negroes rarely send for a physician when sick. They resort to the old fatally methods of curing by herbs, and physicking by old women. Many of them resort to the laying on of hands, and curing by faith. This is more in practice than is generally known. They refuse all aid of the plantation physician, and resort to voodooism, and the casting out of the "evil spirit." They believe that half of their ills are due to being "bewitched" by an enemy. No argument can influence them, and when they sicken they die, unless the voodoo doctor can throw off the spell.

The use of cocaine, especially by the women, is another cause. The use of this drug has spread very extensively within the past few years, and even the children are addicted to the habit. The excessive and increasing use of whisky is another cause of the decline of the negro in Louisiana. Within the past few years saloons have multiplied largely. The colored districts in the cities are thickly dotted with groggeries, and one is found at every crossroads, and on nearly every large plantation. In the cities the decimation of the blacks is particularly shown in the negro quarters, and it is also shown that crime is on the increase in those districts. It is the same in the country. While the negro population is smaller than the white population, at least two-thirds of the crimes are committed by negroes. This is mainly due to the use of whisky. The negro is usually peaceful and docile. While a large number of negroes have, within the past few years, migrated to the northern cities, the main causes of decrease of their numbers, relatively, are as stated above. The lower part of the state, notably the "German coast," which was largely inhabited by rich sugar planters before the war, furnishes a striking example of the decrease of the negro population. For many years after the war this was the "black district" of the state, and it is perhaps the most healthful section of Louisiana, but near access to New Orleans, and the multiplicity of saloons on the "coast," has had its effects. In the "hill" parishes of the state the whites are not gaining so rapidly over the negroes as they are in the lower portions. The saloons are not so numerous, proportionately, but the sanitation is better than in the cities, and the smallpox is not so prevalent. This disease flourishes most among the negroes, especially in the colored districts of the cities.

The migration of negroes from the rural districts to the cities is also causing the planters much concern. The negro has learned that some people live without working, and he thinks that it is easily done, just as do some youths who leave the farm for the city, where they have read of people making fortunes in big speculations. This migration is partly filled by white people settling in the country parishes, but they farm on their own account. The planter must look elsewhere for labor. This migration of the negro also affects the landowner who has subdivided his large plantation and rented it in tracts to the colored farmer. He must now look elsewhere for tenants. By this migration and decrease from other causes the planter and the large landowner are no little concerned over the situation. The acreage is reduced, and the number of small farmers has decreased within the past year from these causes. The white farmers are taking steps to decrease this migration by offering even better terms to their colored tenants and better wages to their day laborers. This decrease naturally affects the labor market, and the profits of the white farmer. They also discourage all acts of lawlessness by mobs, for when one lynching occurs it demoralizes an entire neighborhood. In the rural districts, where officers are few compared to the population, life and property are as a rule poorly protected, and where there are a number of saloons there is always more or less trouble between the worst element of the negroes and whites. But the better element of both white and colored discourage this warfare, as it unsettles labor conditions and keeps alive a spirit of race hatred. For underneath the surface there lies that feeling in the negro that he was wronged of his liberty by his white master, and his descendants have inherited that bitterness. This is human nature. The white man believes in the superiority of the Caucasian race, and while he is willing to accord to the colored man his rights under the law he draws the color line of equality there.

The negro population of the slaveholding states at the beginning of the war between the states was about 4,000,000. It has increased about 100 per cent. While the white population is increasing from immigration, as well as from natural causes, the negro population, at least in this state, is now keeping pace with the white people. This furnishes a subject for ethnologists, and for the labor statisticians. The inequality in numbers is small, comparatively, at present, but it seems, from the conditions at work, that it will grow larger within the next few years, and, in the course of a generation, the labor conditions of the south will assume quite a different phase, and the race problem may cease to be a disturbing issue. There are causes at work which only students of economics may fathom, or discern, by reasoning from cause to effect. It is also argued by those who have studied the negro question of the south, that he is retrograding morally, or, rather, that there was more religion among the 4,000,000 negroes of slavery days than there is now in double that number. While a slave, the negro was required by his master to attend church. There was an upstairs "gallery," or corner downstairs for the negroes in the white neighborhood churches, and the slave had the same religious instruction that his master had. While the negro was not taught to read, and it was punishable by law to teach him, it was not considered that it was necessary to educate him in order to Christianize him. There was very little whisky drinking and lawlessness among them. They could not get the whisky, and had little opportunity to leave the plantation. This may be considered negative goodness. Small acts of lawlessness were punished by the master. The negro of to-day is a great church-goer also, but how much of his religion is on the surface, and how much is genuine, he alone knows. He "gets" religion in an emotional manner, perhaps. It may not last long, but it is effective while it does last, and for that he is entitled to credit.

While the cotton area has been decreased by the migration of negroes from this state, the white farmers are now giving more attention to truck farming, and since the recent building of railroads in north Louisiana this industry has become profitable. The farmers can get their produce to market more readily, and thus get almost enough ready money to support the farm. The railroads have given an impetus to this industry, and not only garden product for the cities is being more generally planted, but the farmers are turning their attention to fruits. Until a few years ago they considered cotton as king, and planted nothing else. Several failures of crops reversed the olden-time belief in this staple.

SKELETON DINNERS.

Meals That Abound in Spirituous Fluids, But Are Deficient in Solids.

"What's the matter, old man? You look as though you had been up against it." remarked a well-known man about town the other day, meeting another of the same ilk, reports the Philadelphia Record.

The comment was not uncalled for. Bleary-eyed, pale and nervous, the young man thus addressed did show every evidence of extreme dissipation. He pressed both hands to his throbbing head and ejaculated: "Skeleton dinner last night. Never again. Once is enough for a lifetime." Then he groaned.

"What's a skeleton dinner?" asked his friend.

"It's a dinner with nothing to eat," was the reply. "What you luck in food you make up in drink. Friend of mine gave it at his house last night. First course, oyster shells and cocktails. Second course, hot water in bouillon cups, with sherry on the side. Third course, papier mache fish, "mother by mother." Next course, lamb chops with the meat scraped off and claret. Then the skeleton of a turkey and gobs of champagne. By that time the thing seemed so funny we didn't care whether we got anything to eat or not. So we drank champagne till the cows came home and the roosters were crowing. That's a skeleton dinner. If you ever sit down to a table where an alleged humorous host begins by setting oyster shells before you, it's up to you to play foxy."

OLD TOWN OF MENDON, MASS.

Monument in Commemoration of the First Massacre in King Phillip's War.

A few days ago the old town of Mendon, Mass., unveiled a monument in commemoration of the first massacre in King Philip's war.

The town was purchased of the Indians in 1653, and on July 14, 1675, the date of the massacre, contained about 26 settlers scattered over a wide territory. The town was eight miles square, and from its very start no towns have been erected. Matunas, chief of the Niamue Indians, led a war party into the settlement, killing Rachel Puffer and her son and a son of John Rockwood, and burning all of the buildings. Other settlers escaped, and the town was abandoned for some years. It is stated, says the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, that Matunas was one of Eliot's converts, but he was not converted sufficiently to cure him of savagery.

The monument was a huge bowlder properly inscribed, the gift of Gen. William F. Draper and his two brothers.

One chief interest in Mendon comes from naming one of the towns of Monroe county for the old home in Massachusetts. Some resident of Mendon, in Massachusetts, must have brought the name with him to western New York.

EXPLOSIVE CASKS.

Those That Have Once Been Filled with Nitroglycerin Are a Nuisance.

"One of the most puzzling of many difficult problems that confront our transportation companies is that of the empty casks that have contained nitroglycerin," said a manufacturer of explosives. "The wood of the casks becomes so saturated with nitroglycerin that in explosiveness it equals the nitroglycerin itself.

"It does not pay, nor is it safe, to refill the casks. To burn them is out of the question. If left around they are a constant menace, for while all are prone to show their respect for a dangerous explosive, there are few that think any harm can come of a kick at an empty barrel. There is nothing to do but to explode the casks.

"This is generally done by placing them on open ground and firing a rifle bullet at them from a safe distance. The concussion produced by the bullet is more than enough to bring about an explosion. And there is one good thing about those casks when they go off—there are no fragments to pick up, as they are completely disintegrated, so to speak, being blown into minute particles."

Foods That Impair the Sight.

Some foods are very injurious to the sight. A case was brought under the notice of an eye specialist in which the eyes of a whole family were affected by eating rabbit pie. In each instance, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, the patient had become afflicted with a peculiar defect of vision that is technically known as "failure of accommodation." Stale sausages and sour cream cause a weakening of the sight known as "amblobia." Blindness resulting from eating tainted fish has been found almost impossible to cure, and quinine is also responsible for some persons' half-blind condition. This drug affects the optic nerve in a manner that sometimes ends in blindness.

A Four-Yard Apology.

The letter of apology recently sent by the emperor of China to the German emperor is described as an example of the highest art. It is painted on a single piece of yellow silk over four yards in length, and is beautifully illuminated with dragons, flowers and arabesques, embroidered in gold thread and silk of various colors. The work is so perfectly executed that at first sight the embroidery is mistaken for enamel. The letter is inclosed in a yellow silk envelope, which is also elaborately embroidered, and fastened by ivory studs of the most ingenious character.

OVERTRIMMED SKIRTS.

French Models Lately Imported Are Covered With Frills.

All the newest skirt models show much trimming and ornamentation. A favorite model is made with three gored flounces edged with applique or irregular velvet dots. The first ruffle reaches half way down between the waist and the knee. The second reaches a little below the knee, and the third forms the fullness at the bottom of the skirt. For tall and slender women there are skirts laid in tiny ruffles from the waist down. These ruffles are edged with narrow applique of lace. Accordion plaited skirts are also very stylish, and they have for sole trimming rows of narrow velvet or appliqued figures of lace.

Draped effects are appearing on many of the French models, but the draping is very slight and conforms to the lines of the figure. There is a perceptible increase in the fullness of skirts around the bottom, and this is probably to go with the rapidly increasing size of sleeves.

The black broadcloth costume in the illustration is one of the most stylish models of the season. The jacket is made blouse fashion and is double breasted, fastening with two rows of jeweled buttons. The high collar and wide revers are of chinchilla. The sleeves are full and are gathered into a stitched band of the cloth. The flaring cuffs are edged with the chinchilla. The skirt is made very simply, with a stitched band heading a gored flounce.

The smart hat is of the chinchilla trimmed with a bird of paradise.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

EVENING CLOAKS.

Many of Them Show Oriental Effects.

Evening coats, many of them, show an oriental effect. This is caused by the wide, baggy sleeves, the straight bands of fur and the rich linings. Persian applique finds place on many of them. Another favorite trimming is on the medallion order and is composed of ovals of painted or figured chiffon, lace, etc.

The evening coat in the cut is made of black peau de soie, laid in tiny perpendicular rucks. There is a wide flounce about the bottom, and this flounce is ornamented by clusters of four horizontal tucks. The garment is fastened by means of jeweled clasps and buttons. The sleeves have a wide flare and are finished by rolling cuffs of ermine. The wide collar and lapels are also of ermine. The lining is of flowered silk in pompadour colorings.

The hat which goes with this is made of ermine and black velvet and is trimmed with two bunches of velvet chrysanthemums.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

REGARDING COATS.

What Fashion Dictates For Carriage, Street and House Wear.

A lovely carriage cloak recently seen was of red cloth trimmed with straps of red velvet and edged around with Persian lamb. The high collar was of Persian lamb, and the wide sleeves were lined with the same fur. There were also deep, tight cuffs which buttoned at the back.

Short coats with long stoles in front are entirely of fur. They are made to look extra handsome by the addition of jeweled buttons.

Fur of every description is trimming costumes at present, and skunk is to the fore again.

A popular English innovation is the tea coat. This is made of lace brocade, moire or velvet. It is worn over a lace chemisette with a pearl dog collar instead of the usual lace collar. Speaking of lace, many handsome evening coats are being made of it. They are trimmed with rich bands of dark fur and are made over linings of chiffon and rich silks.

A simple blouse costume is today's subject for a sketch. It is made of gun metal gray camel's hair. The coat is made with a stitched band simulating a yoke and a series of strapped points down both sides of the front. The stand up collar and narrow revers are of violet velvet, and the crush belt is of the same. The sleeves are full and gathered into a cuff of the velvet. The skirt is made with the side seams ornamented with the same tiny strappings which characterize the jacket. Otherwise it is perfectly plain. The blouse opens over a front of heavy cream lace.

The severe little tailor made hat is of pearl gray felt trimmed with bands of the violet velvet.

SHOES AND SLIPPERS.

The Day of the Mannish Foot Has Passed—Evening Styles.

All evening shoes have long, narrow toes and are very much embroidered. It seems that footwear is sharing in the general elaborateness of dress. Useful and effective shoes of white kid are embroidered with gold beads. Morocco leather is now dyed in the most delicate tints, which are charming with black or white gowns. In black shoes embroidered in jet there are many novelties, among which the Louis XV. models are extremely chic.

The illustration shows an evening gown for a young girl. It is made of pin dotted net over pale green taffeta. The skirt has a graduated flounce hidden beneath a multitude of ruffles. The waist is made decollete, with tiny sleeves reaching half way between the shoulder and the elbow.

THE NEW YEAR HATS.

Never Before Have They Been So Picturesque and Becoming.

The hats of the new year are charming. Very smart is the three cornered hat in various pale shades or all black, trimmed with a quantity of feathers. A becoming mixture of white beaver, old lace and one black quill, on which depends the success of the hat, is most elegant. If a woman possesses a few good ostrich feathers and an old paste buckle, she can get a big velvet or dopping felt shape and make of it a model picture hat. ed. They carry no date and always look lovely, provided they are well poised on a well arranged coiffure.

A pretty trimming to a fawn colored French felt hat consists simply of a draping of lace. This is always in good style and practicable.

In today's picture we have a tailor made of brown cloth trimmed with stitched bands of a lighter shade of panne. The jacket reaches some little way below the waist line. The edges are outlined with a wide stitched fold of the panne. The collar is wide and droops over the shoulders sailor fashion. The sleeves are full, with Louis Seize cuffs. The belt is of the panne. The skirt is made with two strappings of the panne. It is plain otherwise.

The pretty hat worn with this costume is of tan velvet, trimmed with a fancy quill.

FANCY BOAS AND MUFFS.

Particularly Handsome Effects Are Noticeable in Chiffon and Tulle.

Fancy boas and muffs are now all the rage. Even in furs the plain styles are in the minority. The most handsome muffs are trimmed with a fierce looking animal's head and a bunch of tails. Many of them give an appearance as if the animal were inside of the muff. The head and front paws hang out at one side and the tail and rear paws at the other. It is not unusual to see three kinds of fur in one muff, and elaborate trimmings of chiffon and artificial flowers are quite in the order of things.

Boas of chiffon and tulle in all the pale colors are fashionable for evening wear. But perhaps pure white or black is the most dressy.

Boas entirely composed of loops of black louisine ribbon are serviceable for street wear.

In the picture we have a particularly effective set—hat, boa and muff. The hat is made of soft ruchings of white tulle and is trimmed simply with a wide black velvet ribbon placed, scarf fashion, around the crown. The boa is composed of an infinite number of frills made of the white tulle edged with the narrowest of black chantilly insertion, and the muff is made of the same dainty black and white combination. Both boa and muff are decorated with smart bows of black velvet.

of all sorts. The coarse, rather open patterns of lace make most effective blouses over a soft lining of pale colored liberty satin or chiffon.

One of the latest ball gowns is shown in the picture. It is made of pale yellow chiffon dotted in silk. The entire costume, both waist and skirt, is laid in tiny ruffles edged with the narrowest silver ribbons. There is a sash of pale yellow liberty satin and a huge shaded yellow poppy forms a corsage ornament. The dress is made up over pale yellow net, which allows the occasional gleam of satin lining. The skirt has a wide flounce added invisibly beneath the ruffles to give the proper flare about the feet.

FANCY DRESS MATERIALS.

For Ordinary Wear Hairy Weaves and Zibelines Are Ultra Smart.

There is a great variety in fancy cloths this winter, especially in long, hairy materials, which are made with the idea of imitating fur as much as possible. Some are spotted with what is known as the snow effect, others are striped, and still others are quite plain, blue, deep red and gray being the favorite colors. Plain faced cloth, however, has been most adherently, especially among stout women, as hairy materials increase the size of the figure.

Zibeline has now assumed a zebra like appearance in blue and black. Its only trimming is white passementerie buttons, which are placed in three rows down the waistcoat or chemisette under the coat, jacket, bolero or bodice. A recent costume made of this cloth had a short round Eton, with the belt and strappings of blue panne heavily stitched on in yellow silk. The skirt, which was walking length, just escaped the ground. Blouses with bishop sleeves are worn beneath the jacket of these short suits.

The dressy child's frock in the illustration is made of pale blue louisine silk. The waist has a yoke made of lace insertion and tucks, and the sleeves are also of the tucking and insertion. The rest of the waist is of the plain silk, with two rows of lace falling in cascades down the front. The belt is of stitched ribbon, with a lace rosette directly in front. The skirt is laid in pin tucks until it nearly reaches the knees, where it is allowed to flare. A small ruffle around the bottom further completes the fluffy effect.

THE SOURCE OF LIFE

Prof. Loeb's New Theory Explained and Illustrated.

The Process of Decay and Death Be Arrested by the Use of Electricity and Chemicals—A Biological Problem.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

THAT man, as we see him, is an immortal being temporarily clad in a material body, orthodox people believe, "all theories to the contrary notwithstanding." That life constantly comes to us by influx and is not a personal attribute most people concede. But the scientist in his laboratory is very apt to set aside such ideas and seek an explanation of all phenomena in matter alone. One learned professor said: "Humanity is but a transitory phase of the evolution of an eternal substance, a particular phenomenal form of matter and energy. What we call soul is, in my opinion, a natural phenomenon."

Mr. Edison is quoted as stating his belief that every atom of matter is intelligent, deriving energy from the primordial germ. He thinks the intelligence of man is the sum of the intelligence of the atoms of which he is composed; that the integrity of the human body is maintained by an agreement of the atoms and when disharmony arises between them they wish to get away and seek new relations, causing the death of the man, as such, while the matter itself remains indestructible. He further believes that there is a close relation between electricity and vital energy; that there are only two things in the universe—matter and energy.

As far back as any records have been unearthed, life, in some of its many aspects, has been the favorite study and it will continue to be so as long as finite man exists.

About 20 years ago Dr. Weissman, the noted German biologist, published a series of papers which attracted world-wide attention. He argued that "natural death" never occurs in the lowest forms of animal life, the unicellular structures. He says that it is not an essential attribute of living matter or necessarily associated with reproduction; but rather an acquired advantage to the species. If an animal of the higher order were immortal, escaping all fatal accidents, slight injuries would in time be likely to overtake it and one portion of the body after another might lose its integrity, the creature becoming unfitted to reperform its kind, or for other uses. He further states that although capable of being destroyed by heat or poison, an immense number of low organisms do not die. They carry the potentiality of spending life so long as necessary conditions are fulfilled.

The theories of Prof. Loeb, of Chicago university, attract a great deal of attention just now. He has charge here of the best equipped biological laboratory in the country and each summer conducts experiments at the Marine biological laboratory at Woods Holl, Mass. He has certainly proved that cell life may be indefinitely prolonged—whether he will ever discover a means of increasing the number of years a person may remain on this earth is problematical. Just why so many people who expect to be "better off" when they are unhampered by their material bodies should cling to earth life as they do is a mystery that will never be satisfactorily explained. With those who believe that matter is all and that when their own particular atoms get into a quarrel that will be the end of them the case is, of course, different.

But however this may be, nearly every individual would, when death came near, be grateful for an elixir which would delay his approach to a more convenient season. The results of Prof. Loeb's study of the phenomena of life are, at least, very interesting. They have been largely along the lines of muscular contraction, nerve impulses and the development of eggs, these processes being all essential to life. His conclusion is that death is but a morphological process and not a cessation of action, that electricity is the basis of life acting upon the nerves and involuntary muscles. He is said to believe that all life is the result of physical processes and that the process of death may be arrested by the employment of certain agents. He has been very successful in his experiments along the latter lines with the unfertilized eggs of sea urchins. If these be taken from the mother and placed in sea water, they usually die within 24 hours. If fertilized, of course the death process is stayed and the animal develops, hence on fertilization an agent is introduced which counteracts the death process. It occurred to Prof. Loeb to search for some artificial agent which would serve the same purpose. Cyanide potassium is one of the most deadly known poisons. This he selected because it does not destroy cell structure, while checking life phenomena. His idea was to suspend all animation in the life cells for a period of time. For one week the eggs remained in a weak solution of the poison and when removed at the end of that time were found capable of being fertilized either naturally or artificially, developing to the eight-cell stage. Hence Prof. Loeb was enabled to read some very interesting papers before the American Physiological society which recently met in this city, in which he contended that, in certain forms, life may be indefinitely prolonged. He inquires why, if death be merely cessation of action, should the employment of potassium cyanide fail to induce it. He concludes that the poison checks the death principle inherent in the egg. It is said that what is true regarding the vital processes of our living organism, is true of those processes in all living organisms. Since the lowest form of cell life is as much alive as the higher animals, the possibilities are, to say the least, startling.

CELL DEVELOPMENT.
(Primary, Secondary and Tertiary States in Forming a Starfish.)

After proving that the death process, which is born with life into the sea urchin's egg, may be arrested before fertilization, he proceeds to show how the potassium cyanide acts upon it, and he declares that it is by bringing its electrical energy to bear. He thence concludes that a process may be found for electrically prolonging man's residence on this terrestial globe. No other power of stimulus effects germ life in so universal and effective a way as electricity. He began experiments to learn just when electrical loss became poisonous and when stimulating. Some salts killed sea urchins' eggs, and he sought to vitalize them. Salts charged with positive electricity interfered with life processes. Those charged negatively stimulate contraction. Both positive and negative are necessary to arrest death processes. Electricity not only nerves the muscles but causes action of nerves controlling the muscles. Dr. Albert Mathews, Prof. Loeb's assistant, here came in with his theory regarding the structure of the nerves, which, if it prove true, will cause a reconstruction in that branch of science of physiology. He holds that the nerves are not little strings of cells, as has been supposed, but hollow threads filled with a thin jelly-like substance, which he styles colloidal solution. He contends that every particle of this solution is charged positively with electricity, and may be stimulated by negative charges of electricity, which cause it to thicken and change from a thin to a thick jelly. The more strongly the solution is positively charged the more readily does it resist the negative charges.

RESULT OF EXPERIMENT.
(Starfish Developed from Cell by Prof Loeb's System.)

The solution may be thickened by heat as well as negative charges, rendering it more stable and the nerve less irritable. Cold acts in the opposite manner.

The gelatinous substances are composed largely of fat. Anaesthetics dissolve the fat. Food nourishes by furnishing a form of energy which in nature is essentially electricity. The thickening of the colloid solution causes along the little hollow nerve tubes, which extend from the nerve cells of the brain, spinal cord and ganglia to different parts of the body, and cause "nerve impulses."

If some application of these electrical theories can be utilized for the prolongation of human life, Prof. Loeb's name is likely to live forever though whether as that of a real benefactor to his race is doubtful. It might not tend to a survival of the fittest.

INDIAN SWEAT BATH.

Part of the Religious Ceremonials of the Havasupais.

Quite Effective and Even More Heroic Than the Russo-Turkish Bath of the White Man's Civilization.

[Special Arizona Letter.]

IT IS not often that a white man is invited to participate in the religious ceremonies of the Indian. Indeed, so seldom does it occur that those who think they know all about Indians disbelieve assertions of those who have been more highly favored and privileged than themselves. Few people, at first sight, would suppose that a sweat bath was a religious ceremonial. And yet it is. Among many of the tribes of the southwest a Russo-Turkish bath is taken every week as a religious function, and he is remiss in the performance of his religious duties who fails to unite with his fellows in this ceremony.

Just think of it! Nasty, dirty, unclean, savagy, filthy, useless savage"—in the face of this weekly bath.

My friends, the Havasupai Indians, of Cataract canyon, in northern Arizona, are great believers in the religion of the sweat bath. Consequently they are a very cleanly people. They have one advantage over many Indian tribes of the southwest in that their homes are built not far from the running stream, the Havasu, the Blue Water, from which they gain their name. They can take a sweat bath in the sweat house and then step out and enjoy a plunge in the delicious waters of the flowing stream.

Twice have I been privileged to take part in this ceremony. On the first occasion I was invited to the home of the shaman, or medicine man, and there, with the Indians who were to participate in the ceremony, I was invited to a repast of green corn mush, the most delicious dish made from green corn with which I am acquainted. The corn in the milk is ground and then thrown into hot water until it becomes thick. When well cooked it is seasoned, poured into basket bowls and served. I had two old Indians, one on each side of me, when the basket of mush was handed to me by my hostess. To refuse to eat would have been an offense against the laws of hospitality, and to refuse to allow the Indians by my side to partake of that which was offered to me would have been discourteous. Yet we did not have spoons, and I knew that as soon as my friends were ready they would dip their not-too-clean fingers into the savory mess. I bade them wait awhile, and then, calling to my hostess, I asked her for a spoon, which I knew she would produce in her stores. When she brought it she washed it seven different times, so that I might be quite assured of its cleanliness. When I took the spoon I described a half circle in the mush in the front of the basket. Then, calling the attention of my friend on the right, I pointed out to him that all the mush on the right of the half circle was his, and to my friend on the left that all on that left belonged to him. Respectfully waiting until I began to eat it was not until after I had eaten several mouthfuls that they dipped their fingers into the dainty dish and scooped up into their mouths the food they so much enjoy.

After our repast we hurried down to the side of the Havasu, where a wicker frame as shown in figure one was constructed. One of the men speedily lined the inside of the ground with newspapers as follows. Others built a fire into which a number of large rocks were placed. Still others brought blankets and covered the frame work so as to make it steam proof.

When everything was ready, I, as the guest of honor, was invited to the sweat and enter first. As I did so the shaman and one other Indian followed me. One of the attendants then put in a couple of red-hot rocks, the flap was let down and immediately we were in the darkness of the sweat house, or tohohwa, as the Havasupai terms it. Immediately the shaman began to sing, and as well as I could I joined in the song. It was a prayer of thanksgiving to Tocobuya, their good god, for having given them the sweat bath and many other good things. By the time the song was ended the place was pretty hot and I thought we had about had enough, but when the flap was opened more hot rocks were put in, the flap let down, and another song commenced. Before long the sweat was rolling down my body in a number of little streams and I was quite hot when the song ended. Instead, however, of being allowed to go out when the flap was opened, the attendant fend put in more hot rocks and a basket bowl full of water. I was just reaching for the water, when the flap was let down and the shaman's attendant poured the liquid over the red-hot rocks. In a moment the sweat house was full of live steam and I gasped and struggled for breath, for I seemed to be inhaling liquid fire. Just as I thought I couldn't stand it another moment the shaman began to sing another song, and, not to be outdone by the Indians, I determined to stand it out and joined in the song with as much fervor as I could muster. At the close of the song the flap was again lifted, more hot rocks and water were put in and we had another taste of the live steam. This time I could stand it no longer and struggling toward the flap, I managed to grasp out that I must go to the water. The shaman replied that we were all going, for our bath was at an end. With delight I sprang forward without further words and dived headlong into the swimming pool close by. Never in my life did I experience a more delicious sensation over the whole of my body than when I felt that water surrounding me. It was just cool enough to be pleasant and yet not cold enough to give one a severe shock. For half an hour I stayed in and enjoyed it to the full, and then came out and joined my Havasupai friends as they reclined on willow boughs in the vivifying rays of the sun. Thus ended my first sweat bath, but the memory of it was so pleasant that on my last visit to the Havasupais I suggested to Rock Jones (by which name the leading medicine man of the tribe is known) that I would like to take a sweat bath with him. He acceded to my request with pleasure.

HAVASUPAI SHAMAN.

There was not much difference between my experience on this occasion and the first, except that the distance from Rock Jones' tohohwa to the Havasu was quite a little distance, and, as I attempted to walk in my bare feet, the trail was so hot that I had to cry out for Burro Bill to bring me my shoes before I could proceed further, and for several days after blisters on the soles of my feet led me to prefer horseback riding to walking.

It is impossible to overestimate the value of this sweat bath to the Indians. It gives them that opening of the pores that is essential to a healthful life, for it must not be forgotten that they are very gross feeders and exceedingly careless in matters pertaining to their diet. The making of it a religious ceremony is a wise piece of priestcraft, for it works upon the superstitious fears of the people, and this prevents their neglect of this healthful performance.

The sweat-bath is largely prevalent throughout the whole of the southwest, the Wallapais, of Arizona, the Navahoes, of New Mexico, and the Pahutis, of Nevada, all deeming it of equal importance.

PORTO RICO IS RICH.

Its Resources, However, Need Painstaking Development.

Young Americans Should Think Twice Before Emigrating to the Island — Obstacles in the Way to Success.

[Special Washington Letter.]

CONCERNING the island of Porto Rico thousands of letters of inquiry are coming to senators and representatives, and occasionally the newspaper men in the national capital hear from distant friends making inquiry as to the advantages of that portion of our imperial republic.

Young men ask questions about the agricultural possibilities or the mercantile conditions. Young women ask about the educational environments of the cities and villages; for the majority of the feminine querists are seeking to be school-teachers. By the way, if they only knew the unhappy lot of the school-teachers who have gone from this country to Manila, they might hesitate before leaving home, sweet home for any of the islands which are, and for many years will be, infected with the virus of Spanish corruption in every department, official and civil.

School-teachers, however, are but a small minority of those who make inquiry for the purpose of putting their brain, brawn and capital into the development of the resources of Porto Rico. It has been suggested to the writer that one printed letter in a good newspaper would give these inquiring people information that they can get from the hasty correspondence of statesmen who have not time to study and investigate. Moreover, a senator says that all of our people are interested in what we captured from Spain, and want we shall do with it all.

The island of Porto Rico is one-fourth less in area than the state of Connecticut, but supports a population about one-third greater than that of the nutmeg state. The agricultural wealth of the island was particularly demonstrated when it supported its dense population, and also paid heavy tributes in taxation to Spain, and in remittances to absent landlords, many of whom never set foot on the soil of the dependency, which was naturally so independent. Moreover, this was done when there were no modern methods, implements nor appliances, no good roads, few railroads and unimproved harbors.

The treasury department and the department of agriculture are now beginning to take official interest in the harbors of Porto Rico, and none too soon. The condition of the harbors could not be worse, except by seismic disturbances. They are absolutely without improvements and the cost of shipping the products of the fertile soil amounts to an export tax upon the people. Large portions of the products of Porto Rico are brought to the coasts on pack animals, or on the heads of men and women, and, when brought there, the products must be lightered out to vessels in the harbors, because there is no place where a very large ship can come to dock. Official cognizance is taken of this and similar benighted conditions which prevailed previous to that naval engagement in which the victorious commander exclaimed: "There is glory enough for us all."

WILLIAM H. HUNT.
(Civil Governor of the Island of Porto Rico.)

While the agricultural wealth of this island is marvelous it is restricted. The people export their products, while they import their food. Wheat, corn, rice, nearly half of their imports are cereal and other agricultural products. Casual visitors from this country, particularly from our prairie states, view the steep mountains and declivities and wonder how any portion of the island can be capable of cultivation.

The plains along the coast, if subjected to modern scientific drainage and fertilization can become inexhaustible food producers. At present they produce excellent tobacco, corn, bananas and pineapples. The coasts are lined with cocoanut trees. In the interior coffee, oranges, limes and lemons flourish. The oranges are said to be the finest in the world.

The coffee crop is cultivated, but not scientifically. It begins to ripen along the coast in August and September and in all ready for market by the close of October. In the mountains the coffee crop begins to ripen in November, and gathering continues until the middle of February. This crop occupies particular attention thus during seven months of every year.

There are two mountain ranges on the island, the Cayey and the Loquillo and they are almost parallel to each other. The Cayey range is unbroken from end to end of the island, at a distance of from 8 to 15 miles of the south coast; but the Loquillo range is broken by many valleys through which streams rising on the other range make their way to the ocean. The Loquillo is nearer to the north coast than the Cayey is to the south coast. On either side of these ranges, next to the north and south coasts, are beautiful plains sloping to the shore. These plains are about five miles wide on the southern coast, and average three miles in width on the north coast. They are of wonderful fertility, proper cultivation would last as wealth producers for all time. The plains are of rich alluvium soil. Along the eastern portion of the island the lack of rainfall is lamentable, and scientific irrigation will be necessary to bring them to a condition of permanent value.

One of the most wonderful things in Porto Rico is the depth of the soil on the face of the steep mountains, and the fact that the natives cultivate this soil to the very peaks of the highest ranges, causes astonishment to our people who visit the island.

The rainfalls at certain seasons are terrific, torrential and driven by hurricanes. It is marvelous that these cliffs and peaks are not washed bare to the solid stone. But the soil sticks to its alloted place; and there are no landslides such as might be expected and anticipated. It is supposed that because there are no frosts to aid the rains in dissolving the decaying rocks, and because of the porosity of the bed rock, the rain is absorbed almost as rapidly as it falls, even when it comes most violently. It is officially stated by scientists who have recently investigated this section that the soil is so rich that but little tillage is required; and that is the reason that the mountain coffee districts are so productive. The mountain coffee is cut with machetes, or corn swords. In this manner the soil is cleared of the wild growth of coffee, but the roots are left alive, and they help to hold the ground in place, while they also furnish forth the basis of the ensuing crops.

African slavery once existed on the sugar plantations, and on this account the laborers on the northern and southern coasts are colored. But in the interior the laborers are white natives. The former wages is 25 cents in American money, and the laborers board themselves. They do not require much clothing; only sufficient to cover their nakedness. They are patient, well mannered and gratified with the change which has come over their government.

When the American army landed at Guanica in July, 1898, the commanding general sent a letter to our national capital asking that he did not want any more meat sent to his army from this country. This was because he found such splendid cattle ready at hand. They are of large size, of uniform light red color, and the beef is excellent. The cows are almost as large as the oxen, but they do not yield milk in proportion to their size. The heat there is so great and so constant that milk can only be kept by immediately boiling it. The people know nothing of cream or butter.

There are no public lands in Porto Rico, and whoever is inclined to go there for the purpose of making a home will be obliged to buy the land from the holders, many of whom reside in Europe, the majority of them in Spain. Of course there are some small estates, but substantially none of them are small. Some price of land, however, is comparatively low, when its fertility and inexhaustibility are considered. Ambitious farmers with a fair amount of capital might go there and prosper.

But before any encouragement should be given to our people to go there with a view of making fortunes, it must be understood that the government must have time to improve some of the harbors, if not all of them. Then will follow the establishment of fast steamers for tourist travel, and other lines of freight vessels to facilitate trade relations between Porto Rico and the continent.

Transportation and irrigation are needful. Large tracts of land in the interior of the island might be purchased now by men of means, to be held until the suggested improvements are made; as they undoubtedly will be made some time. When there are railways or tramways from the interior to the coast, three or four times the amount of coffee now produced can be raised there. The same may be said of all of the staples of the island.

SMITH D. FRY.

THINGS ONE CANNOT DO.

Some Limitations Which Nature Has Imposed Upon the Most of Mankind.

A man cannot rise from a chair without bending forward, or putting his feet under the chair or outside of it, says the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Many a man will back himself to give another a start of 50 yards in a race of 100, provided the man having the start hops all the way. But no runner, however swift, can give that amount of start to an ordinary man. For the first five yards they go at practically the same pace. Therefore the runner, in the 95 yards while the "hopper" goes 45, would have to run more than twice as fast, and it would be a weak man who could not hop 45 yards at a pace equal to 20 seconds for 100 yards; and that would mean that the runner, in order to win, would have to beat all previous records.

If a man boasts that his penknife is particularly sharp, ask him to cut with one stroke of the blade one of those yellow ribbons, mostly of silk, which are around bundles of cigars. In 999 cases out of 1,000 the knife is not sharp enough to do this. It will cut through all the ribbon but the last strand, and that will pull out long, and the more he tries to cut it the longer it will pull out.

No one except a blind man can stand without support of any kind for five minute at a stretch, if he is thoroughly blindfolded, without moving his feet. If he does not move his feet he is pretty sure to topple over in about a minute.

JOHN ADAMS' MIRROR.

The Historic Relic Rescued from the Capitol Storeroom by Senator McMillan's Secretary.

When John Adams was vice president of the United States (more than 100 years ago) he paid $40 for a little gilt-framed mirror and there has been trouble about it ever since, says the New York Sun. Several senators to the cause of the debate over the payment for its purchase took occasion to censure Mr. Adams for having set an example of unwarranted extravagance. The mirror was purchased in New York, brought to Washington and put in place in the room occupied by the vice president, and for a great many years was pointed out to rural visitors, who were entertained with more or less accurate tales of its history. As years went on and the vice president's room grew in elegance, the little historic mirror seemed to grow smaller and less ornate. Three years ago it was sent to the storeroom, whence it was resurrected and placed on the wall of the director of the mint committee room by the clerk, Charles Moore, who appreciated the beauty of its simple design and its value as a relic. Shortly afterward Senator Hoar held sentimental communion with the story of the exiled mirror and grew very indignant. So, with the consent of Senator Frye, the president of the senate, it was brought back and a place of honor given it on the wall of the vice president's chamber, which it is hoped will be its final resting place.

NEGROES POST TROUBLE

Proportion of Colored People Arrested in Chicago Largest and of Whites Smallest.

It may not be true that the average Chicagoan is a Chinaman, but it appears from statistics gathered by authorities of the police department that the Chinaman is an average Chicagoan, states the Tribune. The quiet Celestial, who shuffles around in soft shoes and pajamas, makes less noise than the enjoyed population of more than the whites. In fact, the evil in nature and the proclivity to do things that will lead to arrest appear to grade pretty nearly by color, so that the white man has the best of it, the Chinaman a little more and the dusky people the most.

Chicago has 2,000 Chinamen, the majority of whom live within the boundaries of the old First-ward and are under the care of the police of the Harrison Street station. Police statistics for last year show that of these 2,000 only 128 were arrested last year according to the police figures. This is a ratio of a little more than one to 20. Of the 2,000,000 white population nearly 70,000 were arrested, or about one of every 28. Of the 35,000 colored folks in Chicago the city 7,000 were arrested, or one in every five.

"The Chinese don't trouble us much," said the desk sergeant of the Harrison Street police station, speaking of this fact. "They are quiet, peaceable and get along pretty well without bothering anybody."

It Keeps Good Time.

An interesting exhibit in the Smithsonian institution at Washington is an old German clock that was ticking about 15 years before the birth of the great American republic. It keeps good time and is 140 years old. It is made of hardwood and the work of the mechanism is highly polished, and it is put together with hand-wrought rivets of brass. The parts show very little wear, and the timepiece is so carefully constructed that it does not vary a second in time during 24 hours.

A New Russian City.

The Russian authorities are as alert for trade as Americans. At and near Dalny, the commercial seaport of the Siberian railroad, they have 24,000 men at work to make a 30-foot harbor. They are rushing up docks, dry docks, shops and buildings, and also are building a great modern city. The Russian minister in charge of this enterprise recently arrived there, having taken 21 days by rail from St. Petersburg.

NEW OFFICES FOR THE CITY

Common Council Decided to Lease New Quarters in the Smalley Building.

INCREASE IN SALARIES.

More Money Voted to Street Commissioner, City Treasurer, Chiefs of Fire and Police Departments — Assessors Wanted More Too—Other Business.

There were a number of important matters that engaged the attention of the Common Council at its regular February meeting Monday evening, among which was the changing of the city offices from their present location to the Smalley building on North avenue. It was unanimously decided to move after the lease submitted by Smalley brothers was read.

The lease provides for the vacant store on the first floor, the room and small adjoining rooms on the top floor for the Council chamber and another room for the Mayor's office. The rooms are to be properly furnished and heated and a fire-proof vault is to be built for the use of the city. The yearly rental is to be $1,100 and the Council will have the privilege of renewing the lease for a term of nine more years after the first year. All work in preparing the new offices shall be to the satisfaction of Building Inspector Doane.

Another important matter was that of increasing the salaries of Street Commissioner A. J. Gavett from $1,800 to $2,200, that of City Treasurer W. F. Arnold from $700 to $900, that of Chief Doane from $700 to $800, and that of Chief of Police Kiely from $90 to $100 per month. This was done in accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Mellick, and was acted upon after a lengthy recess.

In connection with the increase of salaries, the Board of Assessors made a request for an increase in pay. The assessors believe that they should have more money and quoted Elizabeth which has twelve assessors whose aggregate salary amounts to $8,500 per year. They did not explain any desired amount. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

Several communications were received from the Board of Health, relative to the work of that department, including its thirteenth annual report. The board estimated that during the coming year $2,500 would be needed for general health purposes and an extra $5,000 to meet the expenses in connection with the outbreak of small-pox and other contagious diseases. It was stated that at a meeting of the board in January it was decided by resolution that $5,000 would be needed as an emergency fund. Later in the evening Mr. Mellick offered a resolution appropriating $5,000 to the use of the board for the purposes already mentioned.

The report of the board showed that during the past year there were 353 deaths, an average of 15 15-16 per thousand based on a population of 16,000. There were 126 marriages and 316 births. Of the latter 181 were males and 135 females, this being at the rate of 19.8 per thousand. Health Inspector Addis made a total number of 1,816 visits, of which 490 were to places where there were contagious diseases.

There are seventy-one purveyors of milk in the city, forty wholesale dealers, nine wholesale and retail dealers, fifteen retail dealers and twenty-two who purchase milk from others. There are in all forty-six dealers. The report speaks in high terms of Health Officer Thurlow, who has been devoting much time to looking after the dairies in the city and vicinity. The report gives a history of the recent small-pox which visited the city, its treatment and provisions made for the care of such cases and the free vaccination conducted under the auspices of the board.

A lengthy communication was received regarding the settlement of taxes on a piece of property on East Front street owned by J. K. VanNest. The difficulty dated back to the time that James Martin was collector. It seem that Mrs. Caroline F. Harrison held a mortgage on the property, and that the taxes amounting to $536.50 was supposed to have been paid on the property in question. Instead, it is claimed by the petitioner that the amount liquidated the tax on a piece of property on the opposite side of the street, while the other property was sold under the Martin Act. A peculiar fact about the communication is that it consisted of a dozen typewritten pages, it requiring that number to state the case in all its legal phraseology. The matter was referred to the finance committee for adjustment.

Mr. Tolles offered a resolution authorizing the payment of $987.50 to the Gleason-Kiely Contracting Company. This is a part of the 5 per cent. reserve fund of $1,987 held until the completion of the contract on the sewer improvement. Another resolution offered by the same member provided that the money due the Gleason-Kiely Contracting Company be withheld until all bills against the company are paid. This does not affect the action returning the amount already specified.

At this time Mr. Mellick brought a number of matters of more or less importance before the Council. He offered a resolution authorizing the collector of taxes to issue warrants for the collection of delinquent taxes. If the delinquent fails to pay a constable will hunt him up and arrest him.

Another resolution offered by Mr. Mellick provided for the borrowing of $6,000 for sewage improvements. This will be secured by a note.

Mr. Mellick submitted an extended report in the form of an opinion from Corporation Counsel Marsh regarding several matters of taxation. From time to time several petitions have been received from complaining taxpayers and to settle these an opinion was asked for. The first was that regarding a petition from F. C. Langhorne. The latter paid a tax which had already been paid by his wife and he asked to have the amount remitted. While the city is not forced to return the amount, Mr. Marsh informed the Council that it could so if it wanted to. The amount was ordered returned after a sworn claim is received from the petitioner.

Dr. J. A. Layton, a veteran of the Civil War, claims exemption from taxes and Mr. Marsh recommended such action on all except a dog tax. He gave an adverse opinion on the petitions of P. Guinee, Henry Bush, W. C. Startup and A. Callman, who asked to have dog taxes remitted. Regarding the opinion J. B. Coward, representing the estate of Charles Hyde, asking for the return of $10 overpaid on a tax, Mr. Marsh recommended the return of the money. In the case of William Langer, whose property was purchased under the Martin Act, Mr. Marsh recommended that he be given a chance to redeem his property by paying the amount on the property and interest. Referring to the petition of W. H. Stine, whose property adjoins that of Mr. Langer, Mr. Marsh said that the settlement of the Langer case would adjust the other.

Mr. Marsh reported that in the case of Mrs. Sprague, who complained about a tax, she has paid the tax, having ascertained that it was correct. P. Nugent, another complainant against the sale of his property under the Martin Act, was reported as having redeemed his property. Mr. Marsh asked for more time to consider the case of E. D. Finck, another complainant against taxation, as he had discovered it to be a complicated one.

After the reports were received concerning these cases, Mr. Mellick offered a resolution concurring in the report and providing that the Council follow the recommendations offered.

Mr. Buckle introduced an ordinance providing for a change in the title of captain of police to chief of police. It was placed on its first and second readings add ordered advertised. In connection with this Mr. Buckle offered a resolution which provided for a change in the rules and regulations of the Council which changes "captain of police" to "chief of police" wherever the former title appears.

After the adoption of the resolution, President Coriell thought the action was premature as the ordinance providing for the change had not yet been adopted. Mr. Buckle also offered another resolution making the salary of the captain of police $100 a month.

The regular applications for liquor licenses were received as follows: Charles L. Strong, A. B. Rosell, J. H. McVey, Daniel Galbraith, J. A. Staats, Jacob Blimm, Frank Linke, Eastern Bottling Company, J. A. Blatz, Charles Schantz, Henry Windham, John Bafferty, Vernard Clark, Michael Clark, Michael Watson, A. D. Findlay. There are fifteen in all, the present number. They will now be advertised in the usual time after which action will be taken regarding them.

Thomas Leacock, who has been assessed $2.22 for a dog tax, complained that he does not own a dog. The matter was referred. S. R. Struthers objected to an assessment of $41.09 for poll and personal tax, claiming exemption as a veteran of the Civil War. The bond of Constable W. R. Mattox was returned by Corporation Counsel Marsh, who approved it as to form and the same was recorded. W. H. Abbott, who claimed that he had paid $1.25 as a tax on West Sixth street property, asked to have that sum refunded. The matter was referred.

Mayor Jenkins appointed Reuben Jones, sexton of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, a special policeman and Special Patrolman Arther McGinley a regular patrolman. Both appointments were confirmed.

Before the Council adjourned to meet on Monday evening, February 24, Mr. Mellick asked the chairman of the various committees to prepare their estimate of expenses for the year so that the annual budget can be prepared at an early date. The Council then adjourned.

TWENTY-SIX BIDS.

Many Are Anxious to Carry the U. S. Mails to and From the North Avenue Station.

There were twenty-six bids received by Postmaster Bird from persons who wish to carry the U. S. mail between the postoffice and the railroad station. Of this number four are white and the rest colored men. The bids have been sent to Washington and Postmaster Bird expects to hear in a few days who the successful bidder is.

Owing to the fact that the postoffice is just outside the prescribed limit, it is compulsory for the postal authorities to attend to having the mail taken back and forth between the two points. It the office was a little nearer the railroad station, the railroad company would have to carry the mail at its expense.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Willis, of Johnston's drive, were called to Union Course, L. I., last week, by the serious illness of their son-in-law, Charles Dietz, a prominent real estate and insurance broker at that place. He has suddenly became insane.

Three years ago, when a violent storm visited Long Island, Mr. Dietz sustained a fracture of the skull. He was in a house at the time and a beam falling struck him on the head. It is believed that his present trouble is due to that accident.

Lately his condition has been much worse and the police have been taking care of him. He has since been removed to an institution at Flushing, where an operation will be performed in the hope of effecting a cure. Mr. Dietz has visited Plainfield frequently and he has many friends here.

DRIVEN INTO CHURCH.

Constable Quieted Hoodlums Who Disturbed the Services and Made Them Sing and Pray.

It is not often that the hoodlums of to-day are driven into church on Sunday at the point of the revolver, but such was the occurrence at the little house of worship at Gibson, at the foot of the Chestnut Ridge, near Connellsville, Pa.

The members of the congregation had gathered for service as usual in the bright morning; the pastor of the flock had taken his place with all due reverence in the pulpit and the service of prayer began. About this time a commotion was heard outside the church. Wrangling voices mingled in wild oaths and bluffery.

Then the congregation stood up and began to sing, "Onward, Onward, Christian Soldier," was the hymn. Louder and louder the organ pealed, and the members of the congregation, from the pastor to the amen corner, sang. But over all the prayer and the adoration and the oblation of the music and the song arose the jeer and the derision of a gang of hoodlums on the outside.

"Onward, Onward, Christian Soldier," repeated the chorus in the hymn. And just then the prayer was answered.

There was a "Christian soldier" within hearing, and he went to war on the strength of the summons to arms. He charged among the rowdies with drawn pistol leveled at their heads.

"Now, forward march!" he sang out, cool as a cucumber.

"You drop if you run!" he shouted, as the gang started to break away. He who spoke was Constable William Hart, of Connellsville township.

Like a set of meek converts the hoodlums stood huddled before the pistol.

"Now, into church," commanded Hart. And into church, marching before the leveled pistol, the gang marched. They took their pews solemnly, and remained to hear the service to the end.

"I guess a little prayin' and singin' didn't hurt them any," Hart said to the pastor of the flock after the benediction.

DENTIST AS DETECTIVE.

Parisian Tooth Carpenter Renders a Thief Helpless and Takes Him to Police Station.

If Paris is prolific in producing thieves, it also is most fruitful in expedients for catching them. Dr. Rousseau, a dentist living in the Rue des Martyrs, has adopted a novel and amusing method. Dr. Rousseau and his wife were walking on the boulevard a few days ago when a young man snatched a handbag containing money and jewelry which madame was carrying. The dentist was unable to catch the thief, but had time to distinguish his features, though he never expected to see him again.

By a curious coincidence, however, the thief came to the dentist a day or two later to have his teeth attended to. Dr. Rousseau, concealing his astonishment, asked him to take a seat, as it would be necessary to take an impression of the jaw, and this done immediately proceeded to do. When the dentist considered that the plaster was sufficiently solid he calmly explained to the helpless thief that he was at his mercy and had better follow him quietly to the police station. The man wildly gesticulated, but finding that his wide open mouth was imprisoned by a solid block of plaster of paris, he consented to go to prison.

DRAWING NEW SCHOOL BILL

CHARLES L. CORBIN, OF JERSEY CITY, ASSIGNED TO THE TASK.

Making Draft of Bill to Take the Place of the Stokes School Law.

Counselor Charles L. Corbin, of Jersey City, has assumed the task of drawing up a new general school bill to take the place of the Stokes' school act of 1900, which has been set aside by the courts, but in the case of which a rehearing has been asked by Attorney General Grey.

Mr. Corbin has decided to frame a new act, at the request of Edward Russ, of Hoboken, chairman of the committee on law and legislation of the State Board of Education.

It is expected that the new bill will be ready for introduction in the Legislature in a few weeks.

Inasmuch as Charles L. Corbin is a recognized authority on legislation in New Jersey, and as he is one of the members of the general revision commission appointed by the governor, consisting, besides, of Justice Dixon and Justice Fort, the matter of the school law has been laid before him by Chairman Russ, of the committee on law and legislation of the State board.

Mr. Corbin will have the assistance of his brother, William H. Corbin, who was for a number of years in the school board of Elizabeth.

BETTER SHOWING.

It was a very pleasant and well played game throughout and the local team showed a decided improvement in its work. In the first half the score was 6 to 5 against Plainfield. The local team was composed of Leland, Sherwin, Sheppard, Anderson, Collier and Long. Physical Director Heywood and a number of Plainfield boys were also in attendance.

After the game the boys were taken to Reigers College and shown about by one of the students. They spent some time in visiting the various buildings.

WILLIAM M. JOHNSON FOR NEXT GOVERNOR

Jersey City Journal's Trenton Correspondent Predicts His Ultimate Selection.

IS INTERESTING GOSSIP.

STOKES SUGGESTED AS PROBABLE SUCCESSOR OF SENATOR KEAN.

Declares South Jersey Has Learned Lesson and Will Go Into Next Contest United — Effect of Open Ballot.

The Trenton correspondent of the Jersey City Journal writes the following interesting gossip concerning the probable results of the election of John F. Dryden as United States Senator and the future gubernatorial possibilities:

"The election of John F. Dryden as United States Senator will exert a far-reaching effect upon the political situation in this state. According to opinions freely passed among Republican leaders from different counties who are making the State House a rendezvous these days, it foreshadows the election of a man from south Jersey as United States Senator Kean's successor three years hence, and the probable nomination of First Assistant Postmaster William M. Johnson, of Bergen, for governor, the same year.

"The remarkable showing of strength made by Clerk in Chancery Stokes in the joint caucus is regarded by his south Jersey friends as a pledge of Stokes' availability three years from now.

"South Jersey wanted the senatorship this time. Had the Senators and Assemblymen from that part of the State centered upon one man at the first off, instead of waiting until near the end of the joint caucus, the result might have been different, and it is now acknowledged that in future contests the southern tier of counties will have to combine their forces before going into caucus, in order to win.

"The combination formed on Stokes at the eleventh hour was the handiwork of State Assessor David Baird, and it is said that Baird, in consequence, will in future be recognized as the Republican leader in south Jersey.

"Had Griggs been chosen instead of Dryden, it is said that Johnson's chances of securing the gubernatorial nomination would have been lessened, but Dryden's victory, or rather Griggs' defeat, is regarded as an omen of promise for Mr. Johnson's ambition, notwithstanding that Johnson's friend Griggs says:

"The way the situation is viewed here is this; north Jersey will supply the next candidate for governor; south Jersey will claim the senatorship. For the first honor Johnson will probably have no competitor, while it is generally conceded that Stokes will be the only one put forward by south Jersey for the place to become vacant by the expiration of Senator Kean's term.

"In the event of Senator Kean desiring to succeed himself, which is more than likely, Stokes would have a hard fight on his hands, but his friends claim that Stokes would have the upper hand by virtue of the fact that north Jersey was to get the governorship and could not in fairness claim the senatorship also.

"The contest for the United States senatorship has left no bitterness in its wake, even though carried on aggressively. All the candidates were personal friends, and while each left no stone unturned to win, the fight was dignified and fair in all respects.

"Party leaders are outspoken in praise of the manner in which the caucus was conducted. They regard the open ballot and the admission of representatives of the press as an innovation, which will redound to the permanent benefit of the Republican party in this State. It was the first time a United States senator had been chosen in that manner in New Jersey, on all previous occasions the ballot having been secret."

MUCH ROAD BUILDING DONE IN THIS STATE

Summary of the Year's Work In Behalf of Good Roads For Jersey.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE.

IN ANNUAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC ROADS.

Was Assisted in Preparation by State Supervisor of Roads R. A. Meeker, of Plainfield—Some Very Interesting Facts.

Something of interest to every resident of the State will be contained in the eighth annual report of Commissioner of Public Roads Henry I. Budd, of Mount Holly, which is to be submitted soon. It will be especially interesting to Plainfielders inasmuch as the greater part of it is relative to work planned and directed by Street Supervisor of Roads Robert A. Meeker, of this city.

The report will show that more good road building has been accomplished throughout the State during the past year than any previous similar length of time. This is partly due to the privileges allowed counties and townships under the recently enacted State Aid law. By its provisions, if freeholders or township committeemen decide to build a road with either stone, gravel or oyster shells, they cause a survey of the thoroughfare to be made and plans and specifications to be prepared. They are afterward submitted to the State commissioner of public roads and if they meet with his approval, the projectors will receive one third the cost of construction from the money appropriated by the State for that purpose At present this amount is to $150,000 per annum.

In Mr. Budd's report the statement is made that during the past year there have been built and paid for, 109 miles of macadam and gravel road. In the northern part all have been constructed of macadam while the southern sections have mostly gravel. The latter is placed in the same manner as macadam and is made thoroughly compact. It varies in thickness from six to ten inches.

There have also been built under the State Aid law about eight miles of shell road. These have been constructed in Salem county which has no other available material. Oyster shells are brought in large quantities in Philadelphia and are applied to the roads in much the same manner as broken stone or gravel. Although not as good as stone, it answers every purpose and accommodates the traffic.

The great object in view of this department of the State is the building of continuous lines of road, the entire length and breadth of the State. In accordance with this plan the State commissioners have a continuous line of stone road from Lake Hopatcong, through Morristown, Bernardsville and Somerville. There is now building a link from South Somerville to connect with the road already constructed at Belle Mead. It is intended some time in the near future to continue this road to Princeton where it will connect with the macadam turnpike to Trenton, thus giving a continuous line from the lake to the capital of the State.

In the other direction, from east to west, there has been completed a macadam road from Newark, through Elizabeth, Rahway, Metuchen, New Brunwick, Deans, Cranbury and Hightstown to Trenton. The connecting stretch just east of Trenton was completed this year.

Another good move last year was the continuing of the Paterson and Hamburg turnpike, running west from Paterson to Pompton and on to New Foundland. At Chamberburg on the line of this road, the State is building a line northward through Echo Lake to West Milford. In time this road will be continued to Greenwood lake, thus giving residents of the State easy access over stone roads to its most famous inland summer resorts.

Of more local interest is the road that has just been completed from Somerville to Far Hills. This completes a circuit of fifty-two miles of macadam road, all in fine condition, as follows: Beginning at Plainfield, thence to North Plains, to Springfield, to Madison, to Morristown, to Bernardsville, to Far Hills, to Pluckemin, to Somerville, to Bound Brook to Dunellen and thence to Plainfield. It is a splendid course for automobiles and as it becomes better and more widely known it will no doubt attract many drivers of the silent steed from this vicinity and the metropolitan district.

The general supervision of all this work is entrusted to Mr. Budd, assisted by Mr. Meeker, State supervisor, who is in reality, State engineer. All plans, specifications and engineering questions are referred to him for his decision. This requires him to visit all portions of the State before, during and after the completion of the work, in order to ascertain whether the State is having its roads built in accordance with the provisions and specifications; that is, whether the quantity and quality of the material for roads furnished is what it should be, in other words, that the State is getting what it pays for. This has all been accomplished by Mr. Meeker in a thorough and most satisfactory manner.

For the coming year, it is planned to construct many other important sections of road. Specifications and plans have been prepared for over 400 miles, ninety of which have already been contracted for. When all are completed the State will be gridironed with a network of thoroughfares such as will be hard to find in any other section of the country.

TO MAKE UP SHORTAGE.

Delinquent Tax Collector Cook, of Scotch Plains, Short $120 in His Accounts.

Scotch Plains, Feb. 11—At a special meeting of the Fanwood Township committee, last evening, publicity was given to a shortage in accounts of Henry Cook who, for years, has served the township as delinquent tax collector. It had been discovered that Mr. Cook was $120 short and had failed to turn that amount over to the committee.

At a meeting last evening, which was called to take final action, Mr. Cook appeared. It was arranged that one of his bondsman should call on Miss Maggie Cook, a sister of the collector, and she would make good the shortage. This is to be done today Mr. Cook explained the shortage by saying the money was either stolen or lost. The bondsmen were Wm. Van Valkenburg and Louis Morel.

Address by President H. M. Maxson, of the Local Organized Aid Association.

GIVEN MONDAY NIGHT.

Dr. W. H. Allen, Secretary of State Charities Aid Association, Told of the State Conference Soon to be Held at Trenton—Mr. Maxson's Discourse.

The increased interest in matters of charity was shown Monday night in the large attendance of charity workers in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church, when a meeting was held under the auspices of the Organized Aid Association. The meeting was called especially to give all persons interested an opportunity to hear President H. M. Maxson's address on "Twentieth Century Charity," and incidentally to hear Dr. William H. Allen, general secretary for the State Charities Aid Association, tell something of the coming conference of charity workers at Trenton, February 20-21.

Dr. Allen, who recently assumed his present position, seems to have already taken a firm grasp on the work in this State. The conference of charities and corrections to be held at Trenton will be the first of the kind ever held in this State. There will be many prominent speakers from Governor Murphy down, all of whom have something to do with charity enterprises. President Maxson, of the local Organized Aid Association, will give a talk on "Truancy Legislation."

The conference will discuss the abolishment of the present plan of mingling boys and girls with hardened criminals for trivial offenses. The speaker said that last year there were three hundred people committed to the Union county jail who by law should not have been there on account of age, offences, etc. Dr. Allen advanced the theory that there is profit in the probation officer, who looks after persons who commit minor offences.

President Maxson then gave his address on "Twentieth Century Charity." He spoke as follows:

"We are an open-handed nation, giving millions for charity each year, but a large part of this gift does little or no good and some of it does real harm to those who receive it because, in the great majority of cases, the methods of charity are still the same as those used in the days of the stagecoach. It consists chiefly in giving material relief. In all other matters of life we have made great strides of improvement in recent years, and we ought to improve our methods in charity to correspond with our methods in business and in other matters of life.

"There are two general conditions of men: those that are honest, industrious and self-supporting, and those that, for one reason or another, are not able to win their daily bread or who are lazy, indifferent or vicious. The normal man is industrious and self-supporting. When we find a man who is dependent, we must consider him as, in a certain sense, abnormal and our effort ought not to be simply to meet his present needs, but rather to restore him to the normal condition of self-support. That is, we must look at a case of need the same as a physician looks at a person who is sick. A case of need requires a diagnosis and a prescription in order that charity may be wisely given.

"The aim of all efforts, therefore, to help those who need assistance is, first, to cure the case; and second, to care for those who are incurable in such a way that they shall be comfortable and at the same time shall not be able to increase the pauper population. The old form of charity—giving—is largely emotional and gives little consideration to cause and effect. The new charity believes in the emotion, but holds that it should be directed along carefully considered lines in order to really help the person in need.

"Indiscriminate giving simply lifts the person out of the need of today and drops him into the misery of next week. The new charity aims to raise the needy one permanently to a level where no gift is needed.

"The old charity gives temporary relief. The new charity seeks a permanent cure or a permanent provision and oversight for cases that are incurable.

"The old charity had no thought of prevention. The new charity aims to conquer pauperism by preventing the production of paupers as well as by restoring needy ones to the condition of self-support.

"The old charity has but one method of expression—giving. The new charity, aiming as it does at permanent cure, has a thousand avenues of expression in its efforts to uplift the recipient.

"To do this work wisely all charitable associations in a community must be brought together to work in unison. This gives rise to a joint society which is called by various names in various places, such as the Associated Charities, the Organized Aid Association, etc. The aim of this association is to utilize and bind together all the charitable forces of the community so that they shall work together for the highest good of all who need help. Its work is two-fold—relieving present destitution and preventing pauperism.

"In relieving it follows out four lines of work.

"First, Investigation. Before aiding a case, it is necessary to find out all the conditions of the case, its past, its present, and the prospects of the future. This is the physician's diagnosis.

"Second, Registration. The investigation must be recorded for the confidential use of all the societies and as a basis of the treatment which may run over several years.

"Third, Visitation. The case must be visited more or less frequently by a sympathetic visitor who will give the person moral support and counsel, and, it may be, personal guidance.

"Fourth, Co-operation. It must induce all the societies to co-operate and at the same time to avoid interference with each other in treating any case. Churches need the work of the Organized Aid Association as much as individuals do.

"I do not advocate the church giving up its charitable work entirely to anyone, neither do I propose a charity trust but indiscriminate giving is wasteful and injurious, whether it is done by individuals or churches. The only safe way to give aid is after a careful study of the case. Almost every church is imposed upon by hypocritical persons who pretend an interest only to get something. The church should have all doubtful cases investigated and the Organized Aid has an expert worker who is glad to do this for any one free of charge. It should not surrender its case bodily to any one, but should make sure that it is not helping the same person that other churches are helping. Recently a case being helped by a church was investigated and found to be helped from seven sources, two unknown to the other. Any one of these could have found out about the case by applying to the Organized Aid.

"In its work of prevention the society aims first to reduce the outdoor relief given by the city, which, in very many cases, tends to produce pauperism. Many cities give no outdoor relief. Others have reduced it to one-tenth of what was formerly given. The society aims also to reduce pauperism by stopping indiscriminate giving. It aims to decrease the supply of paupers by having feeble minded and pauper women segregated where they cannot perpetuate their kind. It looks after the orphan and neglected children to see that they are put in good homes. It aims to improve the character of the homes of the dependent, that the children may be brought up to self-respect and self-support. It aims to secure better laws and the better housing of the working people. It strives to decrease and put a stop to frauds and mendicancy in the community.

"The Associated Charities does not aim to give relief, but to assist the case to relieve itself by providing that all relief which is given shall be given after investigation, and in such a way as to tend to prevent pauperism and to really help the needy one. It does not aim to separate the worthy from the unworthy. There is no case which is not worthy of being helped. The society aims to find out whether it can be helped and how it can be helped and to provide permanently for the cases that cannot be helped. Help does not simply mean giving money or food. It means much more than that—continuous and permanent assistance and encouragement to self-support. There is no danger of any case suffering while being investigated because emergency cases are always provided for whether investigated or not. It is not 'against the poor,' it is rather for the best good of the poor, because it aims to put the needy one onto a basis where he will cease to need any gift whatever. It strives to impress on every person the idea that if any help is to be given it should not be given spasmodically, but regularly and

CASINO DANCE CLOSES SEASON

Society Assembled on Eve of Lenten Season for Its Third Formal Dance.

GIVEN AT THE CASINO.

The Cotillion Was Led by Lewis G. Timpson—Particularly Attractive Decorations—Valentines for Favors—Society Turned Out Well—The Subscribers.

Coming as it did almost on the eve of the Lenten season, the third of the series of Casino dances was a society event enjoyed Monday night by at least a couple of hundred Plainfielders and their friends from out of town. As at like occasions there was much brilliancy attached to the affair. It marked the close of the local social season until Easter.

Particularly attractive were the decorations of the ball room, the American flag and bunting being used with charming effect. Pound's New York orchestra occupied the stage and needless to say the music was of the fascinating sort. This was the first formal gathering of the local fashionable set since the New Year's masque ball, and the attendance showed that the series of affairs have struck a popular chord with society.

The cotillion commenced at 11:30 o'clock, and it was led by Lewis G. Timpson. It was preceded by the supper, arranged by Steward Ivany. The favors for the evening were dainty little valentines, miniature silk American flags and cut flowers. Mrs. Charles H. Abbott, Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Mrs. J. W. Rinehart and Mrs. O. T. Waring were the patronesses for the affair. The general committee in charge consisted of Frederick W. Yates, Elliot T. Barrows, Lewis G. Timpson and Lewis R. Waring.

ENCOURAGED CATTLE RAISING

STATE SECRETARY DYE TALKED TO SOMERSET COUNTY FARMERS.

Quarterly Meeting of County Board of Agriculture Was Held at Somerville.

Somerville, Feb. 11—The quarterly meeting of the Somerset County Board of Agriculture in the Court House here, Saturday afternoon, was attended better than any previous session in years. The principal address was by State Secretary Franklin Dye, of Trenton, on "Encouragements to the Business of Agriculture."

A few of the points made by Mr. Dye were:

"I believe there is an opportunity today for any young man with sufficient capital to breed cattle here in this State with good financial success. In the year past farmers of New Jersey have brought 12,000 head of cattle from other States. Placing these at $40 a head you can see at a glance the money being sent out of the State. Why do not our young men take up that branch of the farming business and keep that money here?

"Farms are so cheap it is encouraging. The young man with limited means can start out with every assurance of success. There never was a time when farms, the condition they are in today, were so cheap.

"The United States Board of Agriculture is one of the grandest works of the day. It makes investigation on every line throughout the land for the benefit of the agriculturist. Its publications are numerous and are free to the farmer. Every farmer should put himself in touch with his Congressman and get these.

"Agriculture is the foundation industry. It must be encouraged. The farmers make it possible for others to live on the land.

"The agricultural experiment stations at New Brunswick are doing a noble work. Every farmer should go to New Brunswick to see what Prof. Voorhees is growing."

Charles Howell Cock, of Trenton, who owns a large dairy farm at Belle Mead, was called on for a speech. He made a telling hit when he asked if anyone present could tell how much it costs to produce a ton of hay; or how much to make a pound of butter. Not one could tell. He said: "There is not a manufacturer today who could do business that way. He must know the cost to produce in order to compete with other manufacturers."

The meeting wound up with a general discussion, in which the farmers all took part.

AN OLD RESIDENT.

Mrs. Hester A. Blackford, of South Plainfield, Died Sunday Night.

TURN VEREIN HELD ITS MASQUERADE BALL

That Annual Event at Saengerbund Hall Was Largely Attended Last Monday.

SOME STRANGE SIGHTS.

A "COON OCTETTE" WAS A FEATURE OF THE EVENING.

Grand March Preceded by a Burlesque Given by Members of the Society — Some of the Costumes That Were Worn.

The masquerade ball of the Plainfield Gesang und Turn Verein, held in Saengerbund Hall, last Monday, was declared to be an unqualified success. It was the fourteenth annual affair of this nature held under the auspices of the society.

After a few preliminary numbers had been rendered by Professor O'Reilly's full orchestra, the grand march took place. It was led by the members of the managing committee.

Preceding the march an original sketch, burlesquing Prince Henry's proposed visit to this country, was given by several members of the society and won prolonged applause. Charles Meyer, Sr., attired as "Uncle Sam," and attended by Alexander Blume, as his body guard, presented a miniature yacht to "Prince Henry," in the person of Alfred Lothman.

Another feature was the appearance on the floor of a "coon octette" in which Mrs. I. H. Boehm, representing "Mother Coon," led about eight others. The latter were Mrs. Charles Meyer, Mrs. Herman Klinesman, Mrs. Rudolph Spiegel, Mrs. Thomas Fitzgerald, Mrs. George Hanrand, Mrs. Henry Hertel, Mrs. Adolph Barry and Mrs. Hall. All were attired in appropriate costume.

Among some of the other most noticeable costumes were: Mrs. Frank Keller, western girl; Miss Annie Mercier, school girl; Miss Pauline Wahl, fairy; Miss Christina Sorussen, "sweet sixteen;" Mrs. Christian Schantz, Ophelia; Miss Annie Martin, morning; Miss Irene LeMair, fairy; the Misses Fisher, folly; Miss Annie Feller and Miss Emma Weigman, ballet girls; Miss Lottie Cockley, Dolly Varden; Miss Lizzie Barkalew, Carmen; Edward Koechlin, private; William Hardy, sailor; Frank Haanrand, flag guard; Frank Lievers, Mexican; Charles Schantz, night guard; and William Claassen, bartender.

TO AID LOCAL CHARITY.

Young Women of Church of The Holy Cross Interested in the Work.

A committee on local charity has been formed in the church guild of the Church of the Holy Cross. Mrs. H. R. Phillips is the chairman and there is a large membership in the committee. Mrs. Phillips has succeeded in interesting many of the young women of the parish in the work.

On every Friday afternoon during the Lenten season the committee will meet in the parish house for the purpose of sewing. Whatever garments are made will be given to the Children's Home, although it is probable that some work will be done for the hospital. These are the two institutions to which the committee desires to devote its attention. The members have entered enthusiastically into the spirit of the work and much good is expected from this branch of the guild.

FELL OVER FENDER.

Mrs. P. B. Laire Injured While Alighting From a Trolley Car.

Mrs. P. B. Laire is confined to her home on Steiner place with an injured knee cap, which will require several weeks to mend. It resulted from an accident several weeks ago.

She was on the way to visit friends on East Second street, near Richmond. Alighting from a trolley car at the switch there, using the front door at the conductor's solicitation, she stepped almost directly in front of another car. Becoming confused she attempted to cross the tracks hurriedly and fell over the fender of the car on which she had been a passenger. Her knee was struck and it has since had to be placed in a cast. It is the intention of Mr. Laire to enter suit against the company.

Visited Borough Schools.

Miss Randolph, of the Randolph-Cooley Collegiate School, visited the North Plainfield High School during one of the sessions yesterday. She was much interested in the methods of teaching pursued there.

Captain Jinks as Played By Ethel Barrymore

It Is a Bright, Clean and Enjoyable Comedy, With Many a Laugh In It.

CAPT. JINKS takes us back to the days of 20 years ago—the days of the Grecian bend—worse even than our modern kangaroo walk—to the chignon, and to the bustle of decided prominence and length. The costumes, which to us seem perfectly ridiculous, are one of the amusing features of this laughter-moving play; each new character appearing on the stage provoking, by dress and gait, and manner, the audience to irrepressible mirth.

But Miss Barrymore, who is so deliciously pretty and girlish, notwithstanding her outlandish clothes, continues a wonderfully charming piece of femininity. In the last act, in which she wears a white gown that billows all about her, she is a picture one will not soon forget.

The curtain rises disclosing a wharf in New York and the gangplank of a ship just in from England. It is a rainy October day. An Irish policeman, a mighty good representative of the class, walks about on his beat; a sharp-faced newsboy is on the ground; a reporter, in light trousers and a peculiarly cut long coat and with a peculiarly formed hat fitted on the back of his head, nervously paces to and fro with umbrella raised. Over all there is an air of expectancy. Presently, other reporters join the first one, and an excited consultation ensues. The audience discovers that all are lying in wait for the appearance of Mme. Trenti-toni, a famous prima donna coming over on American conquest bent. The wife of Manhattan is eager to lend her welcome.

Among others the military. We hear the familiar bars of the old song, "Capt. Jinks, of the Horse Marines," and in walk, arm in arm, three merry gentlemen in scarlet uniform. While waiting for Mme. Trentoni to appear these young gallants kill time as best they may. They snatch coins, they attitudinize, and finally they indulge in a wager of rather questionable taste. One of them is hard up and put to it to retrieve his fortunes. He makes a bet with Capt. Jinks that the latter will not be able to arrive at love-making with the fair prima donna in the next seven days. Capt. Jinks, not given to taking a dare, wagers that he will, and gives his I. O. U. for $1,000 to his companion. Which, as it very properly should, later causes the captain several miserable hours.

Presently the above characters accommodatingly leave the stage to make way for a private interview between Mr. Policeman and a customs house officer in civilian clothes. The latter remarks to the former that Mme. Trentoni is said to have brought over with her a very extensive wardrobe, and that they must both be on the alert. Furthermore, if anyone attempts to bribe the policeman, the officer is to give two long whistles and the customs official will come at once to the scene.

They leave the stage, and in comes the crowd of reporters with a huge bouquet, which is to be presented to the prima donna "with the compliments of representatives of the press of New York." A misbehavious boy, observing the bouquet, commits an unseemly fun and announces: "Here comes Mme. Trentoni! Make way!"

The reporters, with a bound, reach the gangplank just in time to see a female of generous amplitude descend. The spokesman at once makes his complimentary remarks and with a flourish presents the offering. The female, much flustered, accepts it coyly and with difficulty manages to grasp it, one arm and hand being employed in holding a small lapdog. After the lady has gushingly given thanks to the kind gentlemen, they discover they have been imposed upon, have presented their precious bouquet to Mme Trentoni's elderly companion.

Soon the prima donna presents herself, as pretty as woman could be, in the little pancake of a hat that she wears, and at once, according to advice received from Col. Mapleson, her manager, makes herself agreeable to the gentlemen of the press. She tells them that she hopes they will like her and they respond with ardor and as one man: "O, yes"

When the military gentlemen come each with a floral gift, she is more reserved, a trifle surprised, but also equal to this occasion. She sends two of them off to exercise her dogs, and to the third, Capt. Jinks, she shows that she considers their welcome in her somewhat informal, not to say impudent. Capt. Jinks, impressed with her dignity, manner and beauty, apologizes for his and his friends' indiscretion, and asks that he be allowed to make amends. In the conversation that follows the captain proves himself so manly and deferential Mme. Trentoni is mollified and grants him permission to call on her that afternoon at her hotel. The customs officials rudely break in on their interlocutors, and the prima donna becomes concerned for the safety of her many boxes. Capt. Jinks assures her he will be delighted to look after them for her, and Mme. Trentoni, companion and dog enter a carriage and disappear from sight. The prima donna, sitting in the carriage, surrounded by flowers, bows very prettily, pleasantly, smiling and bowing to the captain, and calling out: "This afternoon at four."

But at four the doughty captain is otherwise engaged. As he was about to place a bill in the hand of the deceitful policeman with a whisper in regard to letting Mme. Trentoni's boxes *slip through, two low whistles sound*ed, and the curtain went down on Jinks struggling in the hands of the customs house confederates.

Two weeks are supposed to have elapsed between the first and second acts. In that time Mme. Trentoni and Capt. Jinks have made great strides in their acquaintance, and we soon find ourselves treated to some interesting love-making. The lady accepts the gentleman with little of coy hesitation, but they get small time for philandering, as a hotel parlor is a bad place for that sort of thing. All through the play, just as the captain and his lady-love are about to embrace, in will rush her manager, or her companion, or his whilom friends, or a bellboy with ice water, and all the while, of course, adds to the general hilarity.

But the villain enters. The whilom friends conspire to ruin Capt. Jinks, chances with Mme. Trentoni. They tell her foster-father of the bet and about Jinks' I. O. U. Of course the foster-father and the girl are very indignant and break off with the captain.

The third act shows us the prima donna on her return to the hotel after the grand opening night—"first night." Dressed in gala attire, her room full to overflowing with flowery trophies, she moves about dejected, heartbroken. She refuses to go to the supper given in her honor, to which Gen. Grant has already arrived. All she asks is to be left alone. At last they leave her. She goes about and idly looks at the floral emblems, until her interest is aroused by finding in each one she handles a note from Capt. Jinks, imploring, demanding, that she allow him to explain. Of course she does, and of course she forgives him. The curtain goes down on the happy pair with arm around, going out to join the distinguished people in the banquet room.

THE ASTROLOGER.

HISTORIAN AT WORK

What He Found Out About Early Roads in America.

Washington Was Deeply Interested in the Construction of Solid Highways—Calhoun's Part in the Agitation.

[Special Washington Letter.]

WHEN Maurice O. Eldridge was acting director of the office of public road inquiries for the department of agriculture he made a study of the history of highway construction in our republic, and the results of his research were given today, in brief, for the information of the readers of this newspaper.

The sentiment expressed by Mr. Eldridge will meet with general approval: "If our first settlers had arrived when the Roman empire was at the zenith of its glory, our republic would now be bound together with a perfect system of magnificently constructed highways. True, the Romans were good road builders, the first and the greatest of whom we have history. The expansion of that empire made good roads as necessary as soldiers and statesmen. The mighty legions of Rome required good roads for troops and for commerce also for couriers, civil and military. The cavalry and chariots, the big catapults, the ammunition wagons and supply wagons were heavier than those used by modern armies. Moreover, Rome was a trafficker, and as industrious in spreading her commerce as the Yankee nation of this present day; and good roads were necessary for commerce.

But Rome was declining when this continent was discovered and settled. The immigrants came from England to France mostly, countries which still used road systems inherited from the dark and illiterate ages. Naturally our first settlers knew nothing of road building, for they had received no instruction to that end.

For more than a century after the settlement at Plymouth Rock no efforts were systematically made to prepare roads over which passengers or supplies could be safely transported. Each individual blazed his way, as did the Indians before them. They clung close to seashore and streams, thereby maintaining personal and commercial relations by means of sailboats or rowboats. Because of the scores or hundreds of miles between settlements there was there could have been no concerted systematic attempt at good road building. Indeed it may be said that ful, four centuries elapsed before the government undertook this work for the whole country.

It was not until 1811 that a great American road was surveyed by competent engineers, and that is now known as the "Old York road," because it connects New York and Philadelphia. That road was built by revolutionary war was fought by armies which traveled better shelter without good roads and sometimes with only Indian trails from point to point. How they ever managed to keep their regiments and brigades in alignment is a puzzle to modern military minds. And not only the revolutionary war, but the *war of 1812 was fought by armies simi*larly handicapped by crude and primitive means of transportation.

Railroad building to-day is not so expensive as good road making was in those days, when money was scarce and property of infinitely less value. It was a great undertaking to build the Old York road, and was intensely interesting to the people of that generation, as was the building of railroads across the prairies known as "the great American desert," and over the pathless Rocky mountains 40 years ago and less. The time, particularly in the prairie states; but the planks soon rotted away, and the plank roads ceased to exist. Few people living remember them. Then came the corduroy roads, made of logs. One from Cleveland to Sandusky, in 1845, I've traveled, and his description of the journey is one of the most entertaining and amusing of his voluminous writings.

From 1834 to 1838 $1,600,000 were appropriated for "military roads," principally in western territories. In this manner the friends of good roads circumvented the "state sovereignty" opponents of government appropriations for good roads. But this subject is becoming national once more, although more than half of the states are working under good road laws. What the congress will do in the matter cannot be anticipated, but the department of agriculture has ample evidence from all over the country that the people will be more than satisfied to work out their share on the roads, will be interested in the following opinion of Washington in the same letter: "Repairs by contract would be less burthensome. In this case the contractor would meet with no favor; every man in the district would give information of neglects; whereas negligence under the present system is winked at by the only people who know the particulars or can inform against the overseers." If Washington had been writing about farmers in Illinois, Iowa and other prairie states he could not have hit the nail on the head any harder than that.

The first turnpike road built by corporate interests was the Wilderness turnpike, from the Shenandoah valley, Virginia, over the Allegheny mountains at Cumberland Gap, to central Kentucky. This road had toll gates

MODERN ROAD MAKING.
(Preparing Government Sample Road at Hot Springs, Va.).

70 miles apart, where tolls of two dollars were collected from every traveler. The next good road constructed was the Lancaster and Philadelphia turnpike, which is until this day an excellent work on the macadam plan. In 1806 the government had received from the sale of public lands in Ohio, and the congress appropriated $30,000 for the beginning of the construction of the Cumberland road, from Cumberland, Md., to Wheeling, Va. This was the first national highway. It was well macadamized, the rivers and creeks were spanned by stone bridges and toll houses were supplied with strong iron gates. Henry Clay was the chief advocate of this work, and there is a monument at Wheeling commemorating his services.

The doctrine of "state sovereignty," which played such an important part in all national legislation prior to 1861, operated against further appropriations for national highways. President Monroe having vetoed a large appropriation bill for this purpose, on March 13, 1817. It is a singular fact that John C. Calhoun, chief champion of the doctrine of state sovereignty, had spoken and voted for that appropriation. But instead of voting money out of the national treasury for highways, the different states were allowed certain percentages from the sales of public lands for the purpose of building roads and levees. The Cumberland road received annual appropriations until 1822, when President Monroe interposed a veto. In 1830, on similar grounds, President Jackson vetoed an *act authorizing a government sub*scription to stock in a turnpike company.

On the Fourth of July, 1828, ground was broken for the beginning of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, the ceremony being performed under the direction of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the then only surviving signer of the declaration of independence. This beginning of railroad construction by the "state sovereignty" people as an argument against appropriations for turnpikes. They said that railroads would soon supersede turnpikes, anyway. They were wrong, but they had their way.

States and counties and cities then began local construction of roads. Thousands of miles of plank roads were built. They were popular roads for a time, particularly in the prairie

As an example of how our colonial leaders were slowly feeling their way on this question, we can extract from a letter written November 30, 1785, by George Washington to Gov. Patrick Henry of Virginia:

"Do you not think, my dear sir, that the credit of the union and convenience of the country all require that our great roads leading from one place to another should be straightened, and made perfect, established by law, and the power in the county courts to alter them be withdrawn? Are they three states sufficiently necessary, and is it my opinion that they will take place in time?

Does it not seem strange that the great Washington knew so little of good roads? He was reaching out into the dark, for he knew not exactly what. He entertained the opinion that the roads would "take place in time." He was right; but it was a very long time after he had studied the subject and many years after he was dead, for he had been in his grave ten years when the Old York road was taken under serious consideration.

The people in the states where no road tax is paid by the farmers, who "work out" their share on the roads,

RAT THAT CATCHES MICE.

White Rodent in Brooklyn That Takes Delight in Snaring Its Smaller Kin.

One of the best mousers in the country is a white rat owned by a resident of Brooklyn. This rat, with several of his kind, has been kept in a cage in an unused stable in the rear of the man's home. Their food attracted all the mice in the neighborhood until the *place swarmed with them and they be*gan to overflow into the house.

The man told the children that he would have to get rid of their pets. The little son went back to the stable and let the rats out, so that papa could not catch them. The grandfather of the lot, a big fellow, scurried off into the straw, and in a minute there was a squeaking. He soon appeared with a mouse in his mouth.

He carried it into the cage and started out after another mouse, which he soon caught. He seemed to have a strong hatred for them and was indefatigable in his hunting. He was left at liberty all night and during the morning ten mice were dead in his cage.

It was decided to keep the pets and to give the old fellow his liberty every night. This proved a good plan. This strange mouser hunts like a dog, going over his ground carefully, quickly, silently and thoroughly, now and then stopping to sniff for a scent of his prey.

SOUTH AFRICAN DIAMONDS.

The Mines of That Country Yield Over Forty Million Dollars Annually.

At a meeting of the shareholders of the De Beers Mining company the chairman stated that the De Beers and Kimberley mine had been in full swing for 32 years, and were new producing diamonds to the value of £8,500,000 annually. The company's three mines at Dutoitspan, Bultfontein, and Premier had four and a half times the area of the other two, and had been little worked thus far. If the De Beers and Kimberley mines were worked out the company would still be able to maintain its output for 164 years. The company was now getting a better price for diamonds, and as soon as normal conditions returned the profits would considerably increase. He added that the stock of rough diamonds in London was never lower than now.

Mr. Cecil Rhodes wrote, says a Kimberley correspondent of the Toronto Mail and Empire, agreeing to a proposal to capitalize his life governorship interest in order to avoid friction between himself and the shareholders, but he said it was a heavy sacrifice, which he would have wished to avoid.

It was stated that the shareholders' annual profits amounted to £ 100,000.

MONKEY USES TOOTH BRUSH.

How the Animal Knew the Purpose of the Toilet Article Partially Explained.

In a spirit of abandon David C. Walker, custodian of Lord's park in Elgin, Ill., threw an old tooth brush into the monkey cage at the park. The other day, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, his astonishment became amazement when on visiting the monkey cage he discovered the entire family of monkeys gathered around "Jocko," the largest monkey in the cage, who was in the act of vigorously applying the almost hairless brush to his irregular teeth and fed gums to the amusement of the entire monkey population who chattered and gesticulated in a wild manner as the other specimens looked on.

Custodian Walker said that the aspect of the monkey brushing its teeth was the most remarkable that has ever been brought to his notice in his long service as animal-keeper and custodian of the park. He had no idea to account for the monkey's apparent knowledge of the usage to which a brush of this kind is ordinarily put, but offers the suggestion that the little animal might have undergone an operation in which a tooth brush is used on one of his visits to the home of the custodian at the park.

THIS COUNTRY HEADS LIST.

Stated on Good Authority That the United States Leads World in the Circulation of Literature.

It is interesting to learn that the United States leads the world in the matter of circulating literature. England, strange as it may seem, comes fourth in the list. While Italy, also a new country, stands second. All the countries of the world except France and Germany notably, have, of course, collections of books far exceeding anything both in point of quality and quantity that we have over here. But abroad the richest collection is a collection and stays ing more; it is little else than so much literary dead wood, lying idle on its shelves, as it does, and neither fructifying nor illumining. In the United States a relatively handful of books is turned to account many times over. It is put in circulation until thousands have the opportunity to profit by it. The greatest of masterpieces never yet did anybody any good by merely existing on a shelf. Give the most unpretentious volume a chance, and it cannot fail to quicken thought. This is the secret the United States has learned, and that is why its five books do 20 times the good of the old world's many books.

Little Tales and Gossip of the Sports and Athletes

What is there to a game that enthusiasts are willing to spend nearly $2,000,000 upon to make it a "go" in this country? That is the query that was asked when it was reported that a syndicate of Havana men had purchased a block for $1,000,000 in New York city with the avowed intention of building a $500,000 home for "pelota" in the Moorish style of architecture and naming the national game of Spain. Until the clubhouse is actually built and the experts of the "cesta"—the arrangement worn on the hand while serving the ball—are engaged in hot games for trophies *and championships, there will be criti*cism who will frown down the stories of the liberality of the Cubans.

Spanish Handball Court.

Peluta from the observation point of Americana is a combination of tennis, handball and baseball. The ball is played off a high wall as it is in the game of handball and the serving and scoring are done much as in that game, although the player never uses the ball with his hand. The usual number of points in a game is 40, and sometimes when experts are playing as many as five umpires are required to keep the contestants straight in their scoring.

Soldiers returned from Cuba say that the natives regard the game with as much pleasure as the Filipino does cock fighting. Even Gen. Wood learned to like pelota while in Cuba. Armed with the 15-inch "cestas" bound on the right hand of the players, the latter resemble huge bats in action more than human beings. The "cesta" gives the arm the appearance of a wing. The ball is about the size of a tennis ball and is made elastic by a core of hollow wool surrounded by gutta percha and wrapped with twine. The server is the "boutier," who sends the ball to the floor so that the player on the rebound sends it to the wall. Teams oppose each other and great skill is said to be shown in games by expert "cesta" wielders in carving the ball on the return stroke. Any miss of the ball when striking for it counts a loss and service of the ball is immediately renewed.

Before many days the golf-controlling body of the United States will be called upon to allot a space for the 1902 national championship for amateurs. Also will the United States Golf association be asked to pass upon important matters connected with the manner of running off the national tourney.

It is not unlikely that the big sets of golf will have to decide upon admitting amateurs from anywhere, to compete in this annual championship. Champion Walter J. Travis recently expressed himself emphatically on the necessity for more liberality in representation in the big event. "Every amateur should be eligible," he said. Travis, "whether he comes from Senegambia, Kalamazoo or the Samoan Islands."

The African Amateur Golfer.

Perhaps that will be too liberal an interpretation of the laws of amateurism for the sedate executive committee of the U. S. G. A. Some members of an exclusive associate club in town do object to admitting Senegambians and Samoans on the ground that the North American Indian who for ages has shown his prowess with "clubs"—beastly war clubs, however—might insist upon his right to compete in the *tournament with canny Scots, English*men, Americans and Frenchmen. Seriously speaking, if the Travis idea of eligibility were to be adopted there would be no need of championships. Visitors from the old world who happened to be in the United States at the time of the championship would be eligible to play, and the possibility of a native Ceylon taking away the United States championship would not be remote. As a matter of fact, the holder of the championship of Italy since was an American. Besides, there are good golfers in Ceylon. Maj. Webber, who was once spoken as an authority in golf in the west, was a resident in Ceylon with his regiment many years ago, and he established a golf course. For a long time the little, dark-skinned Singalese boys acted as caddies, keeping their eyes and ears open and picking up the technical points of the royal and ancient game as well as the broad Scotch of the principal players. Today it is no uncommon thing to see in Ceylon a native of the island deep in the intricacies of golf while carrying of his own sons or perhaps one of his relatives is carrying his bag of golf clubs.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Travis is from Australia—he says, however, that he did not learn his golf on that continent—he has twice captured the premier title in this country, and doubtless felt in a humorous mood when he advocated throwing down the bars to amateurs from all over the world. The U. S. G. A. doubtless will seek to avoid complications by making the requisite for an amateur to enter that he belong to some organized club. The breaking down of the policy of giving the associated clubs of the association a voting advantage not accorded to the allied clubs, will be a step in the right direction. It will work toward the popularizing of a game that has made great strides in this country in six years.

It would not surprise those who are following closely the ins and outs of professional baseball if Pitcher Frank Dupee, the star twirler of the Portland team of the New England league, were to be seen in the uniform of a big league this season. Although it may not be generally known, Dupee was once given a chance to show his prowess in the ranks of a championship nine. He had stage fright and was too wild for any use. The first ball he pitched sailed four feet over the head of his catcher and let in three runs. The second man who faced him knocked a fly to the pitcher, who promptly hurled the ball into the grand stand and permitted the baserunner to complete the circuit of the bases.

Pitcher Frank Dupee.

"Here, wait a minute," called out the manager. "Did you say you were a pitcher?"

"I thought I was," was the timid reply of the sheepish ball player. "Well, when we want astronomers we will engage them," was all the exasperated manager said. Dupee never asked for any money for his brief engagement. He felt as if he ought to pay the club something. Yet this young man—he is not yet 20—continued his studies in Westbrook seminary, and in spare weeks essayed the task of pitching the Portland team to the championship of the league. He has a phenomenal supply of curves, and occasionally shows a lack of control. But his heavy hitting — hard-hitting pitchers are scarce—and his ability to play the outfield, make him a valuable player. He began his professional career with the Augusta nine of Maine, and when that disbanded went to Portland. It is a remarkable coincidence that all of the players of the Portland team with the exception of one man were striplings, and only one of the team could boast of having had more than a few months experience in fast company when he *joined the nine. Perhaps there is a fu*ture for Dupee as a pitcher. He may develop into a second Christy Mathewson, the college twirler of the New York club.

E. G. WESTLAKE.

SOLID, "muddled oafs" of England have not been accused of getting into hysterics over "table tennis," but the fact remains that the new parlor game has taken a strong hold upon some of the British who are either too old to play tennis out on the turf court or too indifferent to moderately hard exercise to wield the 16-ounce racquet. "Punch" has caricatured the British playing table tennis in his home. Society women in the United States bought many outfits of table tennis for young friends for Yuletide gifts, but it is dollars to old chairs that nine out of ten of these outfits are now consigned to the "oblivious zone" where go many of the holiday toys.

Table tennis, strictly speaking, is not a toy game. It is a charming and fascinating winter sport for those who do not care to brave the cold outdoors. It has been held up skilled players, men whose work under a broiling sun and on grass courts is dashing, marvelous and fatiguing, that there is plenty of latitude in table tennis for scientific work.

But this scarcely appears probable to the observer who drops into a sporting goods supply house and sees novices wield the little celluloid-covered racquets and hit the celluloid spheres from one end of the table to the other over the "net."

Of course the promoter of the ingenious scheme to amuse the indoor lovers has prepared "rules" for the game. To be very brief, these rules specify the serving of the ball, the return, etc., just as it is done in lawn tennis, the counting being the same. However, the table is not divided into courts, except by the net which is strung across the oak or mahogany, just as it is in lawn tennis.

POINT D'ESPRIT AND NET.

Forecast For Spring and Summer Shows They Will Lead.

Point d'esprit and net lead among the fashionable materials for evening dress. White point d'esprit, which used to be a material considered suitable for debutantes, is now being worn by matrons. It is made up in a variety of attractive ways and richly trimmed with lace and ribbon. Velvet ribbon in graduating widths is considered an especially smart ornamentation, and the waist is banded horizontally with it as well as the gored flounce of the skirt.

These point d'esprit evening gowns are very useful, and they will be much worn next summer, with the addition of a transparent guimpe of lace. Yellow lace and white point d'esprit are considered particularly effective together.

Black point d'esprit is being made up into a variety of ruffled gowns, which are all the rage. Some of these models are a mass of tiny ruffles from the decolletage to the bottom of the skirt. Others have big flounces on the skirt and a plain waist with a fichu or bolero arrangement of ruffles. All are particularly chic and youthful looking, and narrow velvet appears as the principal trimming.

Black brussels net with white rings is the material of the gown in the illustration. The skirt is cut with three gathered ruffles edged with narrow black velvet ribbon and is trimmed at intervals with wavy bands of this same narrow velvet. The waist is also trimmed with it and has in addition a puffed scarf around the decolletage held in at intervals with pearl buckles.

REGARDING HATS.

The Shapes Are Gradually Changing. For Models.

Already the new spring models in hats are being shown. There is not much change. The flat shape is gradually giving way to the shepherdess and walking shape. The latter is raised on both sides with a suggestion of a tilt on the left, and it is trimmed with a wreath of flowers or two or three carelessly disposed rosettes. The under part of these upturned brims is highly trimmed with shirrings of chiffon, narrow velvet ribbons, appliques, etc.

Autumn leaves figure a good deal on hats just at present, and a most chic combination is one of black roses and brilliantly colored autumn foliage. Black flowers of all kinds are very much the rage, and they differ from those of last year by being made of all silk instead of silk and velvet.

Three cornered shapes of fur are being seen on every hand. Fur hats, in fact, are the most stylish millinery for this time of the year. These fur hats are trimmed very simply with scarfs of lace or crepe de chine in pale colors.

Flowers on hats are reappearing again, and the larger blossoms are preferred. They are combined with lace and fur and are grouped on the brim with apparent carelessness. The effect has gone forth that the hat must match the gown—in fact, that the entire costume must be en suite. This is carried out even in the trimmings of some of the new hats where feather, sleeve and toque-ation all match.

The illustration shows a sable hat in the popular turban shape. It is trimmed with a fringed scarf of pale pink crepe de chine passed through gold buckles. With this are worn a stole shaped scarf of the sable and a soft collar and cuff of pale pink chiffon.

ORIGINAL EVENING GOWN.

Transmakers Vie In Producing Striking Effects.

To be a success this season an evening gown must have the stamp of originality. True, it follows the prescribed lines of fashion, but it is in the detail and the coloring that the keynote of chic is sounded. Take, for instance, a dress of fawn colored chiffon over oriental satin of the same shade. The decolletage is surrounded by a frilled and toothed berthe of chiffon heavily embroidered with autumn leaves in their natural colorings. These heavy embroideries are taking the place of the flower appliques, which have been a trifle overdone and which can be purchased in any shop by the yard, thus putting them within the reach of everybody.

Bolero figure prominently on decollete dresses. However, they are so shortened and curved that they resemble yokes or fancy collars. The latest have oddly shaped revers and are fastened together and ornamented with narrow ribbons.

Veiled effects, either in skirts or entire costumes, are among the novelties

OF PALE BLUE VEILING.

This style was undoubtedly derived from the empire tunic worn over the tight fitting princess slip.

The cut shows a gown which illustrates some of the points described. It is made of pale blue veiling. The waist has a bolero edged with bands of black and white spotted panne. This opens over a full blouse, which is shirred into a band over the bust. From the points of the bolero to the belt are two bunches of narrow velvet ribbon. The sleeves are unique. They reach only to the elbow and consist of a slashed upper sleeve which reveals a shirred undersleeve. The skirt has a full overskirt extending half way around and bordered with the black and white band. The underskirt is plain, with a shirred flounce.

LINGERIE AND STOCKS.

The Latest Petticoat—Stocks For Dressy and Ordinary Wear.

Now is the time of the year to invest in pretty lingerie and stocks. The newest and prettiest French petticoats are made with a graduated flounce reaching very high up in the back and correspondingly low in front. On this are set any number of narrow little ruffles edged with lace. This makes an ideal petticoat for a long trained skirt.

Black and white combinations are very smart in taffeta petticoats. Many of them have heavy white beading run through with black velvet ribbon. Corset covers entirely made of beading and ribbon are also all the style.

The up to date stocks have bows of tulle under the chin or else many looped bows of lace and narrow ribbon. It is quite the thing to have one-half the bow of one material and the other half of something entirely different. White taffeta stocks embroidered in pale colors and having short ties with round ends also embroidered are considered smart. A black taffeta bow and stock stitched in white is very useful for morning wear to go with flannel waists.

A tailor made flannel blouse is shown in today's illustration. It is made with stitched tucks forming a yoke. It fastens on the side by means of a stitched flap with buttons. There are two stitched pockets. With this are worn a turn-down collar and a four-in-hand of black silk.

SHORT SKIRTS.

They Are Much Longer and Much More Trimmed.

Golf skirts are growing longer and skirts for walking length shorter. The result is that the clever girl with a small income can make one garment supply the wants of two. These short skirts are slowly but surely following the general tendency to overornamentation. They are banded with rich fur, headed and edged by folds of the goods, and the seams take the form of narrow clusters of tucks stitched down flat and flaring about the feet. On all the smartest models a gored and heavily stitched flounce is necessity.

It goes without saying that as a result of this trimming the skirt materials are much lighter in weight and that many of the skirts are made of ordinary dress goods lined with silk.

The hats which go with the short skirt costumes are soft and becoming in shape and are trimmed with pale colored ribbon or breasts.

Capes are only used for riding and other occasions where an extra wrap is required. The most useful cape is one of velvet or broadcloth cut circular and having a very full circular flounce. Both the edge of the flounce and its heading are heavily stitched. The collar can either be of the standup variety or a medici shape, fastening close about the throat. Very pretty capes are made of deep red lined with the same color or of white lined with Persian silk in pale colors.

A smart golfing costume for cold days is shown in the cut. The shirt waist is made of washable flannel, with a cape collar of plain silk of the same shade and a tie also of the same material. The waist has full sleeves gathered into a narrow cuff. The belt is of patent leather. The short skirt is of rough hairy goods and is cut so as to flare at the bottom.

NOVEL TOUCHES.

Characteristics of Some of the Latest Gowns and Wraps.

A good many collars are being cut in square lines, and the same holds true of decolletages. Short, square yokes are edged with embroidery and filled in with rare bits of old lace. In many cases the collar itself seems to be continued down into a square effect both back and front. A great many dresses even for elderly people, have strappings and embroideries across the back, simulating outline collars, and the same line is seen on outside garments both for day and evening wear. The fashionable back must be broad and flat between the shoulders.

Belts and sashes of Persian ribbon are very fashionable just at present and figure on most of the dressy gowns. The Persian ribbons come in all widths and in all degrees of gorgeousness. They are not only used for sashes, but, joined together by lines of featherstitching, they are made into most chic waists and petticoats, and they also figure in the tea gowns which English women have made so popular among us. They are also cut up to make tiny boleros, and the irregular applications are a feature of every smart gown.

Single large orchids are to be seen on separate waists. The orchid serves to fasten the bolero or fichu with which the waist is trimmed. These waists are used for theater and informal dinner occasions.

The toque shown in the cut is of rough white felt arranged in five folds and held down by two white, short straps of velvet. A black and white plaid scarf forms the sole trimming. This is knotted carelessly around the brim and falls over the hair in the back.

JUDGE CROLLEY.

DRESSES VERSUS WAISTS.

Fur Former Are Rapidly Gaining Supremacy.

Dresses are growing in favor, to the exclusion of separate waists. For afternoon wear many gowns are worn with three-quarter coats, and in the spring these costumes will be worn on the street, with the addition of a chiffon or feather boa. Pretty models are made up in the wool novelties, both smooth and rough, the rough ones, of course, being for informal wear. In the dressy class of materials broadcloth leads, followed by silk and wool crapes, poplins, bengalines and all moire fabrics. Velvet is purposely excluded, as it is a little late to make up gowns of this sort. A pretty model for a wool novelty gown consists of a blouse waist, with a round yoke of monsseline de soie and lace, trimmed with circular bands of narrow velvet ribbon. Short upper sleeves reach to the elbow, and the undersleeves, made of the lace and monsseline, are in two puffs gathered into a tight fitting cuff made of the goods and the narrow ribbon. The skirt can be plain, with a ruffle striped with perpendicular applications of the ribbon and beaded by a toothed strapping outlined with embroidery.

In today's sketch we have a simple but neat tailor made gown. It is of blue sibeline. The waist is made with a strapped crossed over effect and a wide double collar of the cloth and of velvet of a darker shade. The sleeves have wide turnover cuffs and undersleeves of lace. The belt is of velvet. The skirt is circular and opens on the front seam with a strapped effect and two buttons. The hat which goes with this dress is of black velvet and tulle.

JUDGE CROLLEY.

ROUGH GOODS.

They Are Made Up Into Smart Walking and Golf Costumes.

The vogue of rough goods is not declining, and smart costumes are being made up for morning wear in grays, browns and dark blues. For trimmings there are narrow bands of fur and velvet and frequently bands of broadcloth stitched of the *same or contrast*ing shades. The Russian blouse trimmed with perpendicular strappings is a favorite model. This has a big collar of mink or some other durable fur, and with this is worn a muff of the same.

For skating or golfing very neat jackets are made of double faced goods, having the revers and sometimes the cuffs made of the reverse, which is a check of plaid.

The skirts of these morning costumes are made without trains, and they are worn with a short petticoat or slip. The walking or shopping length of skirt is becoming more and more popular. On the other hand, trains on reception and indoor gowns are becoming much longer. The keynote of appropriateness has been struck, and it is not considered smart to see a reception length of gown in the shopping district.

The smart coat in the illustration is made of gray double faced goods. It is trimmed with stitched strappings and tiny silver buttons. The front is double breasted and has a wide collar, which extends well over the shoulders. The sleeves are bell shaped and are trimmed with two rows of silver buttons. The hat worn with this is of pale gray felt trimmed with a twist of white silk.

FREE FROM CONTEST.

Coming Session of Congress to Be Without Excitement.

Two Men from Iowa Will Continue to Shape National Legislation — Some Historic Speakership Fights.

[Special Washington Letter.]

BY CONSTITUTIONAL requirement the congress must convene annually on the first Monday in December; and in compliance with that mandate of the basic law the statesmen are gathering.

Usually at the beginning of a new congress there is a scramble for the speakership and the offices of both the senate and the house of representatives; but this year there is no contest, no excitement, no indication of acrimony in any quarter.

The writer has witnessed many organizations of the congress, and remembers well the contests which resulted in the elections of Randall, Carlisle, Reed and Crisp to the speakership. In those days the adherents of the aspirants for that high honor were busy by day and by night during the two weeks preceding the convening of the congress. The older members were carefully watchling the railroad depots and the hotel registers, either personally or by proxy, in order to gather in the new members and secure their votes in caucus for their favorites.

In November, 1883, the democrats had a majority of the house of repre*sentatives and the great contest* was between ex-Speaker Sam Randall and John G. Carlisle, resulting in the selection of Carlisle. It was the first great battle made of the democratic party between the protectionist and free trade elements. William R. Morrison, of Illinois, was the leader of the Carlisle faction, and his successful management naturally caused his subsequent selection to the chairmanship of the committee on ways and means. In that capacity a free trade bill was formulated by him, and it was well known as the Morrison bill. It was a celebrated measure, and all of the newspapers gave columns upon columns to its discussion. So fleeting is fame, however, that the name of neither Morrison nor Carlisle is now known to the average reader of daily newspapers.

The next great speakership contest was at the beginning of the Fifty-first congress, in November, 1889, when Reed, of Maine; McKinley, of Ohio; Burrows, of Michigan; Cannon, of Illinois, and Henderson, of Iowa, were the leading candidates. Mr. Reed was selected, and McKinley was made chairman of the committee on ways and means. A protectionist bill was framed which became celebrated as the McKinley bill. That measure was rejected by the people in 1890, and McKinley was defeated for reelection to congress. It is a singular fact that out of McKinley's defeat for the speakership and his defeat for reelection grew his presidential opportuni*ties. He was twice elected governor of* Ohio, in which position he served without fee or salary. The fame of the McKinley bill did not die. Thus he became the champion of protection, and his party kept him to the front until finally he was made president of the *republic. Very well might he have re*peated Terence Mahon's query in Dion-

"I hold it truth with him who sings
To one clear harp in divers tones:
That men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves, to higher things."

The next great speakership contest was in November, 1891, when Crisp, of Georgia; Mills, of Texas; McMillin, of Tennessee, and Springer, of Illinois, were the leading candidates for that honor. The writer was in the room of the committee on appropriations that evening, when Springer, of Illinois, consented to withdraw in favor of Crisp; and that brought about the selection of Crisp, with the subsequent appointment of Springer to the chairmanship of the committee on ways and means.

Some time in May, 1899, Speaker Reed declared his intention of re*signing from congress, and that* opened another fight for the speakership in which Henderson, of Iowa; Hopkins, of Illinois; Sherman, of New York, and Bingham, of Pennsylvania, were the candidates before the republican caucus; but it was all over before the congress convened, and Henderson was chosen. That is an interesting story, and it has never been told before. Here are the facts:

During the six months preceding March 2, 1899, Henry Casson, ex-secretary of state of Wisconsin, was a candidate for the position of director of the census. Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, was chairman of the committee on the census. The Wisconsin men begged *Mr. Hopkins to act as chair*man of the committee on the census, in urging Casson's appointment; but Mr. Hopkins declined to exert his influence in that manner, and on March 3, 1899, Mr. Merriam, of Minnesota, was appointed director of the census. In June following, when the speakership contest was being waged, it was a question whether the great west would support Hopkins, of Illinois, or Henderson, of Iowa. The Wisconsin members gathered in Milwaukee to decide for whom they would vote for the speakership. It was then the recollection of the refusal of Mr. Hopkins to support Mr. Casson for the census directorship, and the keen recollec*tion of the fact that Mr. Henderson,* of Iowa, had diligently supported Mr. Casson, that was mainly instrumental in influencing the Wisconsin congressmen to decide in favor of Henderson; and that settled it. The entire west fell into line for Henderson, and Mr. Hopkins withdrew. Col. Henderson also had the support of Pennsylvania's big delegation, by the withdrawal of Bingham, in his favor, and he was selected unanimously.

(New United States Senator from the State of Montana.)

The contest for the speakership of two years ago will not be repeated. Speaker Henderson will be chosen without opposition by the republican caucus, and will be elected; because the republicans have a large majority in the house of representatives. This admitted fact accounts for the quiet and apparent apathy in political circles at this time. The democratic minority will choose Hon. James D. Richardson, of Tennessee, and all of the members of that party will vote for him. That is not an empty honor. The man who is chosen as the leader of the minority at this time will tacitly retain his leadership until such time as the democrats shall have a majority; and then, if he lives, Mr. Richardson will undoubtedly be chosen for the speakership. Therefore, it is that Mr. Richardson seeks and will receive the nomination of his party, because he is looking to the future for his preferment. The men in the political world who must have the sagacity to peer into the coming years, and "learn to labor and to wait."

There will be no political contest of any kind in the organization of the senate. That body always has a "president pro tempore," whose duty it is to preside during the absence or inability of the vice president to perform his functions. When the last congress adjourned Vice President Roosevelt was the presiding officer of the senate, and Senator Frye, of Maine, was the presiding officer pro tempore. Inasmuch as the senate is a continuing body, and does not need reorganization every two years (as the house of representatives does) Senator Frye will take the gavel and call the senate to order, without the intervention of a caucus or other parliamentary machinery.

Because the senate is a continuing body, it will not be necessary to elect sergeant at arms, secretary or other officers. The senate, in January, 1900, elected its officers, and they will continue to serve until such time as the present minority shall have a majority, when complete changes will occur in all of the prominent official positions.

The senate has no masterful official who has power to shape legislation. The party which happens to be in the majority at any time holds caucuses and selects the chairmen and members of the committees. The senate itself retains the power which the house gives to its presiding officer. The senate majority always recognizes its oldest members, those longest in continuous service, as leaders.

Because of these diverse conditions in the two bodies comprising the congress, a singular condition is now presented. Senator Allison, of Iowa, is chairman of the committee on appropriations, chairman of the steering committee which shapes legislation, and chairman of the majority caucus. Because of his 24 years of continuous service, he is the recognized leader of the senate in all things.

Thus, by reason of events which seem to have shaped themselves, two men from Iowa, Senator Allison and Speaker Henderson, both of them not only from the same state, but also from the same county, and from the same city, Dubuque, have marvelous power in the congress. The one shapes and controls affairs in the house of representatives; the other as unostentatiously shapes affairs in the senate. Both of them, from the same city, have more power in national affairs than any other two men on earth, excepting the czar of Russia, and the emperor of Germany. And the senators and representatives cheerfully follow their leadership, for they are honorable men, as well as capable of performing their high functions.

LOVE THAT NEVER LIED.

Texas Colonel Married to the Flame of His Youth After Fifty Years of Parting.

When Col. N. L. Norton, youngest surviving member of the confederate congress, married Mrs. Frances C. P. Porter at Memphis recently a romance which had suffered an interposition of half a century was rounded off. The principals had been sweethearts in childhood and had since then lived the width of the continent apart.

Long before the civil war Norton and the woman who is now his wife lived in Nicholas county, Ky. He was a collegian and she was a belle of the region, and they were devotedly in love with each other. Unfortunately for their plans, they were second cousins, and their parents objected to the match between them. So Norton gave up hope and moved to Missouri.

When the war came Norton went to the southern congress, then enlisted and served under Sterling Price, won a colonelcy by bravery, drifted to Texas, and took a bride when peace had been restored. This wife died some time ago and only a grandchild survives as a relic of the marriage. The colonel grew rich in Texas and lives in ease on a comfortable estate.

The girl also accepted another suitor, a man named Porter, a prominent citizen of Millersburg, Ky., who died and left her a comfortable fortune, and on this she supported herself in magnificent style. Some time ago she and the colonel learned each of the other's whereabouts, and each became aware that these early marriages had in no way dimmed the early love which even shone the brighter by contrast with these lesser flames. So a correspondence was opened, here was declared, marriage decided on, and both journeyed to Memphis, where they met and were married. They will live on Col. Norton's estate in Texas, making long visits to Kentucky. Col. Norton is 71 years of age.

HELD UP BY A DEER.

A Maine Man Has a Surprising and Hair-Raising Adventure in a Highway.

The latest highway hold-up is reported from Dexter, and is a little out of the ordinary, even in this game-infested state, says the Augusta (Me.) Journal. It happened about three miles from the village, and Henry Allen tells the story as follows:

"I was passing along, my thoughts upon other matters than my surroundings, when I was startled almost to a point of a panicky feeling by the loud snort of a deer. Very naturally I jumped, and as I looked ahead of me, there, standing on the road, I could see the outline of a large buck deer in the twilight. I threw my ax at him and the weapon failed of hitting the mark. Before I could realize what the deer's intentions was, he struck me with one of his forward legs, striking my hand.

"When he did that I made up my mind that he intended to kill me, and that it was time to yell. I presume in my fright I yelled pretty loud, anyway I felt like it, and when I did so the big buck gave another snort, as did a half dozen more deer that were apparently lying down in the woods close by the road, and then all of the animals rushed off through the woods as fast as they could go."

TIME TO ACT.

Just because the borough of North Plainfield has grown and thrived and no great pestilence has broken out in the past, there are some people in that community who are now vigorously opposing the establishment of a sewage disposal plant for the borough on the ground that it is best to "let well enough alone." Never was a greater mistake made. There is need for a system of sewers for North Plainfield and some method to dispose of the sewage.

It was a step in the right direction when Mayor Smalley appointed a commission of borough citizens to look into the subject and discover, if possible, the most satisfactory means of disposal. There was much delay on the part of the commission in getting down to work. Some of it was excusable and part was not. That is past, however, and the commission has now regularly organized and began its work.

One of its first acts will be to inspect the disposal plant of the city of Plainfield. The alterations there have not been given a long enough trial to determine their success. According to the reports of Street Commissioner Garrett, there is every prospect that the new plan is being successfully operated. This will be very interesting for the borough sewage commission for it may be the means of leading them to recommend a similar plant for North Plainfield.

It is understood that the commission will make some kind of a report to the Borough Council. It is not at all unlikely that a request will be made for funds for the commission to pursue its investigations. If such a request is made, there should be no hesitancy on the part of the Borough Council to appropriate a proper sum without delay. It will be remembered that $100 was given to the municipal ownership committee and never used. The time has happened when the sewage commission appear to be more in earnest than were the members of the other committee and, if the funds are given them, there is no doubt but they will be well expended and the borough will be the gainer thereby.

The borough has outgrown the antiquated system of cisterns and cesspools. It is both expensive and unhealthy. The time has come when North Plainfield should be put on a plane with other progressive communities. The sooner that sewers are built there, the better it will be for all concerned.

WHY HE BELIEVES IN HELL

REV. JOHN M'MURRAY SAYS THAT THE MASTER TAUGHT IT.

Nothing is Said, However, That Hell Fire is Literal Fire—It Will be as Bad.

At the Monroe Ave. church, Sunday evening, Rev. John MacMurray, delivered another sermon on his series of the "Future Life." The subject was "Sheol, Hades and Gehenna" and was one of the most interesting yet given.

After briefly explaining the meaning of the three terms, Mr. MacMurray declared that the main ground for the support and belief in future punishment is that the Master taught it. The gentle and loving Saviour, who loved man to such an extent that He gave up His life for him, taught His disciples to believe that there is a future state of punishment. They believed it at the time and the great body of the Christian church has done so ever since.

Throughout His entire teachings, said Mr. MacMurray, He cautioned the people to prepare for the future and the great beyond. He spoke understandingly and as one who had come down from Heaven with the teachings of God He did not teach that symbols were literal and not figures, that Hell is a literal kingdom, nor that there is a literal fire there, nor they who were gathered there are literally tormented as men in dungeons and inquisitional prisons were. But He did imply that the sins of men would bring down upon them penalties then and penalties hereafter and the dungeon is neither light nor temporary.

And theory of the future life, the speaker said, which takes the responsibility away from any man or lessens his feeling the awfulness of sin, is unchristian and dangerous. "As long as I hold to the Divinity of Christ," said the preacher, "I cannot but hold the truth He taught me to believe and to teach others, that sin will be visited in the other life with terrible punishments such as no imagination can perceive."

MEN'S CLUB WAS ORGANIZED

FORMED AT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH SUNDAY MORNING.

Men of the Congregation Will Meet Once a Month—The Officers Were Elected.

The movement to form an association for the men of the Congregational church resulted Sunday morning in the formal organization of the Men's Club of the Congregational church. A constitution was adopted, officers were elected and nearly fifty men expressed a determination to be enrolled in its membership.

At a meeting of the men of the church two weeks ago, Frank A. Weeks, Alex. Miller and M. C. VanArsdale were appointed a committee to draw up a constitution. It was expected that the formal organization would be effected a week ago, but the meeting was postponed until yesterday on account of the bad weather, which kept many at home.

Much interest was shown at yesterday's meeting. The regular meetings of the club will be held on the first Tuesdays of each month. The executive committee will provide the programme. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, W. B. Wadsworth; vice president, Alex Millar; secretary, G. F. Updike; treasurer, H. W. Tomlinson; executive committee, A. C. LaBoyteaux and J. A. Powlison. The pastor, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, and the officers will form the other members of the executive committee.

This organization was the outgrowth of the belief that the men of the church should be organized. Heretofore, the women, the children and the young people have been organized but there has been nothing particularly for the men. It was believed that the example, set by many churches in other cities in forming men's clubs, had met with much success. So this club was started.

It is stated by R. I. Tolles, chairman of the Councilmanic street committee, that the recent increase in Street Commissioner Gavett's salary is in connection with the supervision of the sewer system and disposal works and is to be paid from the sewer appropriation; also that the street and sewer committee does not intend to ask for any increase in that appropriation over that made for previous years.

THEATRICAL.

According to recent reports from New York city, Boston, Philadelphia and Providence, a new and very contagious "habit" has fastened itself upon the people of these cities, and once contracted it is impossible to throw it off. It is called the "Keith Habit," being named after B. F. Keith, the builder of the big vaudeville theatres in the cities mentioned. It seems that one visit to Keith's Theatre is sufficient to innoculate the amusement-loving public with the germs of delight, and once infected, the "habit" remains, and constant visits to Keith's cause is to grow with proportionate pleasure. At Keith's Theatre in New York, next week, Willie Clark, the famous English comedian, with his supporting company of artists, will be the chief distributors of amusement. Mr. Clark has been a successful star for many years under the management of Augustin Daly, and was the principal comedian with Booth and Barrett. Owing to his tremendous success, the great Rudinoff has been retained for another week to exhibit new smoke paintings, bird imitations and hand shadows. Hickey and Nelson, the greatest of all comedy acrobats, are also featured, as well as Mlle. Marzella and her performing birds; Marion Manola, the operatic star; Little Elsie, the mimic; Karsy's Myriophon, the latest musical novelty, and a host of others.

Proctor's theatres in New York and Newark are enjoying a remarkably succesful season due not only to the general popularity of these theatres but because of the superior excellence of the bills which are presented. Proctor's, Newark, is proving to be a very lively infant. For the week of Feb. 10 a notable array has been listed. The topping feature will be the Svengalis, a quartette of Europeans who present a mystifying and novel offering. Others in the bill will be May Edouin & Co., in a little sketch entitled "All in the Family;" James Richmond Glenroy and James H. Cullen, in monologue specialties; the Powers Brothers, in a novelty act; Bartlett and May, in a comedy sketch and Fred Leslie's performing dogs. The kalatechnoscope will be held over for the presentation of moving pictures. For Lincoln's Birthday preparations have been made to accommodate extra crowds and the performance will be continuous afternoon and evening. Peter F. Dailey & Co., move over to the Twenty-third Street to top the big continuous vaudeville which is the prevailing policy at that house. He present "A Dress Rehearsal" and will be assisted by Frank Lane, Eddie Garvey, May Lowrey and Mollie Thompson. Hoyt's "A Temperance Town" will be given at the Fifty-eighth Street by the Proctor Stock Company, preceded by "One Touch of Nature," a pathetic little curtain raiser. "Innocent as a Lamb" will be enacted by the Proctor Stock Company at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street. It will be preceded by Clay H. Greene's newest travesty, "Four Times Foiled." The Proctor Stock Company tests its versatility in a presentation of Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown" at the Fifth Avenue. William Corthell, Mabel Montgomery and Pearl Evelyn will be the leaders. Special scenery has been prepared and an excellent performance is assured.

Ice May Cost More.

It seems to be the general opinion of ice dealers that the price of ice next summer will be about the same or a trifle more than it was last season. It then averaged about 30 cents a hundred. It has been said that at that price money was being lost. It is possible that a little more may be asked if the crop should be smaller than it was a year ago.

Cat is Missing.

The feline that has been making his home at Woodhull & Martin's store for two weeks past, is missing and the people in the store are much pained. It is believed that the cat has departed for parts unknown.

Changes at 'Phone Exchange.

Charles McCann, of the local telephone company, has been transferred from night duty to day duty. Harry Langer now operates the switch-boards alone after 9 o'clock in the evening.

Among the Plainfielders who visited the scene of the great fire at Paterson, yesterday, were Albert I. Littell and George Fairing.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

Clippings From Other Newspapers Which May be of Interest to Plainfield and Its Citizens.

Should S. S. Childs be nominated for Congress in the new Fourth District against the present Senator from Somerset, the patrons of a number of restaurants need not be surprised if they find Reed birds on the bill of fare after next fall's election.—New-ark News.

New Brunswick is slowly but surely completing its quota of the McKinley Memorial Fund. Plainfield has less than a third of hers, and what she has was subscribed by a dozen or so of citizens. Patriotism doesn't seem to be one of Plainfield's boasted modern improvements.—New Brunswick Home News.

Assemblyman Newcorn, of Plainfield, the home of Senator Reed, defeated that gentleman in the treasurership fight by voting for Briggs. Plainfield bankers consequently have their hammers out for Newcorn. The Middlesex men, who were on the losing side, may also get some knocks from the banks.—New Brunswick Home News.

The friends of Senator Reed regret that he lost the State treasurership, especially by so narrow a margin. There seemed to be a feeling among the Assemblymen that the place should be held by one who was possessed of a business training rather than a lawyer. It is hoped that the contest will not tend to complicate matters in this congressional district next fall.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

In three years a good many things may have a very different aspect from present conditions, but it is not in the nature of things that United States Senator Kean will be reelected, and his term will have seen its finish in that period. There are plenty of good guessers who seem to regard that proposition as settled already, and that there is scarcely any need of discussing it further. The complications of the Senatorial fight brought that about, and the whole trend of active thought is as to who will succeed the millionaire banker, trolley, gas and water magnate. It is about certain that Congressman Gardner has decided to remain in the field as an active, alert candidate for the succession, and that all of the work to be done by his friends in the coming months is to be done with the set purpose of furthering his cause. Whether David Baird shall make the try again is a question for the future, and his friends, as however. He says it is not possible to answer it for himself at this time. The sturdy and influential friends of Senator Stokes will see to it that he is not lost in the shuffle. They will insist in keeping him very much in the foreground, and if, when the time comes, it shall be deemed expedient to present him as a candidate he will have his fences in good trim for the best results.—Philadelphia Record.

QUIET MARRIAGE OF MISS MARY WILSON

Wedded at Her Home to Jos. B. Truitt, Prominent Manufacturer, of Philadelphia.

A VERY QUIET AFFAIR.

CEREMONY WAS PERFORMED AT "TUNLAW," SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy Officiated at the Marriage—The Only Attendant Was the Bride's Brother, Who Was Best Man.

Miss Mary E. Wilson, the only daughter of Col. John. F. Wilson, of "Tunlaw," North Plainfield, was united in marriage to Joseph B Truitt, a prominent resident and business man of Philadelphia, Saturday afternoon, at the spacious home of the bride's father. Owing to the recent death of a relative of the groom, the wedding was void of any ostentatious features, and it was witnessed only by the immediate families.

The wedding took place at 1 o'clock and was performed by Rev. T. Logan Murphy, formerly rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, a warm and personal friend of the bride and her father. The impressive ceremony of the Episcopal church was performed in the parlor, where the decorations were of pink and green.

The bride wore a gown of pale grey cloth, and a violet toque. She was unattended, although her brother, Alan Wilson, was best man. There were no others in the bridal party. Following the ceremony there was a cordial expression of the hearty wishes offered by the guests, after which a wedding breakfast was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Truitt left early in the afternoon to enjoy a honeymoon of four weeks' duration. They will be "at home" after March 1, at "The Gladstones," Eleventh and Vine streets, Philadelphia. The very many tokens of value and beauty received by the bride, gives much evidence of the high esteem in which she and her husband are held.

The bride, who has spent most of her life in Plainfield, has during recent years been prominently identified with many of the affairs given by local society. She has been interested in charity enterprises and her zealous work has led to the success of many undertakings. Mrs. Truitt is not only prominent in this city, but in Philadelphia, where she has visited a great deal, she has been identified with the best society.

Mr. Truitt is one of the best known business men in Philadelphia, being one of the largest manufacturers in this country. He is the owner of the Keystone Knitting Mills and the Quaker City Mills, which are located in and near Philadelphia. He is also one of the founders of the Manufacturers' Club, besides being a member of the Union League Club and Art Club, all of Philadelphia. He was a leading member of the Reciprocity Convention which met in Washington a few months ago. Mr. Truitt belongs to one of the oldest families of Delaware, direct descendants of Revolutionary stock.

Miss Cora Miller was the guest of friends in Westfield last night.

BELIEVES THE WORLD IS GROWING BETTER

Rev. J. W. Richardson Answered the Question "Up or Down Grade" in a Sermon.

HE GAVE HIS REASONS.

BASED HIS BELIEF ON MANY FACTS AND FIGURES.

While Wickedness May Be Pronounced at Times, There is Reason to Believe the World is Growing Better.

"Up or Down Grade," was the subject of the discourse delivered on Sunday morning at the Park Avenue Baptist church, by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Richardson. The text was Ecclesiastes vii :10: "Say not, what is the cause that the former days were better than these? For thou dost not inquire wisely concerning this."

The speaker said in part:

"Some people tell us that the Christian faith is dying out. Christianity may yet change the seat of its glory as the centre of civilization was transferred from the Nile and Euphrates, to England and America. But Christianity cannot die. Christ is its soul. 'He was once dead, but now is alive forever more.' So long as Christ sits on the throne Christian faith cannot die.

"In 1890 out of a population of 60,000,000 over 20,000,000 were members of Christian churches. One church member in every three of the population does not indicate failure. In 1900, ten years later, while the population of the country increased at the rate of 2.18 per cent. annually, church membership gained at the rate of 2.67 per cent. annually. True many of these church members are only nominal Christians; but on the other hand think of the thousands who pray to Christ and whose sympathies are with the church, and who contribute to her necessities, but for some reason have not identified themselves with any church. These may more than counterbalance the nominal Christians.

"Also judging from the enormous sizes of the 'Christian Endeavor' organization, 'Young People's Societies,' their matchless enthusiasm, their spiritual boldness and the way they mold public opinion, it is very evident that Christian sentiment is very much alive in this country, and the millions of the rising generation will not espouse atheism. It is still a fact that the leading business men of this country are Christians. It is still a fact that the greatest statesmen of modern times are devout Christians. It is a fact that today there are more Christian books than any other kind of literature.

"Wickedness may be very pronounced today, infidelity like the frogs of the swamp may set up a greater croaking, heroties may hang out red flags and blow fog horns! But Christianity in the person of the true believer was never more firmly rooted in our civilization than now. There are in all these Evangelical churches thousands who would go to the stake for Jesus Christ.

"Christian devotion is not a lost art! The true Christian is not a friendless tramp! Men who have a faculty for displaying the spectacular in religion are making the most noise just now, are sending up religious sky-rockets that fizz and make a dazzling light, but rockets burn out. On the other hand, the millions upon millions of evangelical tracts and books and magazines that are sold and distributed every year, show that the quiet people who read and think have not changed their sentiments regarding a crucified Christ. The world is not yet in the hands of a profligate Liberalism to be handed back to the license and barbarism of the middle ages."

One Minute Cough Cure is absolutely safe and acts immediately. For coughs, colds, croup, grip, bronchitis and all other throat and lung troubles it is a certain cure. Very pleasant to take. sufficiently to attain the end desired—the relief of the needy one.

"The Associated Charities is a modern device for the prevention of pauperism by raising paupers to the plane of self-support and by stopping the supply at its source, through caring for the children and improving the life in the home. Its work is so wise and so efficient and, in the end, so beneficial to the community that every citizen ought gladly to aid in its support by becoming a member and paying the annual fee."

Saved Him From Torture.

There is no more agonizing trouble than piles. The constant itching and burning make life intolerable. No position is comfortable. The torture is unceasing. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures piles at once. For skin diseases, cuts, burns, bruises, all kinds of wounds it is unequalled. J. S. Gerall, St. Paul, Ark., says: "From 1865 I suffered with the protruding, bleeding piles and could find nothing to help me until I used DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. A few boxes completely cured me." Beware of counterfeits. L. W. Randolph.

HEAD NOISES CEASE IMMEDIATELY.

F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, MD.

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I wish to give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion. About five years ago my right ear began to ache, and this I was very careful of, but in spite of my hearing in this ear entirely.

I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, when a number of physicians, among others, the most eminent aurist of Baltimore, declared that the only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, then the head noises would return, but the hearing in the affected ear would be forever lost.

Then saw your advertisement, accidentally in a New York paper, and concluded to write you. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours, J. A. WERMAN, 726 S. Broadway, Baltimore, Md.

VARIED SCENES WERE PICTURED IN LIFE

Series of Tableaux Given at Y. M. C. A. Hall by Church Societies.

MUSICAL SELECTIONS.

UNDER AUSPICES OF ENDEAVOR SOCIETY AND KING'S DAUGHTERS.

Connected With Park Avenue Baptist Church—Those Who Took Part in the Living Pictures—What They Were.

The living pictures given Thursday in the Y. M. C. A. Hall under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society and King's Daughters of the Park Avenue Baptist church, attracted an appreciative audience.

Frederick Green, attired to represent a negro, announced the various tableaux and other numbers on the programme in a style that convulsed the audience with laughter. Mrs. Frederick Green presided at the piano and rendered appropriate selections throughout the evening.

The first tableau, "Rock of Ages," was given by Miss Emily Runyon, while Miss Elsie Giles sang the hymn. "The Three Graces," were represented by Miss Elsie Giles, Miss Lillian Richardson and Miss Mary Giles. Miss Priscilla Beatrice Emmons gave a portrayal of "Diana in the Moon."

In a series of three pictures, "The Artists' Dream," was given. In the first picture Arthur Krom appeared as a sculptor. In the next two pictures Miss Bessie Giles appeared as the finished product of the artist, while the artist was asleep. Elmer D. Catting, accompanied on the piano by Clifford Braddock, gave a pleasing solo that won a hearty encore.

The next tableau was a representation of "The Soldier's Farewell," in which Miss Adelaide Runyon, Ernest Whitney, and the Misses Arline and Marjorie Brown appeared. Mr. Whitney was the soldier, while the others as his family, were bidding him goodbye. Miss Jennie Giles appeared as a "homeless" waif. One of the tableaux that elicited much interest was that entitled "Outside the Lines." It was a picture of one soldier assisting another by giving him a drink of water. The soldiers were Clinton Hall and Herbert Brokaw.

Miss Aimee Emmons recited "The Sign of the Heart," and for an encore she recited Eugene Field's charming selection "Little Boy Blue." Miss Emmons was given a cordial reception and her work was of a high character. She possessed a remarkable degree of mastery and is prefectly at ease while reciting.

The next tableau was entitled "Off Duty." Wesley B. Brokaw, as a policeman, and Miss Elizabeth Van-Winkle, as a servant, were represented as courting. Mrs. E. Frank Vail, as mistress, finally appeared and as tell-tale evidence she discovered the imprint of the female hands on the policeman's back. "Comin' Thro the Rye," was the title of a tableau given by Miss Elizabeth VanWinkle and Harry Cuming, after which Mr. Catting again favored the audience with a solo. He was obliged to respond to an encore and he sang a very pretty selection.

"Uncle Tom," "Eva," and "Topsy," were cleverly portrayed by J. M. Hawkins, Miss Florence Hawkins and Miss Marjorie Brown, while "Love in a Spring," as the title of another clever picture in which A. D. Thompson, Jr., and Miss Florence Hawkins appeared in burnt cork.

Preceding the next tableau, Miss Arline Brown gave two amusing recitations. "The Cake Walk," was an amusing picture in which Miss Florence Hawkins, Miss Elizabeth Van Winkle, J. M. Hawkins and A. D. Thompson, Jr., appeared.

The entertainment concluded with a series of five pictures representing George Washington at different stages in his life. The first picture pictured him as a babe in the cradle, while his mother, in the person of Mrs. Arthur Krom sat near. In the next picture George appeared in the person of Walter Cuming carrying a hatchet. Clinton Hall, as his father, stood by admonishing his son for cutting down the cherry tree. The third picture represented George wooing. The object of his affection was Miss Adelaide Runyon, his sweetheart.

The fourth picture was "Valley Forge," and the soliders, Clinton Hall as George Washington, and Ernest Whitney, Harry Thompson and Herbert Brokaw, as members of the army were about a fire getting warm. The last picture was entitled "The Crowning of Washington." In this tableau Elsie Giles appeared placing a wreath upon George's head, while the Misses Arline and Marjorie Brown were seated at his feet.

The success of the entertainment is due particularly to the earnest efforts of J. M. Hawkins, although all who took part put forth their best efforts.

PLANS ARE ANNOUNCED FOR PRIVATE TOURS

A Number of Tours Are Being Arranged for This Season by A.V.D. Honeyman.

OF VARIED LENGTHS.

THE LONGEST TRIP TAKES IN SPAIN AND NORTH AFRICA.

Seventy-Day Visit to Great Britain —Another Shorter One—One Tour Through Central Europe—Holy Land Party Next Winter.

The full circulars of Mr. Honeyman's Private Tours for the summer season have been issued and comprise the following:

The first, a long tour, starts May 17 and goes direct to Spain and north Africa. Beside going completely through Spain, including Granada, Seville, Cordova, Madrid, Barcelona, etc., it takes in the French Riviera—Cannes, Monte Carlo, Mentone, San Remo, etc—to Genoa, and then nearly a week is occupied with the island of Sicily in the vicinity of Mt. Etna, where is said to be some of the most charming views and ancient ruins in southern Europe. Those two recent books, F. Marion Crawford's "The Rulers of the South," and Miss Lorimer's "By the Waters of Sicily," have attracted much attention to that peculiar island, and Mr. Honeyman proposes to show its antiquities on these excursions.

After this the party will take in Italy from south to north, and beside the usual great cities of Naples, Rome, Florence and Venice, they will visit Tivoli, Assisi, Perugia, Siena, each connected with Tuscan and early Roman times. Following this is a magnificent Swiss trip, including the region of the Matterhorn and a number of the passes of the Alps. The party then goes to Paris and finally winds up with coaching in England. All in all this is probably the finest tour which has yet been planned by any party starting from Plainfield. The party is already two-thirds full and there will probably be no vacancies after a week or two.

June 28, there are two parties, one of which is to be rallied a long Great Britain tour, occupying seventy days, taking in Ireland, Wales, Scotland and England; the other going direct to Belgium and takes in Belgium, Holland, the Rhine, Switzerland, France and England, and will be absent sixty-three days.

July 19, a short party will start to visit Ireland, Scotland and England for forty-three days, and an extension has been provided for this party to include Paris.

The prices for these various excursions run from $250 to $730, depending upon time and accommodations.

Mr. Honeyman also announces a special Holy Land party, to start in February, 1903. Head office is at 181 North avenue, where full circulars can be obtained.

STATE OFFICERS.

Chosen at State Convention of the Knights of Columbus Recently Held at Hoboken.

The seventh annual State convention of the Knights of Columbus was held in Hoboken Wednesday evening. Grand Knight John A. O'Keefe, of Watchung Council, No. 552, of this city, was in attendance.

The action of the United States convention in increasing the rates of premiums on insurance was approved. There is $700,000 in the insurance fund at the present time. In the State there are now thirty-four councils.

The officers elected were: State depaity, W. H. Macklack, of Elizabeth; State treasurer, John J. Fallon, of Hoboken; State secretary, James A. Clerk's Wise Suggestion.

"I have lately been much troubled with dyspepsia, belching and sour stomach," writes M. S. Mead, leading pharmacist of Attleboro, Mass. "I could eat hardly anything without suffering several hours. My clerk suggested I try Kodol Dyspepsia Cure which I did with most happy results. I have had no more trouble and when one can go to eating mince pie, cheese, candy and nuts after such a time, their digestion must be pretty good. I endorse Kodol Dyspepsia Cure heartily." You don't have to diet. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests your food. L. W. Randolph.

Miss Rose Frenier, of this city, spent last week with friends in Bound Brook.

FOR STREET WEAR.

Manners of the Stiff Tailor Made, Three-Quarter Coats.

Despite the general liking for the loose fabrics or Russian blouse coat, there are rumors that the stiff tailor made is about to reappear—that is to say, the tailor made having a bodice ending at or just below the waist line, worn without collar, cuffs or any softening effect whatever. However, even if this does come into style, the thin women will do well not to adopt it, for, while she can look elegant swathed in chiffon and ruffings, plain effects are certainly not becoming to her.

The plain sleeve is a thing of the past. The new sleeves are all fancy. Tucks and plaits outline the fullness of the upper arm but puffings prevail from the elbow down. Many afternoon dresses have elbow sleeves, and the arm is covered with a long suede glove. If sleeves are full length, the lower portion is usually of some contrasting stuff and profusely ornamented. Blouse waists have sleeves which are very wide at the wrist and confined into a tight fitting band, over which they puff.

THREE-QUARTER VELVET COAT

Three-quarter coats are among the necessities at present. They are made of bengaline, of velvet and even of satin. In taffeta they promise to be immensely popular for the coming spring and summer. We see a great tendency toward the Chinese and Japanese in the cut of these coats, and wide bands, whether of fur or velvet, form an important part of their trimming.

The kilted short skirt is the greatest novelty, and this is trimmed with bands of fur and velvet at the bottom. Today's illustration shows a three-quarter length coat of velvet lined with satin. The collar and lapels are of chinchilla, and there is an inner standing collar as well as lapels of venetian lace. The sleeves are of the bishop shape full and caught in a narrow cuff. The coat is trimmed with rich applications of jet.

The hat worn with this is a low flat toque of pearl gray chiffon and velvet.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE NEW WAISTS.

Broad Shouldered Effects Are Very Noticeable.

Several new and pretty models are being shown in flannel waists. One has the entire body laid in fine tucks, each tuck being edged with a narrow velvet ribbon. The tops of the sleeves are also laid in tucks and form a deep cap. The collar is tucked, and so are the cuffs. This waist buttons down the back.

Still another style has the body laid in plaits, which are stitched down flat and become smaller as the waist is reached. The narrow cuffs are also stitched. With this are worn a collar and a belt of stitched velvet.

CASHMERE AND LACE.

Broad shouldered effects are the rule and not the exception in shirt waists. Especially smart are those of moire, white and in colors. These are made with two wide plaits extending an inch over the shoulders and giving an extremely small waisted appearance.

A pretty model for a flannel waist is shown in the cut. The material is cashmere trimmed with Arabian lace. The waist is tucked and blouses back and front. The sleeves are of the bishop pattern, gathered into a cuff of the lace. The collar is wide and is edged with a rich lace applique. It is held together in front with a bag bow of velvet. The shoulette is also of the lace, and the color is of the flannel tucked.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

THERE IS HARMONY IN REPUBLICAN RANKS

That's What Clerk in Chancery E. C. Stokes Told Newark News Correspondent.

THE PARTY'S LEADERS.

HE DECLARES TALK ABOUT LEADERSHIP IS IDLE.

Logical Leaders Are Two Senators and Governor—He Speaks High of Some Others Prominent in Party Councels.

Clerk in Chancery Edward C. Stokes, who is the acting head of the Republican State committee, and who is regarded as one of the most conservative political leaders in New Jersey, in an interview, published by the Newark News, declared that there was no cause for alarm for the future of the party. The rumors of serious conflict over leadership, he said, were entirely unwarranted, and he takes a very optimistic view of the outlook for the important Congressional and local fights that are coming on this fall.

"All this talk about fighting for leadership is idle," he said. "It simply indicates that there are many prominent and worthy Republicans who are ready to counsel for the general good of the cause. The logical leaders of the party are the two United States Senators and the Governor, all of whom hold official positions of influence and power and to whom the party naturally looks for direction and guidance as to its policies. They are the great leaders of the party in the State."

In speaking of local leadership, as applied to the various sections of the State, Mr. Stokes expressed the belief that the Republicans were in excellent condition, despite the reports to the contrary. Speaking particularly of south Jersey, the chancery clerk declared that the party was united and harmonious, and had strong men to carry their standards.

"Congressman Gardner," he said, "is a man of great ability, and the legislative experience, both State and national, that he possesses is second to none. The party will always have the benefit of his wisdom, as he will undoubtedly be continued in Congress as long as he may desire.

"Sheriff Baird is a man to whom everybody goes for advice and counsel. He is a vigorous Republican, a man of splendid business ability and capacity, and a natural leader of men. He was General Sewell's closest political friend and confidant, and is a great harmonizer. His recognized worth and genial disposition have made for him hosts of warm friends in our end of this State., who gladly rally round him. He is thus well equipped for keeping the party in south Jersey united, and in condition for effective work.

MARKS THE BOXES.

Red Light Placed Above Fire Alarm Boxes in the Borough.

Chairman Lee, of the city councilmanic fire committee, has devised a novel arrangement to be used as a fire alarm box sign by night. It is a retangular glass device, which is placed around the electric light above the box.

The red light can be seen some distance, and it avoids delay and confusion by a want of knowledge concerning the location of these boxes. Few people are acquainted with the exact situation of the alarms, and this fact has frequently caused much trouble when a fire occurs.

The arrangement is being given a trial, one of them having been placed about the electric light opposite fire headquarters. If it proves satisfactory, the device will be put into general use throughout the city.

INTERCHANGEABLE MILEAGE BOOKS.

Chas. S. Lee at Conference of Passenger Agents to Discuss Them.

The committee of the Trunk Line passenger agents, which has under consideration the adoption of an interchangeable mileage book on trunk line territory, has been in session in Philadelphia at the office of J. R. Wood, general passenger agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad., who is chairman of the committee. Those attending the meeting include Mr. Wood, D. B. Martin, of the B. & O.; H. W. Fuller, of the Chesapeake & Ohio; Charles S. Lee, of the Lehigh Valley, and T. W. Lee, of the Lackawanna. The Erie, while favoring the project, was not represented; neither were the New York Central, the West Shore and the Reading, which are opposed to its adoption.

Engagement Announced.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Charles Maltby, of this city, to Miss Margaret M. Schuck, of Vine street, in the borough.

NEW SUMMER MATERIALS.

Foulards in Pale Tones, Veilings and Flowered Grenadines.

The new foulards are now on view. The colors are rather pale and have a silvery look, due to the texture of the silk. Wood tones, pinkish heliotropes, china blues and delicate greens lead. The patterns are almost all of them large, but, fortunately for the small person, they are rather blurred in and indistinct. Dots are again the style, both big and little. A new pattern consists in using pin dots for a background over which a bold and artistic design is run.

TAFFETA NECK RUFFLE.

Beige tones are to be most popular for dressy wear, both in foulards and in veilings, made over glace silk. These veilings will be trimmed with a wealth of lace and embroidery in self colorings.

Grenadines are to figure prominently in next summer's fashionable wardrobes. They come in all the pale tints and in white grounds with Persian and flowered designs. The proper way to trim them is with taffeta bands and appliques of mousseline de soie.

A novel cape is the subject of today's cut. It is made of tucked taffeta and ermine. There are two ruffles, the upper one laid in tucks, while the under one is simply gathered. Both are edged with the ermine. They are held together in the front by means of a big jeweled clasp. There are also two long mash ends edged with the ermine.

Fashion in Small Things—Louis XV. Coat Effects.

Many of the most chic fur coats have embroidered waistcoats, and this mode is likely to remain in favor.

Embroideries of every sort are being used to brighten up dark toilets. Those who have any in their possession should utilize them, for now is the hour. Entire collars and boleros are made of these embroideries mixed with fine laces.

In carriage wraps and best frocks there is no doubt that Parisian modistes are trying to establish a universal desire for the Louis XV. coats made of black velvet, with wonderful old brocade waistcoats, lovely buttons and fantastic jabots of lace. Velvet gowns are very popular. They are generally made very simple, with sometimes a deep corselet band of embroidery. In evening gowns, too, velvet is a favorite material and is likely to remain so during cold weather.

Very smart black velvet waists are being worn this winter. The handsomest are stitched in white, button down the back and are trimmed with pipings of white silk or satin, applications of lace or chiffon, and fronts of embroidery. Black velvet waists spotted in silver are also smart and are much newer than those dotted in white. Some of the waists for ordinary wear are made with embroidered dimities, through which a dainty scarf or Persian ribbon is passed and knotted.

The black picture hat of the beginning of the season is being enlivened by the addition of pale colored breasts and plumes matching the costume.

A very smart lace bolero is the subject of today's sketch. It can be worn either with a decollete or a high neck gown. It is made of all over guipure lace cut full, so as to hang in straight lines from the shoulders. There are bands of velvet which go over the shoulders and are held down by rhinestone buttons. Two bands of sable outline the bottom of the bolero and the short sleeves. These are elbow length and flare.

Formal Protests Against Trolley Service Registered in Rahway and Elizabeth.

AND IN OTHER PLACES.

ELIZABETH BOARD OF TRADE APPOINTS A COMMITTEE TO VISIT COMPANY.

Rahway Citizens Have Petitioned Common Council for Relief—General Manager Ackarman Working to Set Things Right.

There are continued outcries along the lines of the Elizabeth, Plainfield and Central New Jersey Street Railway Company against the present condition of the service. The protests are not confined to any particular feature of the service nor to any particular point on the lines.

In Elizabeth the public opinion has been expressed in the appointment of a committee of the Board of Trade to outline the grievances to the proper officials of the company. It is claimed that the company has been derelict in not properly heating the cars and in some instances placing an unsightly old stove in the car in place of an electric apparatus. The schedule is not kept by the company and the cars are dirty, especially the rear platforms.

In addition to the complaints mentioned the Elizabeth people are protesting against the use of flat wheel cars and against cars which they declare are unsightly. In Rahway the citizens are also worked up over the subject. A large number of the residents have sent a communication to the Common Council protesting against the treatment they receive as patrons of the line between that city and Picton and Garwood. Complaint has also been made against the service between Scwaren, Woodbridge and Rahway. The substance of the remonstrance is about similar to that in the protests made at Elizabeth.

General Manager J. N. Ackarman, of the road, who assumed his duties January 1, declines to talk at present. He declares that he will make no statement until he has had an opportunity to set matters right, which he thinks he will accomplish at an early date.

In this city he will have complaints to meet. The old flat wheel car run on the Somerset street line, has caused a loud protest and this will constitute one of the many objections to the local service.

EQUAL TO THE OCCASION.

Columbia Boys Lacked Entire Club and Had to Present an Impromptu Programme.

Although the leader of the mandolin club was ill and a number of members of the clubs missed their train, the Columbia University Glee and Mandolin Clubs proved themselves equal to the occasion and gave a very enjoyable concert at the Casino, Thursday. The absence of the members compelled a complete change of programme at the last moment but it was a versatile crowd and the programme pleased the Plainfielders who turned out. The audience was by no means as large, however, as was deserving for an entertainment of that character.

The college boys sang well under the leadership of George S. Parsons who also individually entertained with some humorous musical selections and a solo. The solo whistling of A. F. Robinson was particularly fine. The university octette, minus one, found much favor. The mandolin players missed their leader but did very well nevertheless. The audience was generous in its applause and there were a number of encores.

STANDARD AUTHORITY.

Last Edition of Webster's International Dictionary is Very Valuable.

It is an accepted fact among scholars that Webster's International Dictionary is the standard authority so far as the English words it concerned. 25,000 new words were added to the last edition and the work is the most complete of its kind in existence. In all details it is thoroughly abreast of the times.

In the last edition the plates are all new and they attract the eye. The newest words, phrases and definitions were prepared under the direction of W. T. Harris, the United States Commissioner of Education, assisted by a large corps of competent specialists. There are over 5,000 illustrations. It contains exactly 2,364 pages from cover to cover, and the bindings are exceedingly rich. The work is published by G. & C. Merriam Co., of Springfield, Mass.

WARREN CHAPEL BADE FAREWELL TO WORKER

Reception Given to Rev. R. D. Schoonmaker on Eve of Departure to Africa.

PRESENTED WITH PIANO

REV. DR. RICHARDS AND REV. J. O. M'KELVEY MADE ADDRESSES.

Rev. Mr. Schoonmaker Made Reply —Solos by Miss Willis—Presented Him With a Baby Grand Piano—Many Present.

As a fitting testimonial of the esteem in which he is held by all the members of the church, a reception was given to Rev. R. D. Schoonmaker in Warren chapel, Thursday. The guest of honor will shortly depart for Africa, where he will labor in the missionary cause, and this affair furnished an appropriate occasion for his friends to wish him God speed.

Rev. Dr. William R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, and Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of the chapel, made addresses, eulogistic of him as a man and as a Christian worker. During the course of the formal exercises Miss Bertha Van Nuis Willis rendered several soprano solos, and received enthusiastic applause for her work. Miss Saidee Mae Howell acted as accompanist.

Rev. Mr. McKelvey had many words of praise for Mr. Schoonmaker, and told how much he had enjoyed having the young pastor as an assistant in his work at the chapel. Incidentally he told of the fruitful labors of the newly fledged missionary while at Warren chapel, particularly dwelling upon the great good he had done in the primary department of the Sunday-school, of which he has been the superintendent.

A general and at the same time able address on the subject of foreign missionary work formed the theme of Rev. Dr. Richards' talk. This topic gave him an opportunity of explaining the great value Rev. Mr. Schoonmaker will be in his new calling. He referred to the duty of all church people to lent their efforts in advancing the work among the heathen. In his opinion Rev. Mr. Schoonmaker is specially fitted for the work, and he took occasion to wish him the utmost success at the precious task.

When Rev. Dr. Richards had concluded his remarks, Rev. Mr. McKelvey addressed the young missionary and said that a number of his friends had wished to present to him some token of their esteem, and that a baby grand piano has been selected by them as a suitable gift. He expressed regret that the instrument was not there to be given him, but remarked that it had been sent on to his post of duty in Africa. Rev. Mr. Schoonmaker expressed his thanks for the thoughtfulness of his friends and made a short address on his work in the past and the prospects of African labor. The exercises were concluded with benediction by Rev. Dr. Richards.

After the meeting the members of the congregation and other friends crowded about Mr. Schoonmaker for the purpose of saying good-bye and wishing him success in his chosen labors.

PLAINFIELD'S SHARE IN M'KINLEY MEMORIAL

This City Has So Far Contributed But $104 to That Very Worthy Fund.

AMOUNT ASKED FOR.

CONTRIBUTIONS MAY BE SENT TO ALEX. GILBERT OR THIS OFFICE.

Money Has Been Asked For on Basis of $18 for Each 1,000 Persons—Plainfield's Share Would be $275.

Another appeal has been made by the McKinley Memorial Association, of New Jersey, to the people of this city. The request is that the citizens show their love to the memory of the martyr president by contributing to the funds, which it is intended to use in fittingly perpetuating the greatness of the lamented chief executive of the Nation.

It is pointed out by John S. Gibson, the secretary of the association, that Plainfield has not showed the spirit of patriotism in the matter, and that the subscriptions from this city do not come up to expectations so far as the total amount is concerned. Thus far only $104 has been received from Plainfield and this falls far short of what the association believed would be the sum total of the contributions.

From the State, the McKinley National Memorial Association expects at least $30,000. Taking this as a basis, $18 is the sum marked up against each 100 persons in the total population. From this city it was naturally supposed that at least $400 would be received, but as stated the collections do not come anywhere near that sum. All the association really asks for is $275, and it is declared that all citizens should contribute even a small amount to this worthy cause. It has been said that the object is one free from politics and rises far above it. The aim, as stated by one contributor, is to appropriately commemorate the nobility of the fallen chosen leader of a great nation.

Alexander Gilbert, of West Eighth street, has been selected to receive any and all contributions and to properly acknowledge the sums donated. Any one desiring to contribute may send the offering to his address, No. 318 West Eighth street, or to this office.

Out of a total population of over 17,000, there has only been found eleven persons to respond to the initial call issued by the State association, and only forty per cent. of the amount expected has been contributed. These are the men, who have shown by their acts that they venerate the memory of William McKinley:

William H. Dunn died February 5 in the New York Hospital from an attack of pneumonia. He was in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He was a son of William Dunn, one of Plainfield's pioneer clothing manufacturers, who conducted [his business at the corner of Front and Somerset streets. Mr. Dunn was also a brother of former Postmaster Elston Dunn. He was in the employ of Brokaw Bros. ,clothiers, for nearly twenty years. He resided with his parents for many years on the southeast corner of Watchung avenue and Second street. He was unmarried. The remains were brought to this city for interment.

ARRANGEMENT OF OFFICES.

How City Officials Will Divide Up the New Offices.

The arrangement for the new city offices will probably be that Collector F. H. Smith will occupy the office nearest the front of the building, while the city clerk will have the middle office. Street Commissioner Gavett will have the rear office. The room will be divided off into three offices with suitable partitions and each office will be properly furnished.

Made Walk of Ashes.

Taking advantage of an unusual accumulation of ashes at the plant of the electric light company, the street men have commenced placing a coating on Rock avenue from Front street to the isolation hospital. It will make a very substantial walk.

OVER THE ATLANTIC OCEAN

A PLAINFIELD YOUNG MAN WRITES OF HIS TRIP.

Walter B. Rittenhouse, Enroute For the Orient, Tells of His Experiences.

Walter B. Rittenhouse, of Sandford avenue, who is now on board the British steamer Marjstow, bound for the Philippines and Japan, reached the port of Algiers, January 19, in safety. From that point he mailed several letters to his family and friends at home which have just reached their destination.

In one of his letters, he writes in very interesting fashion concerning his trip across the Atlantic and through the Mediterranean Sea. He says in part:

"The fresh winds which prevailed the day we sailed from New York turned into winter gales after leaving Sandy Hook, and the gentle roll became a delightful combination of rascle-dazzle and loop the loop.

"There were 100 tons of coal piled on the decks, and the second night out seventy tons were washed overboard. It was a typical North Atlantic gale, the solid seas breaking over the ship and carrying every movable thing before them, the spray frose as it fell, making everything icy and slippery.

"At this season of the year the North Atlantic is covered with hundreds of fierce gales each one covering a comparatively small area and traveling at a very rapid rate, we no doubt must run through one of these gales than we struck another, until finally on the ninth the climax was capped at 11 o'clock in the morning. I was standing on the bridge with the captain and second mate at that time and the wind which had been southeast was falling rapidly. The captain remarked that we should probably have a blow shortly, and had no sooner spoken than a gust of wind hit us from the northwest with terrific force, and then how it did pile into us! The wind and seas were something frightful. The vessel would ride over one huge green mountain, and burrow under the next. It was impossible to see the bow of the ship from the bridge. It is equally impossible for one to give you even the faintest idea of the grandeur of that scene. At the end of four hours the hurricane commenced to abate slightly, and by the next morning had pretty nearly spent itself.

"We passed two of the Azore Islands, Fayal and Pico, almost touching each other. It was a lovely day and we steamed close under the lee of the islands and got a fine, quaint little villages all whitewashed and glistening in the sun. The houses were built of stone and had tile roofs, were of plain architecture and had two stories usually although some had but one. The green blinds and red tile roofs made pretty contrasts, with the white stone. Most houses were surrounded by green hedge. The Padre's little white church was always visible and occasionally a hedge surrounded cemetery could be seen way up on the hillside.

"Pico rises straight into the air a mile and a half and the summit is covered with snow. The Island is covered with vineyards and semi tropical fruit orchards.

"Jan. 17—We passed through the strait this morning. The view was somewhat obscured by haze but was very interesting. On the right we could see the piled up peaks of Morocco and on the left Spain's sunny slopes. We signaled Pt. Spartel as we entered the strait. We soon saw the sun shining on Tarifa, one of the oldest cities of Spain, appearing from the distance to be a very pretty place. At the same time on the other side we could see Tangiers, the capital of Morocco, and home of the Sultan, on the shore of a snug little bay. All of the south shore of the strait is of volcanic origin, the most imposing spectacle being Ape's Hill, a mass of jagged peaks rising several thousand feet above the water. It was once inhabited by thousands of monkeys who used to throw stones at the passing sailing vessels, and the sailors believed the monkeys had a submarine tunnel running across to Spain.

"January 18—Approaching Algiers. Sliding along through the Mediterranean enjoying a moonlight night, soft balmy breeze. Will reach Algiers 7 o'clock tomorrow morning, and spend Sunday ashore."

Economy at Bound Brook.

"The Central's economy has struck this section again," remarks the Bound Brook correspondent of the Somerset Messenger. "Commencing with February 1 it dispensed with the services of one of the day operators, throwing the work on Operator G. C. Somers. He now has to take charge of the Central, Reading and Western Union work, and probably no one knows but that the next move will be to give him the baggage to handle."

Garret Keating, of Essex street, is recovering from a very severe illness.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 10, "Why Should the Church Evangelize the World?"—Text, Matt. xxviii, 19, 20; Rom. i, 14-16; x, 12-18.

"Go, disciple all nations, baptizing, teaching."

There is the reason. Jesus commands it to His followers. He came to seek and save the lost. He gave His life a ransom for many to be spoken of to them in the proper time. When one hears of the Christ, turns from sin and trusts Him for salvation, he finds himself living a changed life, with new laws and new impulses. Whatever the old life may have been in self indulgence and without special regard for the good of others, he feels an earnest desire to have others share the new light and happiness. His impulses now are more to give than to get. The direction given by Jesus seems most natural and no more burdensome than any merely moral law. He has no intention to steal and feels no inclination to swear, has no temptation to kill. So far as he is concerned the law is not expressed in negatives, "thou shalt not," but finds in his soul a positive "thou shalt," and his response to it is, "I will." The law says, "Love your neighbor." He feels, "I do." Then, when the word to come for him to go and tell that neighbor how great things Christ has done for him and will do for the neighbor also, he needs no driving, no coaxing. He is ready and eager to go and do. He wants to help him out of trouble. No need of the "thou shalt not" with him. He will not do the evil.

"Why evangelize the world?" Because the world needs to be evangelized. That is the purpose of Christ's coming. That is the present meaning of the ongoing of the earth and the upward push of civilization. God's kingdom is coming. The great thing, the important thing, is not the question whether Boer or Briton prevail in South Africa, whether Spain or the United States rule Philippines and Cuba, whether Russia or Japan be adviser of China, but the great issue is whether God's rulership be recognized and actualized in the affairs of men. History, politics, manufactures, commerce, all the endless and complicated affairs of men have no significance and no permanent worth apart from this one all embracing fact that the kingdom of God is assuming the power in this world. God is coming to be in the sense of some future, faroff event, but it is now present and conquering. It is ever in the process of becoming.

For our own sakes we must evangelize the world. We can never maintain our own best lives can we develop spiritual life if we neglect this plainly commanded service. To withhold the gospel or fail to carry it to the unevangelized looms us to failure in spiritual life. We can break every command of the Decalogue save one at the same time claim to be holy with as much reason as we can disobey this one and call ourselves Christian.

Less important, but strikingly suggestive, is the question of missions to our commercial and industrial progress. Trade may or may not follow the flag, but trade does and must follow the Bible. Christianize a naked savage, and he immediately asks clothes, houses and furniture, the appliances of highest civilization. That means business for Christian factories and wages for workmen. Human industry has no other so efficient helper as Christian missions.

Give According to Ability.

Whence comes my ability? What is the measure of it? What need is there that my gift should be left aside?

First. God supplies the conditions of honest possessions. If you will not consult God's word, your case is hopeless.

What is the measure of my ability? God gave me His son. The gift was measured by His love. He looked also on the measure of my need and filled that. Jesus "loved the church and gave Himself up to it." His gift was measured by love. It rate per cent be asked for, the arguments for 100 per cent are strongest. Jesus gave it in be coming poor. He commended the woman who cast in all. He advised a young man to make one fling of his whole fortune into the treasury of the needy and give Himself to God besides. Peter and others "left all and followed" Him. Paul suffered the loss of all things. But talk not of rate per cent. It remains forever true that he who loves little will give little, and he who loves much will give much.—Christian Standard.

Two Kinds of Sorrow.

There are two kinds of sorrow, a sorrow that yields to despair and a sorrow that looks toward hope. The former is like a vessel without compass—it knows not whence it came nor whither it should go. The latter is like a vessel driven and tossed, yet moving steadily and surely toward the harbor. The former is at the mercy of the waves; the latter plunges through them toward the goal. Oh, that all sighing, weeping, burdened souls could say, "Though He slay me, yet I trust in Him!" Such faith, though it look through tears, even a vision of brightness which sorrow may often dim, but can never destroy.—Lutheran.

No Cause For Discouragement.

If God is really preparing me all to become that which is the very highest and best thing possible, there ought never to be a discouraged or uncheerful being in the world.—Horace Bushnell.

To Make Life Worth Living.

Do good constantly, patiently and wisely, and you will never have cause to say that life was not worth living.—George W. Childs.

WISHED HIM SUCCESS IN HIS NEW FIELD

Prominent Roman Catholic Clergymen Gathered at St. Mary's Rectory February 5.

A DINNER WAS GIVEN,

BISHOP O'CONNOR WAS THE GUEST OF HONOR AT THE GATHERING.

Father Egan Thanked His Visitors For Their Kind Remarks Which Followed the Repast—Those Who Were Present.

In honor of Rev. Andrew M. Egan, the newly appointed pastor of St. Mary's R. C. church, a large number of the prominent clergy of the dioceses of Trenton and Newark gathered at the rectory, February 5. A dinner was the principal feature of the happy occasion, which proved especially enjoyable to those who were unacquainted with the prosperous parish in this city.

The dining room was tastefully adorned. The new priest acted as host and his bishop, Rt. Rev. Dr. John O'Connor, of the diocese of Newark was the guest of honor. After the feast had been finished, short speeches were made by a number of those present.

Bishop O'Connor congratulated the pastor on the loyal service he had rendered the church and wished him success in the new field. Monsignor Doane, rector of the cathedral at Newark, followed with a few remarks eulogistic of Father Egan, and Dean McNulty, of Paterson, had some complimentary things to say concerning his brother in the church. Vicar General Fox, of the diocese of Trenton, told of the any good qualities of the pastor. Father Egan responded to the addresses and expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred him by his appointment to the local parish. He also thanked the clergy, who had made addresses, for the kind words they had spoken about him. It was late in the afternoon when the banquet ended and the priests departed for their homes.

Among those present were: Right Rev. Bishop O'Connor, of the diocese of Newark, there were Right Rev. Monsignor Doane, of the cathedral of Newark; Very Rev. Dean McNulty, Paterson; Very Rev. Father Fox, vicar-general, Trenton; Chancellor O'Neil, Newark, and Rev. Fathers Poels, of Newark; Kernan, Passaic; Hughes, Rahway; Miller, North Plainfield; McKeever, Newark; Dittrich, Bound Brook; Brennan, Trenton; Tallon, Newark; Shepherd, Jersey City; Brown, Morris Plains; Hedges, Seton Hall College; McMannus, Callahan, Carroll and Wallace, Newark; Farley, Plainfield; McCarthy, Short Hills; Quinn and Boylan, Jersey City; Dr. Morris, chancellor of the diocese of Trenton, and Dr. Schotthoever, Boonton.

A MASTER HAND.

"Robert Louis Stevenson" Was the [Subject of Final Lecture on the Modern English Novel.

The final talk in the series of five lectures on the construction of the modern English novel, given by Miss Antoniette Carroll, of New York, took place at the home of Henry E. Rowe, of Watchung avenue, Thursday afternoon. "Robert Louis Stevenson" was the topic selected for the concluding lecture, and it was handled in a masterly way.

Miss Carroll dwelt upon the style and particularly the good qualities of this great poet. She told of his early efforts and passed on to his life at Samoa, where he sent out to the world some of the best fiction of modern times. His works were contrasted with those of other authors of renown in the same line of literary work. Miss Carroll showed wherein he excelled in building up the framework of a novel.

NO ONE KNOWS.

No Plans Yet Been Made Regarding the Presiding Elder of the Elizabeth District.

It can be stated on the best of authority that Rev. Dr. G. W. Smith, now presiding elder of the Elizabeth district, does not know at present whether he will continue in his present position after April 1. Considerable has been said that he would probably be pastor of the First M. E. church. The highest authority in the church has not disclosed such plans and until the conference meets at Elizabeth in April the question will not be decided. Dr. Smith has held his present position six years, his term expiring this year.

As far as Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the (First M. E. church is concerned, his continuance as pastor has not been determined one way or the other, and will not be until April.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 10—Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic—Tempted and tried.—I Cor. x, 12; Heb. ii, 18; iv, 15.

There are two dangers against which Christians must guard themselves in reference to the temptations and trials of life. 1. They may be treated too lightly. We may belittle temptation and magnify our own abilities to resist it and may, as a consequence, be in danger of falling through overconfidence. 2. When the true character and power of sin are realized, we may grow discouraged and give up without an effort. The phase of the subject presented in the topical references is the latter one. Paul, having warned the Corinthians against falling through overconfidence, next warns them against discouragement. To accomplish this he points out the encouraging side of resistance to temptation. The reference from Hebrews continues the same phase of the subject by presenting Christ's relation to temptation and trial.

The temptations and the trials of life are not to be underrated. They are serious and real things. They are long for time and eternity. But while so serious they are not impossible of successful resistance. Because of the power of evil we are not to fold our arms in discouragement and drift with the tide in weak submission. The greater the power against the greater should be our determination to overcome it. Resistance should inspire resistance rather than acquiescence.

1. Human experience encourages us to resist temptation. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man," except such as is human or such as man can bear. Our temptations are no fiercer than those which have assailed others and against which they have successfully stood. If others have resisted the temptations common to us, then we also can resist them. If tempted to intemperance, to lust, to anger, to unbelief, to sin in any form, let us remember that other men have resisted these temptations, which assures us that we can if we will.

2. The faithfulness of God encourages us to resist temptation. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it." The power against us is great, but the power for us is still greater. God promises to be sufficient for our good. Certain phases of human character can only be developed or perfected under temptation and trial. "The trial of your faith worketh patience." But if when the temptations come we trust in God and look to Him for strength He will provide a way of escape. He tried the faith of Abraham, but provided a way of escape. He tried the character of Joseph, but provided a way of escape. And so will Him He will keep us in temptation and trial it He does not keep us from them.

3. Christ's relation to temptation should encourage us to resist it. Christ was tempted, therefore He understands us in temptation and is able to sympathize with us. Christ was tempted, "yet without sin." He therefore knows how to overcome, and He can and will impart this knowledge and power to us. Let us therefore not be discouraged in temptation, but resist it, and it will flee from us.

BIBLE READINGS.

Matt. iv, 1-11; vi, 13; Mark xiv, 33-38; Luke viii, 9-13; I Tim. vi, 9-12; Heb. xi, 32-40; Jas. i, 1-5, 12-15; iv, 7; II Pet. ii, 9; Rev. ii, 10.

Humility.

There are few graces more beautiful —and shall we say more rare?—than the grace of humility. Often in companies of people who have the best thought and keenest judgment is one not seen or heard, while some other member of the group occupies its constant attention with vaporings that are more noisy than profound. The one is humble and must be driven into the public gaze; the other is self assertive and needs to be taught the virtue of silence. The world is not often deceived, and the strong man, though quiet and retiring, wins the highest measure of success.—Peninsula Methodist.

A Lesson to Learn.

If one lesson, and only one, were to be chosen, which each Christian would learn by heart, the one which would mean most for the future of the church as well as for those who had learned it would be that of individual responsibility to God for what is done and what is left undone—the directness with which all stand before God as individual men and women and are responsible both for their own lives and for their influence. With that lesson thoroughly learned everything comprised in Christian duty would follow naturally.—Lutheran Observer.

Work That God Appoints.

I am glad to think I am not bound to make the world go right, but only to discover and, with cheerful heart, the work that God appoints.—Jean Ingelow.

Whatever He Wills.

In the shadow of the valleys,
In the sunlight of the hills,
Learn to know thy Father's smiles.
Saying, "Whatso'er He wills."

All of life is in His keeping,
Grief and cheer and pain and loss.
And no reason comes for weeping
When it comes, for He wills.

If this promise, this is certain—
Then shall have sufficient grace
To discern that sorrow's curtain
Cannot hide His shining face.

Therefore in the shadowed places
Or the flashing of the hills
Then canst follow all the traces
Of the love that for thee wills.

A BIG VAULT FOR THE CITY

HIBBARD-RODMAN-ELY SAFE COMPANY HAS THE CONARACT.

Will Put It in the Rear of the Smalley Building on the Ground Floor.

The fire-proof vault, which is to be built in the Smalley building for the use of the city, will be constructed and installed by the Hibbard-Rodman-Ely Safe Company, of this city. This action on the part of Smalley Brothers in giving the contract to a local firm is highly commended by all. Besides, while the above safe company does not usually cater to such small contracts, as a matter of local pride it is anxious to do the work.

The vault will be placed in the rear part of the store, which is to be used as offices for the city. It will be thirteen feet long and eight feet high and will occupy the space which is now an alcove. The flooring will be taken out and the vault will rest on heavy substantial brick pillars. There will be a covering of concrete which will bring the bottom of the vault up even with the office flooring.

There will be two doors to the vault and the structure will be so arranged that a person can walk around inside. There will be an abundance of room for all city papers, books, maps and other valuables owned by the city. The vault will be a modern one in every respect and, as the lease says, it will be absolutely fire-proof.

It is expected that the work of installing it will be commenced soon. Owing to a heavy demand for some parts of the material used in the vault it may be nearly April 1 before it is completed.

PREPARING TO AMEND THE MARTIN STATUTE

Newark Lawyer Has Two Amendments to the Famous Martin Act.

TO PREVENT EXACTIONS.

HOW THE ACT HAS WORKED TROUBLE IN NEWARK.

Matter Taken Up by Republican Indian League, of Newark—Drafts of Two Amendments Have Been Prepared.

For the purpose of bringing an end to exactions in the enforcement of the Martin Act, which has been taken advantage of by the City of Plainfield, as well as many other places throughout the State, it is now proposed this winter to introduce a new statute in the Legislature. The law is nearly ready and the prospects of its adoption seem to be excellent.

This movement, to change the Martin Act to prevent the impositions of exorbitant charges, has been steadily progressing. It is admitted that thousands of dollars are taken every year from unfortunate taxpayers, not by the city, but by individuals who purchase old tax liens at prices far beyond the amount of the city's claim, for the purpose of securing the high rate of interest on the whole amount and a large sum in other fees included in the charges.

The matter was taken up by the Republican Indian League, of Newark, at the instance of Lawyer John H. McCracken, who has now prepared two amendments to the law. These amendments have been carefully drawn and approved of by the League. A statement has been prepared showing the amounts realized at the Martin Act sale in Newark. The total amount of the city claim was $37,000; the total amount paid for these claims by the purchasers was $111,000, and it is on this sum that the owners of the property are required to pay 10 per cent. interest per annum when the property is redeemed for the entire period from the date of the sale until the time of redemption.

The amendments to the law prepared are two in number. One provides that the interest charge of 10 per cent. shall be made only against the sum actually due for taxes or assessments at the time of the Martion Act sale, and that no interest shall be allowed on any amount paid by the purchaser in excess of the sum actually due at the time of the sale. This would stop the collection of interest on excessive amounts bid by speculative individuals.

The second amendment relates to the fee charged for a search It provides that no search fee shall be demanded, allowed, approved or required to be paid in excess of the sum of $25 for any lot, plot or tract of land sold as one parcel, although said parcel may actually contain one or more city lots.

As Plainfield has been and is still deriving the benefits of the Martin Act no doubt there are many Plainfielders who will be interested in this movement. There are any number of people who believe that the act works a hardship and anything that will tend to relieve that will be welcomed most heartily. It will be noted that the amendments do not deprive a city from reaping a fair compensation in sales under this act.

GOING AFTER CITIZENS WHO DIDN'T PAY TAXES

Borough Council Turns Over Delinquent Taxes to Chief Borough Marshal.

ARRESTS WILL FOLLOW.

APPROPRIATED $100 FOR EXPENSES OF SEWER COMMISSIONERS.

Brief Report From D. T. Kenney, Secretary of Sewer Commission —No Municipal Ownership Report Was Presented.

Quite a lot of business was transacted in a short space of time at the regular monthly meeting of the Borough Council, last Friday. The chief action taken was the decision to place in the hands of the chief marshal all delinquent personal and poll taxes now in the hands of Collector George F. Brown. Second only to this was some favorable action in regard to the most feasible method of making public the annual borough report.

For the first time in many months every member was present and all entered heartily into the evening's work. The election of Philip Currin as a member of Warren Engine Company was confirmed.

Dr. Pittis, the borough physician, presented his report in the matter of vaccination. It showed that all told 155 persons were treated free by himself and Dr. Dundon, during the week when the citizens were vaccinated by order of the councilmanic body. A vote of thanks was extended to the two physicians. Mayor Smalley announced the appointment of George D. Hallock as a member of the sewer commission in place of George P. Dupee, resigned.

The aggregate amount of the bills for the month of January was $2,400, and these were ordered paid. Chairman Robert Clark, Jr., of the street committee, reported that $42.67 was the total amount of expenditures in that line of public work during January. Itemized his report was as follows: Cleaning catch basins, cross walks and sidewalks, $22.50; services of H. C. VanEmburgh as engineer, $20.07.

On motion of Councilman Nichols a resolution was passed authorizing the chief marshal to take proper steps to enforce the collection and payment of all delinquent poll and personal taxes for the year 1901. The amount due is over $500.

Chairman Lee, of the police committee, reported that there had been two arrests during the month and that the fines amounted to $2. Mayor Smalley stated that the condition of the treasurer's report would be considerably changed before the time it is published. There is $9,000 uncollected for 1901 and $3,000 for 1900, and a part of this sum is expected to be realized before the expiration of the month.

The condition of the borough treasury, said he, is about the same is it was a year ago, excepting the fact that there has been an increase of expenditures due to the widening of Somerset street.

The sewer commission's work was introduced by the Mayor, and he called upon D. T. Kenney, the secretary of that body, to make a report. Mr. Kenney told of the progress made and said incidentally that no provision had been made for the expenditures that may arise on account of the investigations of the commission. An appropriation of $100, suggested by the Mayor, received councilmanic favor and finally he and a resolution was passed to borrow $6,500, or such sum in excess as may be necessary to lift a note for $7,000, payable on demand.

It was at this juncture that the question of printing the borough's annual report came up for consideration. Mayor Smalley announced that he believed that the interests of the citizens would best be served by publishing the statement in the daily papers of this city, rather than by issuing a pamphlet, which he said would generally thrown away. In this opinion Councilman Clark concurred, he declaring that method to be the one in general use in all up-to-date places.

A good suggestion was made by Councilman Lee, in this connection. He said that it would have a good effect inasmuch as it would publicly proclaim who the delinquents are in the tax lists. It was finally decided to leave the matter to the judgment of the committee on statistics and supplies, of which Councilman Harrison Coddington is the chairman.

The report of the borough collector for the month of January is as follows: Taxes and interest, $2,667.70; board of health, $5,105; special school, $1,173.34; bills payable, note, $7,000; Frank Rowly, clerk, fines $3 and licenses $10; balance on hand January 1, $6,899.91; total receipts, $17,783.90; disbursements, $14,702.84; cash on hand, February 1, $3,081.06. Before adjournment it was decided to hold an extra session, Friday evening, February 21. At this time the annual reports of the various councilmanic committees will be presented.

MISSION BAND ENDS YEAR

WORK SUMMED UP AND NEW OFFICERS WERE ELECTED.

Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed Church Held Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Young Women's Mission Band, of Trinity Reformed church, was held Friday afternoon, when officers for the ensuing year were chosen.

Most gratifying were the various reports read. Especially so was this the case with the statement of Miss Grace Emmons, the secretary, which showed that a vast amount of good had been accomplished in a quiet way by this helpful organization of the church. It was particularly pleasing to the members of the society to find that the treasury report of Miss Anna Searing, showed that department to be in an excellent condition and that the new year for work can be commenced auspiciously. The balance remaining, after the payment of all bills, was exactly $144.98.

Rev. Dr. Schenck, the pastor, made a short address in which he took occasion to commend the efforts of those who had striven to up build the society. His remarks were principally upon the work already accomplished, although he incidentally pictured in glowing colors the prospects of the organization. Owing to the absence, by illness, of Miss Lillian A. Force, the president, Miss Lillian Remsen, the vice president, occupied the chair and directed the proceedings.

The following officers were elected to serve for the coming year: President, Mrs. F. S. Cutter; vice president, Miss Grace Nevius; recording secretary, Miss Jessie Little; corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. C. VanEmburgh, and treasurer, Mrs. Theodore Manta.

WORKER IN WEST.

Stories Told of Mission Life Out in Arizona and What is Needed There Now.

A number of people gathered in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church, Friday afternoon, and listened to an able and interesting address by Rev. Robert Craig, the synodical missionary in New Mexico and Arizona. Mr. Craig went to this home mission field a few years ago for his health, and the climate agreed with him so well that he remained there and took up mission work with much success.

Mr. Craig spoke of his work which consists chiefly in establishing churches and chapels among the people and visiting the members of the numerous tribes of Indians on their reservations given by the Government. The speaker related many things not heard of before. He made a plea for more teachers, as well as financial aid. He said the people in that country, where he is laboring, are very anxious to learn of Christ and they afterward make the best of citizens.

Will be Ready in Time.

The Hibbard-Rodman-Ely Safe Company has promised Smalley Brothers, of North avenue, to have the city vault placed in the building as near April 1, as possible.

The wedding was first made known by the young people, Wednesday evening, when they sought and received the parental blessing. The ceremony was performed August 1, at the rectory of the Church of the Epiphany, New York, Rev. Father Ludlow, officiating. Joseph Skiffington, of New York, a near friend of the groom, and Miss Mary A. Ludlow, a sister of the rector, were the only others in attendance.

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Clark will assign any reason for their sudden determination to get married, other than they dreaded publicity. They will go to housekeeping on March 1. The groom is the youngest son of Bernard Clark, Sr., the West End hotel man, and is employed in one of the local machine shops.

A JOKE TRANSLATED.

English Version of One of Mr. Depew's Favorite Stories.

Chappie Did His Best to Entertain the Crowd, But Nobody Saw the Point of the Anecdote But the Narrator.

"When the average Englishman attempts to narrate a characteristic American humorous story he is almost certain to make a mash of it," remarks a Washington cinoman who spent a good deal of his time abroad, to a Star scribe. "I publish fact was instanced in a funny way in the smoking-room of the steamer upon which I last returned from England. A middle-aged Englishman, a civil engineer, I believe he was, was called upon to do his share of the entertaining—we were making a late sitting of it—and he started in to tell a story that he had heard Senator Chauncey Depew narrate at a dinner in London. Now, I had heard Mr. Depew tell that story, too, and it went about this way:

"A New York lawyer named Strange, noted for his wit, was upon his last bed of sickness. He knew that his end was near, and so he called his wife to his bedside to give her a few final directions.

"'Little woman,' said he to her, 'I know that I am going to die, and I am ready to go. But I could not die in peace if I thought there was going to be a lot of flowers and feathers made over me after my death. I don't, as you know, believe in ostentation as applied to the dead. Now, I don't even want my name carved on my headstone. I wish you'd just have a plain, unostentatious erected over my grave, with these words carved on it: "Here lies an honest lawyer."'

"The dying lawyer's wife demurred at this.

"'How,' she asked her husband, 'will people visiting the cemetery know from the inscription on the headstone who lies in the grave?'

"'Oh, they'll know, all right,' replied the passing man of law, with a faint smile. 'They'll read the inscription, and then they'll say: "That's strange."'

"HERE LIES AN HONEST LAWYER."

"Now, Mr. Depew told this story in England because he knew how dearly the English people love stories that hinge upon a play of words. The story always tickled his English listeners immensely.

"Well, this Englishman in the smoking-room of the steamer started off to tell that story something in this wise:

"'Well, y'know, I heard one of your fellows—man named Depew—senator or something—tell a deuced good story, 'pon me waird, at a dinner awhile ago—deuced good, I declare. It appears, y'know, that a New York fellow—man of law, y'know—barrister, I believe—was dying, y'see. Don't seem to remember the fellow's name. Let me see, what the deuce was the fellow's name, anyhow? Well, 'pon me waird, if I haven't clean forgot this time! Deuced annoying, that, this chap, y'know, was dying, and he was blooming good natured about it all, y'see, and he wanted to make his wife feel less shocked over it all, y'know, and so he called her to his bedside.

"'"My dear," says the chap to her, y'see, "I don't want to have a lot of botheration and kick-up business, y'see, after I'm gone. I don't want my name—deuced annoying that I can't recall that chap's name!—"engraved on my headstone. Just put a small stone at the head of my grave, y'know, and have carved on it these words: 'Here lies an honest lawyer."'

"'Well, y'know, the legal chap's wife didn't like the idea of this, and she told him so.

"'"But," she said to him, "how will folks, y'know, that read the inscription on the headstone in the grave beneath the headstone?"

"'"Well, y'see, this legal chap was a deuced humorous fellow, y'know, and he was bound to have his final joke, y'see, and so he answered her:

"'"Why, you'll know—you'll know that. They'll read the inscription on the headstone, and they'll say to each other, y'know: "That's extraordinary, y'know."'

Was Favored by Nature.

A dignified bishop, while passing along a London street, heard three vegetable hawkers engaged in a rather blasphemous argument. Intending to rebuke them, he said to one of the offenders: "My good man, where did you learn to swear like that?" "Lord bless you, guv'nor," replied the hawker, good-naturedly, "I was born with a caliper on my shoulder, 'ye can't learn it; it's a gift!"

The "NEW MAN" Doctrine

If there be a new woman doctrine, there is certainly beginning to appear a new man idea to match it.

A California woman's husband beat her, drove her and the children from home and refused to support them, so that she had to go out washing to do so. She applied for divorce on all three grounds. She put it on the charge that her husband had beaten her and driven her out of the house, but not on the complaint that he would not make a living for her. Judge Waldo M. York—let us hail him pioneer champion of the new man!—gave this decision and said: "I believe the women should bear some of the responsibility of the support of the family upon their shoulders." So the wife got her divorce, but had to continue to go a-washing.

The new doctrine emanates from the rose embowered town of Los Angeles. Judge Morrow of the same city agrees with it and says further, "The better man should take the lead in marriage, as in everything else, and the usual notion that man is the breadwinner is often contradicted by facts."

Finally, to clinch matters, United States Attorney Marshall Woodworth of the Los Angeles district, being interviewed on the question, said, "I would seem that if the wife is entitled to one for maintenance the husband should be entitled to the same right." It "would seem," therefore, to use the English of District Attorney Woodworth, that there is both state and federal authority for the doctrine of the new man. "It would seem" also that this authoritative enunciation of a wife's equal right to support the family would be precisely what the new woman wants and that it would please her through and through. One is surprised, however, to find it the other way.

One lady tackles the decision in a newspaper and quotes the old common law that the husband owes the wife support and she owes him service. If the husband is to be released from supporting the wife, argues this logical lady, is not she on her part to be released from serving him—performing, let us say, such duties as blacking the husband's boots, which thousands of British wives do to this day? Or maybe, continues the logical lady, instead of freeing the wife from service, the doctrine of the new man will also impose on the husband the duty of rendering service to the wife.

In that case perhaps we are to think of the husband as blacking the wife's boots, as cooking the corned beef and cabbage for dinner and tending the babies while she over the washboard earns the family living.

The logical lady takes a view of the result of the new doctrine which is depressing or otherwise according as one considers the continuance and increase of the race on this planet as a good thing. She remarks, "These opinions are likely to still further discourage women from matrimony." For myself, I have not observed that women are yet being discouraged from matrimony, at least in my neighborhood, though they may be farther on. But from my observations of the masculine sex I believe this new man doctrine will become popular among men.

A DISCIPLE OF THE "NEW MAN" DOCTRINE HARD AT WORK.

Any man will think he can afford to marry if the law decides his wife shall take care of him. So soon as the knowledge of the California decisions becomes general throughout the Union men will no doubt marry early and often. I look to see a regular rush of weddings—at first, that is. Women who have long sighed for soulmates will find them on every hand. Then will come the reaction. "Glitin' married is as easy as pie," said a pretty mulatto serving woman, "but gittin' out of it—oh, my!" Girls will find that hustling for themselves and a man as well, even a soulmate man, is not all the fancy painted it. Wives who must not only mother children, but also maintain them, will stand on every hand as an awful example. The young woman contemplating matrimony will be obliged more than ever to see to it that she is first able to support a husband. Final result of the California new man doctrine—more old maids than ever.

SUSAN PEPPER.

TRUE SNAKE STORY.

Twenty-Six Big Reptiles Killed in the Attack.

Farmer Hadsell Discovers the Cause of Trouble with a Spring and Inaugurates a War of Annihilation.

According to the Hartford (Conn.) correspondent of the New York Sun, Deacon Joseph Pepper, of the Methodist church of West Avon, is truthful and a tectotaler, and doesn't see snakes where no snakes are. Through him a remarkable tale of snakes has been made public.

Silas Daniels is a member of Deacon Pepper's church, and he was an eyewitness of part of the occurrence and was in at the death. It was from him that Deacon Pepper learned the particulars.

On the farm of Adelbert Hadsell, a neighbor of Daniel's, is a fine spring that never freezes over, even in the coldest weather. Hadsell carries the water from the spring through a pipe to the barn for watering his live stock.

Recently the cattle refused to drink the water, and Hadsell noticed a few days ago that the water, which is usually clear and pure, had become slightly muddy. He went to the spring to investigate.

He saw nothing unusual about the spring at first, except that the water was muddy, as though some animal had worked up the mud at the bottom. Mr. Hadsell returned to the barn for a pitchfork, and when he got back to the spring he made an investigation.

He jabbed the pitchfork about in the water without striking anything but the mud at the bottom. While he was thus engaged he noticed that the bank at one side of the spring seemed to be in motion.

He stuck the fork into this place and pried up a clod of the frozen earth, leaving a hole about large enough to hold a man's fist. Out of this shot the head of a large black snake. Mr. Hadsell promptly killed it and dragged it out of the hole. Two more heads made their appearance and these two snakes were also dispatched.

When Hadsell looked at the spring again the whole bank seemed to be a living mass of reptiles. He threw down his pitchfork and ran for assistance. He found Daniels, and the two, each armed with a pitchfork, made an attack upon the army of snakes.

They had a big task. The spring was full of hissing, writhing, wriggling snakes, some of them of great size. For a time the battle waged fiercely, but at length the farmers routed the enemy with great slaughter. After it was over they counted 26 dead snakes on the bank of the spring, the snakes being from three to five feet long and one of them measuring 12 inches around the thickest part of its body.

They are not certain that some of the snakes did not escape slaughter by remaining concealed in the hole. It is not known why these snakes should have shown so much activity in cold weather, for if they had been peacefully hibernating, as a self-respecting snake should do, they would not have brought down upon themselves such prompt destruction. It is supposed that there is a cavern or waterway through which the snakes reached the spring, and that they were stirred to activity and vigor when they found that the spring was not frozen over.

Fowls with Long Tails.

An interior province of China has produced one of the most remarkable breeds in the shape of long-tailed fowls in the world. These specimens recently brought to light, and which were kept in the imperial household gardens, are illustrated. The cock has feathers six feet long, and the hen showing tail 12 feet long. There are four varieties—white head and body, with feathers and tail black; white all over, with yellow legs; red neck and body feathers; reddish color mixed with white of body.

High Art in Decoration.

A novel system of adornment for rooms has been patented by a London electrician. The walls are lined with panels of transparent glass, which are faced with negatives of well-known pictures, through which filters subdued electric light. The effect is somewhat the same as the light of a stained glass window, and is quite artistic. There is no glare, and the pictures can be chosen according to the taste of the owner of the room.

R.D MEN'S FAIR IS OVER

LARGEST ATTENDANCE AT ITS CLOSING EVENING SATURDAY.

Everything Disposed Of—Results of the Contests—Prizes Awarded to Ticket Holders.

The fair, that was held last week in Saengerbund Hall under the auspices of Minatonomo and Wetumpkah Tribes, Improved Order Red Men, and Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas, came to an end Saturday. The closing night was the biggest of the week, there being an unusually large attendance. Everything offered for sale was disposed of at good prices.

As an extra attraction for the wind-up the Black Diamond quartette appeared and gave a number of popular selections. The dancing, of course, was the feature.

Great interest was centred in the awarding of the various contests, as follows: Doll, Miss Marguerite Bonbon; second prize, watch, Miss Finger; Past Pocohontas jewel, Mrs. Charles L. Holstein; diamond ring, Mrs. William A. Westphal; bicycle, Charles Montross. The gold watch, which was chanced off, was won by Fred Smith.

To each ticket sold during the week a coupon was attached. Nine of these coupons drew prizes. They were as follows: First prize, No. 2559; second, 1100; third, 1938; fourth, 719; fifth, 617; sixth, 1308; seventh, 2738; eighth, 2912; ninth, 580.

To the committee in charge and all those assisting is due the credit for the success of the fair. Much praise is given Suhr's orchestra for the very satisfactory music given each night. The committee will meet in a few days and settle up all accounts, when the organization will receive their proportionate share.

BROUGHT A BRIDE.

James Gray Returned Home From Easton With a Surprise for His Friends.

James Gray, son of William G. Gray, of West Third street, returned to this city last week from Easton, where he has been employed for some time past in one of the large machine shops. He brought with him a young woman, who he introduced to his friends as Mrs. Gray. It was the first intimation that any of them had that he was married.

The ceremony was performed at Easton, January 1, the bride being Miss Carrie Fisher, of that place. The young people will reside at the home of the groom's parents.

Asked to Wear Robe.

Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, secretary of the Plainfield Board of Health, has sent out notices to all local physicians requesting, in the name of the board, that doctors wear some suitable robe or garment while attending a patient afflicted with a contagious disease. This is for the purpose of preventing the spread of the disease.

Throat Sore?

There's no telling what a sore throat will do if you give it "right of war." Uncertain remedies often cause dangerous delay. Make a sure cure with Painkiller, known for half a century as a specific for sore throat, croup, coughs, and all kindred troubles. Keep it by you for an emergency. It never fails. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'. 25c. and 50c.

Cost of Epidemic.

It is estimated that the smallpox epidemic at Hackettstown will cost the town $10,000, provided that the present indications of its being under control prove true. It is proposed that the town issue bonds to meet the expenses.

Instituted New Tribe.

Great Prophet William Newcorn instituted a new tribe of Red Men at Madison Friday night. The new tribe started off under most favorable conditions. It will have for its prophet Assemblyman Brown, of that place. Mr. Newcorn was accompanied to Madison by several local Red Men.

You Cannot Change

the course of a storm by tearing down the signals that give warning of its approach. Neither can you cure a cold by temporarily stopping a cough with opium-laden "medicines." THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXXV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1902. NO. 8.

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities"—Madison.

SMALLEY IS ON THE FENCE

North Plainfield's Mayor is Interviewed on the Subject of Consolidation.

HE WAS FREE TO TALK.

He Enumerated Reasons For and Against the Project, But Did Not Take a Definite Stand Either Way—Says He is For What the People Want—Few Facts.

Time has softened the opposition of Mayor Newton R. Smalley on the proposition of annexation of the city and borough. In his official capacity as chief executive of the borough he believes in voicing the opinion of his constituents, and consequently he is not prepared to take an advanced stand for or against the idea just at the present time.

When the matter was laid before the boroughites at an election two years ago, it was voted down and since then His Honor, accepting the judgment of the citizens, which coincided with his own at the time, has not felt it incumbent upon himself to advocate consolidation. Should the borough public generally favor the change geographically there appears to be little doubt but the Mayor will fall in line. He admits that North Plainfield has more interests in Union county than it has in Somerset county, where it is a sort of a tail, wagging the dog, in many respects.

"They need as a big sight more than we need them," said the Mayor to a newspaper reporter, in response to a question as to the benefits of annexation. His Honor was rather evasive on the subject and when directly asked to declare himself for or against the proposition, he remarked "I am both." This he finally explained by saying that there are many reasons why annexation would benefit North Plainfield and some reasons why it would prove detrimental. While others have been talking about the subject the Mayor has been thinking and has pursued a policy of drawing out the opinions of the borough citizens.

He thinks that Greater Plainfield would be a city with which the State would have to reckon. It would be one of the large cities and would take its place along side of the leading municipalities in the State, according to North Plainfield's energetic Mayor. There are two objections running through his head in opposition to the thing. One is that such a course would increase the tax rate, something he has always been adverse to, and another is some phases of the practical political situation in the city at present. On the latter objection he will not dwell to any extent, but on the former he is inclined to talk freely.

As far as the taxation is concerned he admits that a good return is given for money collected from the people, but he declares that there is much more room for corruption in a larger city. One thing he brings out is the question of good sized salaries given to officials. He admits that they earn them, but at the same time points out that much is saved the taxpayers in the borough by the small amounts given the officials for their work.

The Mayor believes that some of his favorite municipal ideas would be advanced by annexation. For instance the much mooted question of sewage would relegated for then the borough would have an opportunity of using the Plainfield sewer beds. Only half of the capacity of these beds are being used at the present time and the North Plainfield streets could be dug up and in a short space of time the boroughites would share in the benefits of the system.

At the present time the great obstacle to an independent system is the great cost of the establishment of beds, although the situation of such a plant is important. The Mayor says that to the east and to the west of the built up portions of the borough there is valuable lands which might be used as home sites, but that no one is willing to build on account of the absence of a proper sewage system. The Park residents, he says, are quite destirious of having such a plant. Pipes could be connected with the present bed in this city and the question would be solved.

Another point which he brings out is municipal ownership of a water

TAKEN THROUGH HOLY LAND

DR. M. A. CARMAN GAVE FIRST OF A SERIES OF LECTURES.

At Hope Chapel, Tuesday Night—Illustrated With Fine Collection of Photographs.

The first of a series of lectures on the "Holy Land," to be given by Dr. M. A. Carman, was delivered before an appreciative audience at Hope chapel, Tuesday It was illustrated by a large number of views, greatly varied, which left a clear picture of the course taken by the speaker.

Dr. Carman but recently returned from the far east and the scenes in Asia and Africa along the Mediterranean are those he told of. He described in detail his trip as far as Cairo, Egypt, which is the last stopping place before Joppa, the port of Jerusalem, is reached. Cairo is a quaint city and it has people who are more peculiar. Their manners, customs and mode of dress were pictured and told of in an interesting fashion. The lecture was not only very entertaining but instructive.

The continuation of the trip will be described in another lecture which is to be given in the chapel, Tuesday, March 4.

URGE REAPPOINTMENT.

Union County Teachers Passed Resolutions Concerning Superintendent Baxter—Sent to Governor.

At a recent meeting of the Union County Teachers' Association, at Elizabeth, resolutions were adopted, urging Governor Murphy to reappoint State Superintendent of Schools Chas. J. Baxter, of this city, for another term. Mr. Baxter's term will soon expire, and it has been rumored that it is the intention of the Governor to appoint a man from south Jersey to the position.

The resolutions adopted show strongly that the various superintendents and teachers in the county believe Mr. Baxter to be the right man for the place. There was some opposition to the resolutions, but not enough to count, for they were adopted by a large vote.

It was the general opinion of all that it would be unwise to make a change in the State office at present, as State school affairs are conceded to be in such a flourishing condition.

ENDEAVORERS PLAYED SOME NOVEL GAMES

Original Features at Social Given at Trinity Reformed Church Tuesday Night.

BY ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

CONCLUDED WITH A WAR ROMANCE PICTURED IN SONG.

Guests Were Labelled as Animals and Had to Guess Their Identity From Actions of Others—Music on Human Melodian.

The young people of Trinity Reformed church enjoyed a sociable given under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society in the Sunday-school room Tuesday. A number of interesting games formed the feature of the affair.

The first of these was the "animal" game. On the back of each person was pinned the name of an animal, and the others in the room made signs and sounds which would give one an inkling of the name.

"My Ladies' Work Basket" was another game. On a card were printed the names of silks and textiles, although the letters were mixed purposely. As a rule the young women easily deciphered these jumbled words, but the young men were not so fortunate. The human melodian caused much laughter. Four young women and an equal number of young men represented a scale of music and each furnished a note.

A romance of the Civil War was represented by various popular songs rendered on the piano by Will Pope, while E. F. Sheppard told the story. Each song represented some incident. Refreshments were served at the conclusion of the games.

In charge of the affair were the social and reception committees. The social committee consists of Miss Kreitling, chairman, the Misses Bessie Martin, Nettie Young, Emma Lindsay, Jessie Hockridge and Kate Bodine and Fred Dumavan, while the reception committee is composed of Charles M. Dolliver, chairman, E. F. Sheppard, [Clarence Rittenhouse, Charles Zimmer, William LaTourette and H. B. Dennis. Albert Utzinger assisted in preparing the refreshments. The milk was contributed by Charles Debele and the whipped cream by William Debele.

GAVE HER LIFE TO CAUSE OF MISSIONS

Word Received in Plainfield Tuesday of Death of Miss Rachel Mair.

AT WISSICKA, LIBERIA.

FELL A VICTIM TO A FEVER WHICH FINALLY PROVED FATAL.

Was a Native of Plainfield—Spent Best Years of Life in African Field—Left Here for Last Time in September.

The life of Miss Rachel G. Mair, of this city, has been sacrificed in the missionary field in Africa. She died, while clinging to her life's work, spreading the Gospel among the heathen in that far off land, sometime during the middle part of January, and she will be buried there where she spent the best years of her existence.

The sad news of her end came in a brief letter received by her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Mair, of Leland avenue, Tuesday afternoon. It was sent by Miss Foote, a co-laborer in the missionary cause. A fever, against which she had battled heroically for some time, was responsible for her death.

It takes a month for a letter to come from Africa to Plainfield. The more recent communications received by her family and friends here gave evidence of her suffering, although in all of them she declared her faith that her life would be spared, and repeatedly asked for prayers to that end.

On February 6, John Mair, of Richmond street, a brother, received two short notes from her. The first was dated January 4 and it told of the great pain she was enduring from the awful fever, and implored her relatives and friends to pray for her. The other was dated January 6 and the handwriting bore out the inference that she was growing weaker. It was decipherable, but the hand that wrote the note was certainly unsteady. In this last letter, she said that sometimes she thought that her friends had ceased their prayers and she implored that they ask God to bring relief to her.

At the last missionary meeting in Warren chapel, a communication was read from Miss Mair, telling of the agonizing fever and asking the prayers of the congregation, which were given with fervor. When this letter was received the faithful missionary had passed away. The fulfillment of the ambition of life had brought her to an untimely end.

For several years Miss Rachel G. Mair was a teacher in the North Plainfield public schools, but all during that period she was impatient to abandon the position and take up missionary work. In 1894, she resigned and in the following year she enlisted as a missionary of the Methodist Foreign Missionary Board and was at once assigned to the African field. She sailed to Wissicka, Liberia, a station then recently established, and set about her work with a full heart.

After spending five years there she returned to America for a brief visit, her intention being to kindle more interest among the Christian people here in the work being done. In September 1901, Miss Mair returned to her post, and since then has worked persistently. When she went back to Africa the Missionary Board's Arms accompanied her, and it was from the former that the first tidings of her death came.

Miss Mair was an active worker in Warren chapel. When she took up missionary work, her Sunday-school class there formed itself into the King's Foreign Missionary Circle, and has always taken an active interest in her work. Contributions were constantly sent by the circle and it has aided her in numerous other ways. She was a regular member of the Crescent Avenue church, and it was through her work there that she became interested in the chapel.

Miss Mair was forty-five years of age at the time of her death. She was born in Plainfield. Surviving her are her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Mair, two sisters, the Misses Mary and Agnes Mair, and three brothers, John, Alexander and Thomas Mair.

STORM IN SOMERSET.

That County Was Snow Bound After Monday's Young Blizzard.

Somerville, Feb. 19—This town is just recovering from the effects of the snowstorm. Late yesterday afternoon the trolley resumed operations and the trains on the Central and South Branch roads approached somewhat their usual regularity.

The country roads in this vicinity are badly drifted, which necessitates driving through fields. The different townships will have some pretty substantial bills to pay for shoveling the snow.

FOUND ANSWERS ON TAGS

NOVEL KIND OF ENTERTAINMENT AT ENDEAVOR SOCIAL.

Besides Finding the Answers, the Guests Heard a Musical Programme.

A "tag" social was held under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist church, last evening. There was a good attendance. The rooms were decorated with large American flags.

The first part of the evening was devoted to carrying out the "tag" part of the social. Questions of a Biblical, scientific, humorous and historical character were written on half of the tags, while the answers were written on the other half, the idea being for those having the questions to find those having the answers.

In addition there were ward piano solos by Clifford M. Braider, piano and mandolin duets by Mr. Braider and R. Wilson Derby, baritone solos by Mr. Derby, while there were recitations by Miss Mae Batchelor and Lawrence French. After the entertainment ice cream and cake was served.

The social committee having the affair in charge consisted of Hubert J. DuBois, chairman; Miss Ella Sorrell, Miss Mae Batchelor, Miss Grace TenEyck, Mrs. Hannah Flanders and Kerro Knox.

REMOVING SNOW.

Men of Street Department Are Kept Busy Clearing Streets and Sidewalks of Snow.

The street department has continued the work of snow removal from streets and sidewalks and today traffic, except on the extreme outskirts, is practically clear.

Two gangs, comprising eight men each, have been in opposite portions of the city clearing walks while another gang with carts is removing snow from the main thoroughfares. The latter work is al nost completed.

A gang was sent out this morning to break the drifts on Bellevue avenue, leading to Hillside cemetery, as it has been almost impossible for funeral corteges to reach the burial ground. It is thought the road will be entirely cleared by nightfall.

PROF. GRIGGS COMING.

Will Deliver Series of Lectures at Crescent Ave. Church Chapel.

The lectures of Prof. Edward Howard Griggs last winter on "Dante" gave such unqualified delight to his Plainfield audiences, that the simple announcement of his course of lectures on Robert Browning to be given Feb. 20, March 6 and 20 in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, will be sufficient to interest a large number of people. These lectures are given under the auspices of the Friday Afternoon Club, the time of the lectures 3:30.

Prof. Griggs is a speaker whose clear thought finds eloquent expression and rivets the attention of his listeners throughout his addresses. He is delivering two courses of lectures this season in Boston, where crowded houses attest to his popularity.

Health Officer Lord Thurlow will use them in his tests of milk, an inspection of which he expects to make within the next week or so. Gradually the laboratory in the board's offices is being furnished with modern appliances and a full equipment.

VALUABLE GIFTS FROM J. ACKERMAN COLES

Has Had Two Costly Bronzes Cast Expressly for Scotch Plains Public School.

ARE OF GREAT VALUE.

LIFE-SIZE BUSTS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON AND BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Made in France From Models of Jean Antoine Houdon—Presented In Memory of His Father and Grandfather.

Dr. J. Ackerman Coles is shortly to add two more costly and beautiful gifts to the large number he has already donated the Scotch Plains school. They exceed in historic value anything yet presented by him and are explained in the following letter which he has written to the trustees of the school:

To the Trustees of the Scotch Plains Public School:—

Gentlemen:—Quite a long while ago I ordered Tiffany & Company, of New York, to have cast at the celebrated foundry of Barbedienne in Paris, France, for the public school of Scotch Plains, New Jersey, a life size bronze bust of George Washington and a life size bronze bust of Benjamin Franklin from the models of Jean Antoine Houdon made by him from casts and measurements taken by himself, those of Washington being made while the artist was a guest at Mt. Vernon, Virginia, in 1785; and those of Franklin in 1778 during his residence in Paris as our minister plenipotentiary at the Court of France.

These busts have arrived from Europe with appropriate marble pedestals and are now at the store of Tiffany & Company on Union Square mounted and ready for delivery.

Washington I take pleasure in donating to the school in memory of my father, Abraham Coles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D., LL. D.; and Franklin in memory of my grandfather, Dennis Coles (1778-1844), well known in his day as a printer, publisher, philanthropist and statesman, both being natives of Scotch Plains and ever active in promoting the educational interests of the county. Many noted educators, including Martha Lamb, the historian, were frequent guests at my grandparent's home here at Scotch Plains.

In making the gifts I note with state pride the high grade of excellence that for nearly a century has characterized the Scotch Plains school, its praiseworthy exhibit at the World's Columbia Exposition in 1893 being now permanently preserved in the State House at Trenton.

The unique large and well appointed Scotch Plains school building of brick construction, of Colonial design, the work of Messrs. McKim, Meade and White, is a lasting memorial of good taste and progressive intelligence.

It is doubtful if any other school in America has had bronzes of equal fame cast especially for it. Presuming that the same will be acceptable to you for deposit on the platform of your assembly room, or elsewhere in the school building, I have ordered them to be sent to you on or before the 22 inst., Washington's birthday, all charges prepaid.

With best wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

J. Ackerman Coles.

BLOOD TEST OF GUILT.

Striking Instance of Superstition Lately Witnessed in a Chinese Mixed Court.

An instance of the prevalence of superstition among the better class of Chinese, even in Europeanized communities, is supplied by a recent trial before the mixed court at Shanghai, reports the New York Sun. Magistrate Chang was sitting. An English assessor was present, and counsel appeared on both sides.

The case was one in which a native detective was accused of abducting a girl betrothed to another man. The question before the magistrate to decide was whether the accused should be arraigned on a civil or a criminal charge.

All the witnesses, even the girl herself and her mother, declared that the man had not maltreated her. But Magistrate Chang was of another opinion, and he commanded that the mother be beaten in order to extract the confession he was sure she was withholding. This was futile, of course, as the poor woman had nothing to confess.

Then the accused man, who was already on his knees, took oath in Chinese fashion by breaking a saucer. Most solemnly he protested that his relations with the girl had been proper. Still the magistrate was not satisfied and he demanded another test.

The girl's forefinger was first cut and the blood therefrom allowed to drop into a bowl of water provided by the court. The detective's finger was next cut, and the same proceeding carried out. The magistrate then bent that as the blood mixed, the detective was guilty, and remanded him for trial before the court on a criminal charge.

ANIMALS FULL OF YEARS.

Inmates of a Paris Institution for Aged Quadrupeds That Have Lived Over the Limit.

In the vicinity of Paris a home for old domestic animals was established some time ago, and among the present inmates are a mule 72 years old, a cow 36 and a pig 25 years old, says the New York Herald.

It is claimed that domestic animals which lead an easy life are likely to live far beyond the average age if properly cared for. Many birds certainly attain an extraordinary age. Eagles, ravens and parrots frequently live a hundred years, and pelicans probably live as long, for it is recorded that one of these birds was placed in the Amsterdam zoological garden some time before 1792, and was still there in 1878. This pelican, too, was at least four or five years old when it was placed in the garden.

Eels are also long lived. Prof. Buckner tells of one which was kept for 20 years in a pond at Thiengen, in which it was placed at the age of eight years. It attained a length of nearly five feet, and its favorite haunt was in the current that flowed into the pond. All authorities agree that domestic animals which are obliged to do a good deal of work do not live so long as those which lead a placid life.

THE MOORISH CITY OF FEZ.

Its Narrow Streets Where the Sun Never Shines and Its Filthy "River of Pearls."

The sun never touches the ground in Fez, except in a few isolated spaces, owing to the narrow streets, the height of houses and the habit of stretching trellises covered with vines across from side to side. The consequence is, says the Detroit Free Press, that its naturally dark-skinned citizens, being rarely exposed to the full light of day, have complexions resembling partially decomposed potato sprouts in a dark cellar. The so-called streets run in straight lines the entire length of the town, and are all paved with stones about the size of cocoanuts, worn smooth by the tread of generations of slippered feet. As these lanes are never swept, and every householder throws his slops and refuse out of doors, one must pick his way with exceeding care.

The Wed el Jubai ("River of Pearls") divides the city into two parts, the new and the old. The "River of Pearls" is forbidden in every part, the resort of every four-footed beast and winged beast in the place; it receives all the drainage of the city, and is the general source of the drinking water supply.

Industrial Consumption of Gold.

The industrial consumption of gold in the United States in the calendar year is estimated to be $40,000,000. In 1887,500, and in the world approximately $75,000,000. Although the United States led the world last year in the production of gold, our imports of the metal exceeded our exports by the sum of $12,000,000. Of gold coin in the country, including bullion in the mints, at the close of the fiscal year was estimated at $1,124,652,818, and the stock of silver coin at $610,477,022.

Fox Hunt in a Church.

Religious services were in progress in a schoolhouse in Cashing, Ala., on a recent Sabbath when a startling disturbance occurred. A fox darted in through the open door pursued by a couple of hounds, and in a few moments the animals and the scholars of the frightened ladies became alarmingly mixed. The women's screams at last terrified the four-footed interlopers and they bounded off toward the woods.

Poor Greatest Mining Country.

Peru holds the record as a mining country. She has 2,500 mines, from which 70,000 workmen dig gold, silver, sulphur, coal, phosphates, quicksilver, borax, copper and lead.

New WOMAN Happenings

Yesterday evening at the rush hour for returning passengers I was going home on a New York city elevated train. At the station where I stopped, in the midst of a great throng of people, I heard a man's voice above all the din and roar of the cars saying in loud, angry tones, as though he were speaking to a dog, "Go home!" I looked around, but saw no dog. I did see the man who was offering the unknown creature to go home. He was a well dressed man, with hair quite white, and he really looked decent and respectable. Where was the dog? I could not find it, but I did see a woman near the man, a woman towering in shame and humiliation. She wore diamond earrings, expensive furs and a handsome hat. Only her hurt, frightened, humiliated look made me know that the man was speaking to her and that nobody but her husband, a man she could not get away from, would dare address a respectable woman thus. She glanced toward me instinctively in search of that sympathy which one woman gives to another. She met it pouring out to her half way. "Is he your husband?" I asked. "Yes," she replied; "I want him to come home, and he is going to a saloon to get drunk. He has been getting drunk for years. He treats me awfully sometimes." And still that idiot of a woman has lived with this beast, listened to his curses and endured his blows! Because she does so she is quite as much to blame as he. She should not have stayed with him twenty-four hours after he had thus insulted her before a throng of people. For the sake of clean, self respecting women hood it is better to live alone and scrub for bread than to stay with a drunken husband.

A rich and, up to that time, thoroughly respectable young woman was found wandering on a city street in a hapless and helpless state of intoxication. It was the first time such a misfortune had happened to her and was likely to be the last time. But a reporter got a hint on the item for his paper and did not rest or sleep till he had dug out by means of detective spies the woman's full name and address, also that of her husband, a man occupying a high place. All this was spread before the public, was telegraphed from one end of the land to the other, and the miserable woman and her family were disgraced for life. But the reporter got his bent. Perhaps some day an equally enterprising reporter will get a spicy "beat" concerning this reporter's mother, sister or wife.

It is odd to note that, according to a recent interviewer, Mrs. Hodgson Burnett now calls herself an English woman. It is true she was born in England, but has not forgotten the little country girl childhood in the mountains of Tennessee, where she used to pick blackberries? Has she forgotten that her girlish writings and her first book found recognition in America, and only after that recognition and its attendant pecuniary success she would never have been able to sail to London and take a house in Portland square and make studies for her novels from the British aristocracy? Dear, but some people are queer! But perhaps it was the newspaper reporter who posed her as an English woman.

ELIZA ARCHARD CONNER.

A CHILD'S INDIVIDUALITY.

It Should Be Carefully Fostered From the Youngster's Cradle Days.

"My little Bessie is so clever! She can copy anything she sees!" gushed the fond mother.

"Humph!" retorted Aunt Susan, who has her own ideas on the subject of bringing up children. "Can she do anything original herself? That's the point."

And I am inclined to adopt Aunt Susan's point of view. There is too much copying done nowadays. The original people one meets may be counted on the fingers of the right hand. Is not the fault with the parents on account of the way they bring up their children? From the cradle they unconsciously encourage them to imitate instead of strengthening the brown in to individuality. Individuality is a very precious thing in this world. People who have it generally succeed at the expense of their heads by the dozens of fellow beings. It is a mistake to think that originality is a natural gift, such as the eye for color or the ear for music. It isn't anything of the sort. People who have individuality or originality usually owe it to circumstances. If you want your child to have an individuality which will command success, if you want him or her to be an originator instead of merely a follower of other people, it all depends on you.

Teach the child from its earliest years to think for itself; curb every tendency it shows to imitate its playmates; encourage it when it creates anything, no matter how small; give it opportunities to create things with wood, clay, colors, paper and pencil. Get the little child colored chalks and a blackboard on which it may draw, but don't give it anything to copy from. Let it make its own designs. Always urge the child to do things better than the ordinary run of people.

In this manner you will train your child to be a leader of men instead of a follower.

COMFORT IN CHAIRS.

Club Armchairs and Queen Anne Models—Velveteen Coverings.

One of the newest models in wicker chairs is shown in the illustration. It is designed especially for a library, although it may be used in any reading or lounging room. It is made of dark green wicker and is upholstered in striped green and old rose tapestry. The novel feature consists in the two capacious pockets for periodicals or books. Wicker is very fashionable just now and is carried out in all styles, and in red, black, brown and dark and light green.

The chairs of the season are lower. They have wider seats and longer arms. Many of the most comfortable as well as the most expensive are built on the English club chair pattern—that is, they have wide seats beautifully upholstered and arms reaching to the edge of the seat. The Queen Anne back of the chair in the illustration is considered quite smart. It is very comfortable in a room where there are drafts. Cushions of the same material as the upholstery of the chair are a fad of the moment. They are placed in the deep seats of the arm chairs to enable one to sit upright comfortably.

Velveteen is much used for chair coverings. It comes in most artistic striped and figured designs and has the advantage of cleaning well.

Girls Who Play Hockey.

The girls of Wellesley are going in enthusiastically for field hockey as a college sport. Their teacher, Miss Applebee, a handsome English girl, is certain there is no game equal to hockey as a developer of mind and muscle. At the same time, properly played, it is by no means a rough sport. Everything that tends to get girls outdoors and make them strong and active is good, whatever its name, and ought to be encouraged.

The Right Sort of Charity

Mrs. Van Styles sighed wearily as she handed to her secretary a long list of names. "My annual charity list," she commented dryly. "Please inclose to each the amount marked."

The secretary ran down the list and went on quietly with her work. Mrs. Van Styles, however, happened to be in a talkative mood. She suddenly changed her mind about going out, and, sinking into an easy chair, she watched her pose relation performing the heavy task of answering her morning mail.

"Anna," she suddenly exclaimed, "tell me honestly what do you think of charity? Isn't it all a fraud?"

The secretary raised her serious gray eyes. "Yes, as you do it," she answered. Then, fearing she had offended her employer, she added hastily, "But you know you wanted the honest truth."

"I do," retorted Mrs. Van Styles. "Those people prey on me so, are so unappreciative, and so dishonest, that I feel as if I were doing wrong instead of right in encouraging them."

"Of course they're lazy," answered the girl quietly, "and, being lazy, of course they're ungrateful. And they're the very things to encourage them to be lazier and more dishonest and have neither pride nor ambition. Now, if you gave them pride and ambition instead of money"—

"But how can I?"

"It's possible. You know there are two kinds of charity—the charity that gives money to the poor and the charity that teaches the poor how to get money for themselves. And the last is certainly the greater. The poor, with few exceptions, are not lazy. We make them so. It is easier for the rich to dole out charity than to go down among the poor and help them make the most of what abilities they have—harder still, discover the abili- ties they don't know they have. The world owes a living to every person in it. Every person can do one thing well. The question is to find out what that one thing is. Nine-tenths of the poverty stricken failures owe their condition to misapplied energy and ignorance of their one strong point, talent or whatever you choose to call it. Teach people to 'find themselves,' as Kipling puts it, and you give them the key to all the rest.

"I used to know a woman," the girl went on softly, "who did this sort of thing consciously. She made more lives happy than I can count. She was a rich woman and gave freely of her money, but she always gave it in such a manner that the recipient was fitted by its means for the battle of life, not weakened by it. And her charity did not extend alone to the very poor. Indeed, do you know I think there is a class which needs help more than the poor—those who are neither well off nor in actual need. Nobody pays any attention to them, and they go on fighting, sometimes against tremendous odds. If this woman saw a girl, for instance, alone and struggling, discontented with her present condition and trying in a blind and ineffectual way, she knew not how, to rise to something better, she invited her to her home. There, over a sociable cup of tea or under the softening influence of a cheery room, she gained her confidence, and with her superior insight she set the girl on the right track, instead of letting her go on to failure and perhaps—who knows?—to the dangers which arise from the despair of failure. When she died, it was said of her, 'She made lives out of wrecks.'"

As the secretary concluded she noticed that Mrs. Van Styles had reached for her charity list and was rereading it.

MAUD ROBINSON.

For Evening Gowns.

Lace net for evening gowns is one of the best of all the materials for the purpose. These are frequently wrought in one of these embroidery stitches, but in silk floss instead of wool. Chenille is also employed to work dots over an entire dress. A dress of this kind is of white net with canary colored chenille dots. It is made up over a slip of blue taffeta and trimmed with pink roses and long streamers of blue ribbon fall far from the shoulders.

AMERICAN "LADY" HELPS.

A Region in Which Some of Them Still Survive.

Presidents, senators, politicians, statesmen even and famous financiers have been born and bred in middle northern Ohio almost more than in any other one section of the Union.

One understands the reason for it when he visits northern Ohio and notes the men and especially the women who live there. More than a century ago, while Ohio was yet a part of the great Northwest territory, pioneers journeyed thither from the most enlightened of the older states and struck axe into the forest primeval. There they made homes and reared great families of sons and daughters; there in turn these sons and daughters lived and thrived, establishing public schools and colleges and newspapers. Of their children the boys worked on the farm in summer and thus helped pay their way at college in winter; the girls got certificates to teach a country school, over which they presided in summer, and they, too, went to college in winter. The first college open to women in this Union, Oberlin, is in central northern Ohio. The first woman suffrage convention was held in the same region.

AS EQUAL TO EQUAL.

So pleasant and prosperous did this part of the state become and continue that the descendants of the pioneers did not leave it, but many of them remain, pure native American stock, thriving, intelligent farm people. To this day the Declaration of Independence is read among them on the Fourth of July; yes, and the people believe it, too, teaching their sons and daughters after them that all mankind is created free and endowed by nature with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness for both women and men. Women there have had a Fourth of July celebration all to themselves.

The women and girls believe that it is the water which makes them work, not the work the worker. They milk cows, dig in the garden, do millinery and dressmaking or even go out to domestic service, and they have yet to learn that they are not ladies because of it. The spirit of '76 lives and breathes in them still. Well educated daughters of well to do farmers—girls who would be schoolmistresses on, there are so many well educated young women there that the schools will not go around—take service in the cities and remain as before, self respecting ladies.

In Cleveland many of these well educated American girls, some of them bearing names that were signed to the Declaration of Independence, are found in the hotels as chambermaids and housemaids. It gives the oddest impression to a traveler accustomed to the hotels of Europe and our own eastern states to stop at one of the Cleveland hotels where the native American young women are employed. The sight of them would warm the hearts of those patronizing people who write and preach of "lady helps," and one fears it would set them off galloping their hobby harder than ever.

These American hotel girls seem rather like the best class of schoolmistress. In person they are immaculate, particularly nice as to their heads, though they wear caps scarcely at all. A cap does not suit their ideas. Their grammar is oftentimes perfect, their manners are unexceptionable.

They meet strangers as equal to equal. Quite unconsciously to themselves they give you the impression that they are as good as you are, not obtrusively or offensively, however. They simply know they are as good as you are, and they know you must know it also, and that ends it.

Some of them play the piano and play it well. The consciousness that they are equal to the people on whom they wait gives them a friendly, obliging spirit, and with their Yankee quickness they render admirable service, and, what is more than all, they do not lie in wait to extract from you the everlasting tip of the foreign person in such position. They have too much self respect. In manners and appearance they are often far more the lady than many a rich woman who occupies the best rooms in the hotel and does not know how to eat soup properly.

So long as there thus survives among us the brave old American spirit there is hope for our republic still.

JANE STORY.

THE HAAS BROTHERS

Three of Them Have Fallen in Love with Jane Segur.

Two of the Romances Were Stained with Blood—The Third May End Happily for Both Bride and Groom.

Jane Segur, or Haas, the latter being the name she has borne for many years, has had two romances, both stained with blood, and her third may be bloodless—if the prospective bride and groom get away in time. Jane Segur is to marry the third of the Haas brothers. She had previously married the other two, but death intervened and she became twice a widow. The third Haas seems to have no fear, but all the good shots in Montezuma county are not dead yet and there is no telling what may happen. Twice married and widowed, Mrs. Haas is soon to become a bride for the third time, and is willing to run all risks.

Thirty years ago William Haas was a prosperous young merchant at Mount Gilead, O., but the balm in that Gilead was not sufficient to satisfy the yearnings of his soul for greater wealth, so he removed his goods and other belongings to Cortez, Neb., and set up a trading house.

The belle of Cortez when Haas first made his appearance was Jane Segur, and she was as pretty as a maiden dared be.

Two brothers by the name of Siegel were particularly attentive to Jane, and they gave it out that the man who married Jane had better make his will before the marriage ceremony was performed. Now it happened that little Jane had fallen in love with William Haas, and accepted his offer of heart and hand. When the Siegels heard of it they became more than ordinarily strenuous. They talked to Haas in an unseemly manner until his Ohio blood becoming hot he was aroused to anger, and he promptly added a full charge of large shot to the weight of one of the brothers, causing death almost instantly.

When the interest in the death of Siegel had died down, says the Chicago Tribune, Haas took his bride to the altar and continued business at the old stand, not caring to go away on a honeymoon trip. His business prospered and everything went along smoothly until one night as he was going home from the store he was shot dead from ambush, the bullet fired by the unseen foe entering the heart. The finger of suspicion, as it is sometimes called, was pointed at the surviving Siegel, but when he asked the men of Cortez to proclaim publicly that they thought he was the man, not one of them opened his mouth. This particular Siegel was the best shot in several counties.

John Haas went to Cortez from Mount Gilead to settle up his brother's business affairs, for the widow was too prostrated to think of anything but her sorrows, but she brightened up after John's arrival. He was not bad looking, and, being a good business man, soon straightened out all the commercial kinks. He had business to attend to in Ohio, but he lengthened his stay at Cortez until it was too late to return. He had fallen in love with his brother's relict, and the end of it all was that he married her. He, like his brother William, lived happily with Jane, who was still the most beautiful woman in Cortez, until his sudden death. Whether the Siegel brother still had vengeance in his heart or not is not known, but it is said he was in town when William died.

There was still another Haas brother, named Henry, at Mount Gilead, and it became his duty to go west and look after the interests of the widow. He was more or less reluctant, but he did not shirk his duty. He went to Cortez, put the business in proper shape, and then began to linger. He might have returned to Ohio again, but he didn't. The widow was not so young as when she first married, but her eyes were still bright and Henry, being unmarried, liked her. To all appearances she was not averse to his attentions, and at last he ventured to suggest that it would not be a bad idea if they became man and wife. As a saving clause he remarked that it were better, perhaps, if they were wed at Mount Gilead and made their permanent residence there. He thought the climate at Cortez unhealthy. She agreed with him, and in a few days they will go to Mount Gilead, get married, and reside at the old Haas homestead.

THE HAAS BROTHERS POWER IN POLITICS.

A Popular Delusion About Abraham Lincoln Corrected.

He Was Neither a Dark Horse Nor an Accident When Nominated by the Republicans for President in 1860.

An Iowa writer who is telling about the number of great men which his state has produced in the past few decades, that authoress, secretary Leslie M. Shaw has been only four or five years in politics, yet he is far better known to the nation than Lincoln was when he was nominated for president." The notion that Lincoln was a dark horse outside of his own state until his nomination for president has been expressed by better informed writers than the Iowa man here referred to, but it is a delusion just the same, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Lincoln served a term in congress in the latter part of the Mexican war, and though he did not make a national reputation then, he was sufficiently well known throughout the country in 1856, at the time when the republican party's first national convention was held, to get 110 votes in that convention for vice president on the ticket with Fremont, as compared with 46 for Banks, who had just been elected speaker of the house in the longest and most exciting contest for that office which has taken place in the history of the country, and 43 for Wilmot, the author of the celebrated anti-slavery proviso. Dayton, however, was nominated. That was four years before Lincoln's nomination for president. In 1858, when he canvassed Illinois against Douglas in the contest for the senate, he won a reputation which extended all over the country, and which brought his name up in connection with the republican national leadership. That was nearly two years before the convention met which nominated him for president.

The person who asserts that Lincoln was suddenly sprung upon the country as a presidential quantity knows nothing about the politics of 1856-60. When Lincoln, by invitation of a New York Republican club, made his historic address at Cooper Institute, in New York city, on February 27, 1860, the Tribune declared next morning that "since the days of Clay and Webster no man has spoken to a larger assemblage of the intellect and culture of our city." He had powerful friends among the republican statesmen and newspapers of every state in the union at that time, and that was nearly three months before the convention met which nominated him. On the first of the three ballots in the convention in which he was nominated he had votes from New England and the middle states, as well as from his own quarter of the country. Careless or ignorant persons, in pointing morals or making antitheses, are in the habit of insinuating that Lincoln, at the time of his nomination in 1860, was a sort of a dark horse or an accident, but such persons make a wide divergence from the facts.

The Country's Death Rate.

A recent bulletin of the United States census compares the mortality of 1900 and that of 1890, and shows that there has been a diminution of something like ten per cent in the death rate. In 1890 the average longevity in the United States was 31.1 years; in 1900 it is 35.2 years. The increase is 13 per cent. This is the conclusion, at least, so far as cities of over 8,000 inhabitants are concerned, and it represents the facts for the whole country approximately. In 1894 245 persons died of consumption to every 100,000 living; in 1900 only 206. The case is similar, though not so marked, for other diseases—diphtheria, bronchitis, typhoid, cholera infantum and the like. The main causes are a perfected hygiene of towns and the progress of medicine. Pneumonia, however, claimed 197 victims per 10,000 in 1900 to 187 in 1890.

Oldest Man in America.

The claim of Martin Head, of Napoleon, O., to being the oldest man in the United States is not well founded. Noah Raby, of New Jersey, who is at the Piscataway poor farm, located near New Brunswick, claims to be between 129 and 130 years old.

Race of Spotted People.

A tribe of peculiar people dwell on the banks of the Parana, in South America. Men, women and children are spotted, with brown spots on a white skin. Their chief article of diet is fish.

Franchise Corporations and the Tax Reform

Miss Margaret A. Haley Writes of the School Teachers' Fight in Illinois.

SHOULD corporations pay taxes on all of their property? The law of Illinois says they should, and the members of the Chicago Federation of Teachers believe that they should. We have fought the matter in the courts with some little success.

The history of our activity to this point is briefly this: We have secured from the supreme court of Illinois a mandamus to compel the state board of equalization to assess the franchises of five corporations—one gas, one electric lighting, one telephone and two street railway companies. These franchise values were entirely omitted in 1899. A committee of teachers appeared before the state board of equalization at its session of 1900 and called attention to the fact that that body had overlooked the franchises of these corporations, which were not only assessable, but assessable upon a cash valuation of upwards of $200,000,000. The board took no action; then we instituted court proceedings to compel them to make the assessment.

Perceiving that the Teachers' Federation was in earnest the board then assessed the franchises at $12,500,000, and adjourned. Even this low assessment was a point in our favor, for by this action the board acknowledged that franchises were assessable. We pursued the matter in the courts to compel the full assessment, with the result that on November 22, 1901, in obedience to the order of the supreme court, the state board of equalization reassessed the franchises of these five corporations at a full value of $172,000,000 for the year 1900. For the year 1901 the board fixed the same franchise values at about half that figure. While important results in the matter of established precedent have been achieved, the schools have not as yet benefited by the cash results which should have followed. The corporations have appealed to the United States court for an injunction against the collection of the taxes ordered by the state supreme court. That injunction, if granted, will tie up the $2,000,000 of back taxes secured as the result of the supreme court decision. So much for the skeleton outline of our work to date.

Now we have accomplished something which does not appear from these figures. Heretofore the state board of equalization has worked like a mole in the ground. We have turned up the sod and let in the light of public scrutiny. A healthy public sentiment has followed this action. Municipal officers of high standing, including Mayor Harrison, have seen the justice of our plea and have personally argued in its behalf before the state board.

Why did the school teachers take up this matter? Through the instinct of self-protection. They found that without sufficient revenue the schools could not be maintained. They saw wherein the funds were being withheld by corporations which did not pay their rightful share of taxes.

Let me present another bit of history: The present Illinois franchise law went into effect in 1872. That year the railroads of Illinois had to pay $6,000,000 of taxes on their franchises alone, in addition to the $6,000,000 on their tangible property. They appealed to the courts, but were beaten in both the state and United States tribunals. Then, in 1898, they secured such a tremendous hold on the state legislature that a bill to remit that portion of the tax in dispute passed the senate and lacked only five votes of passing the house. One time, at the close of a speech which I delivered in Rockford, I learned the exact history of this interesting bit of legislature from an old man who had been a member of that legislature. There was in the legislature, he said, a goodly sprinkling of members belonging to the organization of grangers which had secured this franchise law, and these members, naturally enough, stood out against the corporations. Nevertheless, the activity of the corporation lobbyists finally resulted in winning five of the grangers over, and it seemed certain that the bill would pass. However, on the night before the vote was to be taxen (this being the last day before adjournment), the remaining grangers induced the five backsliders to board home-bound trains, and gave them pretty strong hints about the folly of arraying themselves in favor of such an infamous bit of legislation. The bill was defeated.

The victory was not complete, however, for in this same year a new board of equalization was elected, only two of the old members being retained. Since that time no railroad in Illinois has had its franchise taxed, and the taxes on their tangible property have decreased each year. In 1899 the railroads in Cook county paid $640,000 less in taxes than in 1898, and they will pay less this year than last.

The Chicago Federation of Teachers has fought these legal battles with very little outside aid in the way of contributions; the expense has been borne by the members themselves. Membership in the federation is confined to classroom teachers, superintendents, principals and special teachers not being eligible to membership. And there are over 4,000 teachers in the federation. We are fighting a battle that has attracted wide attention and, as a result, similar federations of grade teachers have been organized in other cities. It seems inevitable that this movement shall result in a strong national organization along parallel lines.

ANIMALS AS PROPHETS.

Strange Belief of the People of Eastern Prussia and a Tale That Is Told.

The written and spoken folklore of Tyrol assumes that on holy night, between the hours of 11:30, or 11:45, and midnight, animals not only speak, but also possess the gift of prophecy. The same belief prevails in Eastern Prussia, that part of the empire which was last to be converted to Christianity on the continent of Europe. During my travels in the governments of Konigsberg and Gumbinnen, writes a correspondent of a London paper, I gathered the following stories on the subject:

Some 20 years ago at Zeiseunam, a village near the Polish frontier, a man named Klau, horse-trader, farmer and pensioner by profession, decided to test the legend saying that it meant death to watch the animals during night. So he hid in a fodder chest, and at 11:45 the horses really began to talk among themselves. An old stallion was the first to speak.

"Wonder who will be our new master?" he said, and each of the animals suggested a different man, commenting at the same time on the character and personality of his candidate.

Klau went to his bed more dead than alive, and from that hour on sickened. He died during January, "a victim of his prying spirit and curiosity," as the people thereabouts assert.

SPAIN'S YOUNG KING.

Will Assume the Responsibilities of Office Next May.

Statements as to the Youngster's Health Are Reassuring — Will Have Plenty of Hard Official Work to Perform.

A series of visits to the chief European courts and countries is shortly to be paid by the young king of Spain. It will form an once his debut to the world and the finishing touch, so to speak, to his royal education.

The boy king has now entered his sixteenth year, for it was the 17th of May, last, when Senor Sagasta announced to the anxious nation that the widow of their dead king had borne a son. Maria Christiana, now no longer called the Austrian, has accomplished the greater part of her task. In May next she will lay down the regency, and her only son will assume the dignities and responsibilities of kingship.

Alfonso XIII. is at first sight a delicate lad—thin, pale and of nervous appearance. Some say he has inherited the constitutional infirmity of his father; others that his appearance is something he shares in common with all the men of the house of Hapsburg. During the maneuvers held at Carabanchel the young king remained seven hours in the saddle without exhibiting any symptom of fatigue, and his personal staff noticed that even a prolonged canter did nothing to weaken his voice. When the day's work was over he was as animated as he was at the beginning. This is excellent news from Spain as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. He is already handicapped by his responsibilities. An English lad at 15 years, whatever his position, would not be carrying half the load of knowledge borne by Alfonso XIII. He speaks English, French and German as well as Spanish; has a careful mathematical training; is a student of history and is devoted to military matters. For a boy his knowledge of the elements of military science is quite uncommon.

A strong, healthy king can give the land the period of repose that will enable it to develop its internal resources, find occupation for its growing population outside the corrupt world of officialdom, amend its educational defects, outgrow Carlism and become once more a power to be reckoned with. The reverse of the picture is not pleasing. An invalid director of state whose various functions are like an unruly horse that must be ridden on the curb cannot fulfill his duties, and if anything happened to him the princess of the Asturias would become queen of Spain, and her husband, Carlos de Bourbon, prince of Asturias, would become king consort. Against such a development the old unquiet elements in Spain would rise up again. The possibility of it is said to have brought Senor Sagasta into temporary opposition with the queen regent when the question of the marriage was first mooted.

When Alfonso XIII. comes to his own he will be entirely dependent, for some time at least, upon the advice and guidance of the people who have the power in their hands to-day. With statesmen who desire no more than the progress of Spain, and a mother whose life has been marked by most rigid devotion to duty, the young king will start upon his work well equipped. He will be well for the country if his advisers succeed in impressing upon him the necessity of refraining from experiments of every sort.

If the young king becomes a reactionary he will arouse the radicals and strengthen the republicans; if he shows too much zeal for reform he will weaken the allegiance of the conservatives and strengthen the Carlists. They say at Madrid that his best policy lies in a continuance of the existing order of things and a devotion to such works as the improvement of the financial situation the substitution of some less direct method of taxation from the octroi duties, and the maintenance of army efficiency, the creation of a small navy on the most modern lines and the granting of such concessions to democracy as the Spanish official mind can accept without offense. It is not a very heroic programme, nor is it one that can appeal very strongly to a young, enthusiastic, ambitious ruler; but Spain is a very tired country just now; she has passed through several years of internal convulsion.

KILLED HIS MOTHER.

Fearful Rites Inaugurated by a Sect of Religious Crazies.

Young Man from America Beats Woman Who Gave Him Life to Death — Great Mystery in Germany and Russia.

The Berlin correspondent of the New York World writes that about a year ago a young man named Kaschke hastened to his home in the village of Dalten, an hour's journey from Berlin, from the United states to inform his family of the approaching end of the world. His father, a well-to-do farmer, had always been a religious man, with leanings toward the mystical in religion. He was a member of the national church until the return of his son.

The young man while in America had associated himself with a number of semi-mystical bodies, the chief tenet of which is that the end of the world is at hand. Being persuaded of the approach of the second advent, he believes it to be his duty to assist his relatives in preparing for the coming of Christ.

The young man found his relatives in perfect readiness to accept his peculiar views. Recently they assembled at the Kaschke home, divested themselves of nearly all their clothing and began to chant litanies and psalms. The neighbors saw them dancing about and careering like maniacs across the farmyard.

They had resolved to take no food until Christ came, and young Kaschke set about to hasten what felt the pangs of hunger first were those whom God had not elected. Besides the farmer, his wife and son, there were two other grown children, a maid servant and four peasants.

Frau Kaschke sank from want of food after four days, and her husband and son began to exercise the evil spirit they said possessed her. They danced about her and struck her madly with their fists until the wretched woman fell dead on the floor, covered with blood. The blood gave unmixed satisfaction to the eight maniacs in the room with her. When they saw it flow they sank on the floor beside her, murmuring feebly their litanies and giving thanks that the poor woman had at last been accepted, "for without shedding of blood there can be no remission of sins."

In this state of religious ecstasy they were found by the village authorities, who broke open the doors and carried them off, shrieking and wailing, to the village lockup. Here they were handcuffed and chained and marched by six armed gendarmes to the lunatic asylum.

In the village of Sinan-Tekiya, in Bosnia, a singular oriental sect, an offshoot of the Greek church, has monastery. For years the greatest mystery was observed by the 20 monks who lived there with regard to their ritual and religious observances, but the government has at last insisted upon knowing all, with the result that the monks at Sinan-Tekiya have been revealed as the members of a set of maniacs closely resembling the Mahometan dancing dervishes.

Twice every week they have a solemn service. The monks sit on the floor in the half light of the evening under the dome of the great hall of the monastery. The abbot, in a long black "caftan," stands in the midst and recites prayers. One after the other the monks rise from their places and begin to sway their heads backward and forward like a pendulum, emitting with every motion forward a deep groan.

In unison they then begin to sing the creed, at first slowly, but gradually increasing the time until it is a wild gabble, accompanied by furious bendings backward and forward, forward until the tips of the fingers touch the ground. Drops of sweat begin to appear on their foreheads, and as the intensity of their emotion increases, they begin to turn round, at first slowly, but rapidly increasing in quickness until giddiness sets in, and, pale and sick, they fall to the ground one after the other.

More Wealth Than Sense.

A coy maiden of 72, with more wealth than sense, resided in Johnsville, N. Y., advertised for a matrimonial partner, and began a correspondence with a man of 45 in Omaha. They agreed to be married, and she went to his home with the expectation of wedding him there. He insisted that before the ceremony she should transfer most of her property to him. She refused, and returned to her home a disappointed old lady.

HOLE THROUGH HEAD

Story of a Man Who Survived a Terrible Injury.

Friends and Doctors Expected Him to Die, But He Lived in Spite of Them and Attained an Age of 72 Years.

There lately died in Arizona a man of old age, who has been the cause of the greatest excitement of not only the medical fraternity, but also of all who had ever seen him, as he was a man who literally had daylight let through him, and lived—yes, lived longer than the allotted span of life after an accident that any surgeon in the world would have pronounced immediately fatal.

The history of this case, says the Los Angeles Herald, is most wonderful and interesting. Fifty-one years ago, in 1850, Dr. Henry J. Bigelow, of Boston, Mass., was called up hastily to see a quarryman who had "been killed, but was still breathing," as the messenger described the case.

Dr. Bigelow found that the patient, a young quarryman about 20 years of age, had been tamping the powder in a hole, preparatory to a blast, when a premature explosion had taken place, ejecting the crowbar used for the tamping to a great height. On its descent it struck the patient on the frontal bone, penetrating the skull, passed downward through the brain, and came out of the head at the angle of the lower jaw.

When the doctor saw the man he was lying in the bottom of a rough, springless wagon, such as is usually used for hauling stones from the quarries. He was stretched out on a piece of canvas, under which had been placed some old coats of his fellow-workmen, and in this manner he had been transported over a rough quarry road for nearly 12 miles. On arriving at the man's house it was discovered that, apparently, he was still breathing, so they had called in Dr. Bigelow to decide whether the man was dead or alive. Upon examination the doctor found that he was still alive, but the brain tissues was issuing from the skull where the crowbar had passed through the head. This tool, all besmeared with clots of brain and blood, was lying by the man. It was an inch and a half in diameter and weighed 13½ pounds.

Under the circumstances the doctor decided that the man's wounds were fatal, and that recovery was an impossibility. So the man was taken into the house and laid out, after receiving a hasty bath by the sympathetic neighbors of the family.

Again the next morning the doctor was requested to come and see the man, as he was still breathing. He did so, and at the request of the family made a superficial dressing of the wounds, expecting that, at most, the man's life was possible only for a few hours.

On the following day, as he found life still present, he prescribed a liquid food by rectal injection, which course was continued for about two weeks. After 15 days of a semi-comatose condition the man was completely conscious. He rapidly recovered strength, and, with the exception of losing the sight of his left eye, seemed none the worse for his terrible accident. Finally he drifted westward, where he died 31 years afterwards at the ripe age of 72 years.

Ants Protect Their Own.

Lord Avebury declares that ants that quaintain their sobriety make a great distinction in their treatment of the intoxicated stranger and the fellow-citizen who has succumbed to his blandishments. He inebriated 50 ants, 25 from one nest and 25 from another, and put them all into the nest from which one lot had been taken. The inhabitants at once took the helpless strangers and threw them into the waters, while those who were citizens of the nest were carried tenderly away into remote corners to recover from their festivity at leisure.

BEAUTIFUL WASHINGTON TO BE MADE MORE BEAUTIFUL

What the Senate Commission Proposes to Do for Our National Capital.

WASHINGTON as first planned was a capital worthy of a great nation, and it has grown in splendor until at the present time it is the more beautiful Washington, the plans outlined by the special commission appointed by the senate committee of the District of Columbia, if carried out, will place it in the superlative degree in comparison with the capitals of other nations of the world. The plans are so complete and extensive and elaborate that no one has yet been able to estimate the cost of fully working them out, and years will be required before the still more beautiful Washington can be reared after the plans, models and maps now on exhibition in the Corcoran art gallery. The commission, which has just made its preliminary report to congress is composed of Daniel H. Burnham, of Chicago; Charles F. McKim and Augustus St. Gaudens, of New York, and Frederick Law Olmsted, landscape artist, with Charles Moore as secretary.

A threefold purpose has controlled this commission in its work, namely, to combine convenience and comfort with that of beauty, not sacrificing an essential need in one direction that another might be unduly elaborated upon. The true harmony of reciprocal unity has been the end sought after. For instance, when the city of Washington was planned under the direct and minute supervision of both Washington and Jefferson, the relations which should subsist between the capitol and the executive mansion and also the other public buildings was carefully studied and worked out. The commission has no desire to depart from this idea, but seeks as far as possible to follow the original plans as to public buildings and grounds. Thus, with due regard for convenience and utility, the comfort of government officials and employes, statesmen and diplomats, residents and visitors has next been considered in working out the details of beautifying the nation's capital.

The plans of the commission would make Washington a veritable garden space, the stately magnificence of the public buildings being accentuated by the parks and drives and avenues of shaded green lying between, the glittering dome of the magnificent capitol building having its beauty and glory enhanced and subdued by the green and color of nature about it, and the white spire of Washington's monument piercing the clouds and silently pointing upward while at its base are flowers and beauty in spread out in rich profusion. And beyond this the plans contemplate a boulevard to Mount Vernon, a memorial bridge to Arlington, the construction of a speedway, park, or parkway to the end of the Potomac drive, a parkway from the soldiers' home to the Anacostia river, 1,200 small parks in the suburbs, the erection of hundreds of fountains, public baths and skating rinks, the improvement of the mall, as already outlined, and construction of a terrace 1,000 feet wide, a water park on the Anacostia river, a new building for the post office department, a new building for the department of justice an armory for the District militia, a union railway station, a hall of records, the reclamation of the Anacostia flats and a permanent park commission to control all city parks.

The location of public buildings has been given most careful attention, and in general terms the conclusions of the commission are: (1) Only public buildings should face the grounds of the capitol. (2) Executive department buildings may well be located so as to face Lafayette square. (3) Buildings of a semipublic character may be located south of the present Corcoran art gallery, fronting on the White Lot and extending to the park limits. (4) The northern side of the mall may properly be used by museum and other buildings containing collections in which the public generally is interested, but no office buildings. (5) The space between Pennsylvania avenue and the mall should be occupied by the District building, the hall of records, a modern market, an armory for the District militia and structures of like character.

It is a little singular that up to the present time practically no effort has been made to develop the abundant facilities of Washington which nature affords for healthful and pleasant recreation during the heated term, which extends over about four and one-half months of the year, from the middle of May to the first of October. During this period of oppressive heat all public business is conducted at an undue expenditure of physical force. Every second year congress is in session usually until the middle of July, and not infrequently it happens that by prolonged or special sessions during the hottest portions of the summer the city is filled with the already great and increasing numbers of persons whose business makes necessary a more or less prolonged stay in Washington. With the knowledge of these facts before the commission, and realizing that nothing could be done to change weather conditions, it has planned to mitigate as far as possible the effects of the summer's heat and provide shade and retreats and delightful avenues of recreation which make summer resorts so popular.

As has been intimated above, no estimate of the cost of the working out of these elaborate plans has been attempted, and on this point the preliminary report of the commission says in conclusion: "Obviously it is impossible to make any detailed estimate of the cost of carrying out the plans submitted. Nor is such an estimate necessary. From time to time new public buildings must be constructed, public spaces must be secured and improved and those facilities which city life demands must be supplied. So fast as those needs shall be realized let the work be done in accordance with plans that are at once comprehensive, simple, adequate and dignified. In such manner only can there be a development of the District of Columbia worthy of the nation."

If by enactment and indorsement of congress the plans as outlined become the settled purpose of the nation, the generations to come will see the grandest and most beautiful national capital in the world, and will read with amused interest how Washington faced the most bitter opposition when he selected the present site of Washington in 1790 and prevailed upon congress to pass the necessary legislation to fix the nation's capital there. And later on, on two occasions, before the government was moved to Washington in May of 1800, it was by merest luck, once by only two votes, that such legislation was not enacted as would have kept the capital at Philadelphia or removed it to some already settled city.

When Washington had been settled upon as the future capital of the nation, Maj. l'Enfant began immediately the laying out of the streets from his very elaborate plans that so many then pronounced visionary and extravagant, but which have since proved so magnificent and complete, for it is along the lines of Maj. l'Enfant's original plans that the further beautifying of Washington is now being carried out. Die in Nightmares.

One of the latest beliefs of the medical profession is that many people die each year, while asleep, from heart disease that is brought on by frightful nightmares and dreams. A specialist on the heart said recently that in his opinion in nine cases out of ten of deaths in bed heart action was stopped by fear which injurious dreams brought on.

"I have examined hearts in thousands of autopsies," said this expert, "and in many cases made a study of the habits of those who died. I found that the majority had been sufferers from nightmares or other nocturnal disturbances of the mind and that frequently they woke up in the middle of the night completely exhausted and gravely alarmed through some particularly vivid dream. If people are frightened to death while awake, when they have their full mental senses and hope for relief, why is it not doubly likely that they die from fright while asleep, when their courage is dwarfed by faculties temporarily affected?—N. MOSQUITO LEGISLATION.

This idea of legislating the mosquito out of the State has furnished the newspapers all over the country with endless opportunity to poke fun at New Jersey and its "national bird." As a matter of fact, however, it is a perfectly serious proposition and one which is meeting with general favor among the members of the Legislature.

Of course, all the legislation in the world cannot drive out the mosquitos as long as their breeding places remain. It is the idea of State Entomologist Smith to move along preventive lines rather than attempt to effect a cure. He believes that ultimately the little insect can be made comparatively scarce.

The bill now before the Legislature aims to provide him with $10,000 for pursuing his experiments and investigations along those lines. The bill has been reported favorably and there is every reason to believe that it will be passed by both houses before the session is over. The legislators realize that the mosquito is a very important factor in certain parts of Jersey in that his destruction will be any asset to values to the interests of localities. Professor Smith can discover a means to accomplish the desired end, then the State should not hesitate a minute in giving him all the aid possible. In view, too, of the successful experiments heretofore, the Legislature is perfectly justified in aiding him in enlarging the scope of his work.

REPORT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

All interested in the school system of Plainfield will read with keen interest the annual report of the Board of Education for the year ending June 30, 1901. The very complete report of the superintendent, Henry M. Maxson, is full of suggestions and interesting comparisons.

The increase in attendance year after year, indicating the need of a new ten-room building every three or four years, tells its story of corresponding increase in the population of the city. Indeed the growth of the city is closely allied to the system of our schools for we are told "parents have come to enter pupils in the school with the remark that they have moved into the city with the special purpose of sending their children to the High School."

In the grades below the High School the change in the course of study tending to broaden and strengthen the course in English by oral and written practice cannot but recommend itself to the mind of the thoughtful who must place in prime importance the ability to speak and write good English.

The attention to physical training, the medical supervision, the beautifying of school rooms and the harmony between parents and teachers engendered by meetings for mutual helpfulness are all suggestive of earnest thought and judicious oversight.

On the question of teachers' salaries we regret to learn that this year nearly one-fifth of the teachers have resigned, many of them to accept better salaries elsewhere. The past history of the school, from which the present prosperity is an outgrowth, shows that the head of the school system received a larger salary twenty-five years ago than is given at the present time, while the grade teachers have received only an increase of eight per cent. in twenty-five years.

REAPPOINT HIM.

Among the many appointments which Governor Franklin Murphy will make at the present session of the State Legislature is that of a State superintendent of schools to succeed Charles J. Baxter, of this city. The Governor cannot do better than to name the present incumbent for another term as the chief officer of the school system of New Jersey.

When Mr. Baxter was first appointed to the office, he was comparatively unknown in the State. He was not chosen at that time because he was the great friend of any particular politician or faction or because he was an eloquent speaker. A hard, practical worker was what was wanted and that is just what Mr. Baxter has been. He has served the State well and without prejudice and has done much to bring the State school system to its present efficiency.

When Mr. Baxter assumed his position as State superintendent of schools, he introduced practical business methods into the workings of that department. The "wire pulling" ceased. The politicians cut no figure in his eyes. He simply went about in a business-like way to build up the school system. He carefully examined the methods in vogue in other States and, where he found them successful, introduced them in his department. He made no attempt to introduce a host of innovations and tried no experiments but looked after the State's affairs as if they were of a well conducted firm.

While Mr. Baxter's regime may not have pleased all the party leaders through the State, his enemies can not point out any serious mistake that he has made since his connection with the office. He has accomplished a great deal in the cause of education. Men like Mr. Baxter are the kind that New Jersey wants in control of her affairs and Governor Murphy cannot make no better selection for the place than to send in the name of Charles J. Baxter for another term as State superintendent of schools.

GREATER PLAINFIELD.

With steady persistency, which bears telling evidence of the deep-seated feeling in its favor, the much discussed question of Greater Plainfield again comes to the fore. This time an important step forward is to be taken. The question is to be brought before the members of the State Legislature in an endeavor to secure from them the necessary authority to make the city of Plainfield and the borough of North Plainfield one municipality.

It is proposed to ask for the passage of two bills. One provides for the changing of the county line so that the borough of North Plainfield shall become part of Union county. The other makes the two municipalities one under the title of the city of Plainfield. There is nothing new in this idea. It has been discussed many times and the arguments pro and con carefully enumerated. It has never been brought before the Legislature however, and this will serve to see just how strong a support it can develop.

Even the most enthusiastic of the supporters of the measure admit that it may not be possible to get it through the Senate and Assembly this winter. They are going to make the attempt, however, and believe that they will have the support of a majority of the people of both city and borough.

The day is coming sometime when there will be but one municipal government in control of that which is now divided into city and borough. Such is sure to be the natural sequence of events. Every day the movement is gathering strength. It is the only reasonable and rational thing to do. The only question is how to do it. The present plans seems feasible.

THE SNOW STORM.

The opening months of the year 1902 will long be remembered on account of the series of severe snow storms which have swept through the eastern States delaying travel on the railroads and, in many cases, compelling a complete suspension of business. Plainfield and the rest of central Jersey has not been exempt. A storm of unusual severity, possessing nearly all the requirements of a first class blizzard, has just swept over this section.

Since the first flakes began to fall just before midnight Sunday night, considerably more than a foot of snow has fallen. Where the wind has had full sweep, it is heaped into formidable drifts. The trolley system suffered the most from the storm, being completely paralyzed. The railroads had their troubles while local business was seriously affected. Today, the city is gradually recovering from the unexpected visit and preparing to enjoy the first big snow storm of the season.

Despite the fact that storms of the nature of this one are the exception rather than the rule, the city street department handled it with great promptitude. Not a minute was lost and the work done under the supervision of Street Commissioner Garrett had much to do with keeping the snow blockade from being general throughout the city. A lack of men to assist in the work handicapped Mr. Garrett's efforts to some extent but did not prevent his department from accomplishing much.

It will require some time for the city to complete its work. There are many vacant properties, the sidewalks to which will have to be cleared off. As the snowfall is heavy, that cannot be done in a moment. Then gutters must be cleaned out. When all this snow begins to melt there must be a free path for it. Considering the circumstances, excellent progress has been made but people will have to wade through the snow for several days yet.

Fair Netted $400.

As a result of the fair held recently under the auspices of Minatonomo and Wetumpkah Tribes, Improved Order Red Men, and Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas, each organization will receive as profit the proportionate share of $400, which was the net profit. It is proposed by the committee to give a reception soon to those who assisted at the fair.

School of Methods.

The Union County W. C. T. U. will hold a school of methods at Rahway Tuesday, May 6. Several Plainfielders will take part in the programme.

LITERARY.

Mr. Marconi has written for the March Century a prefatory note authenticating an article on his work to appear in that number from the pen of P. T. McGrath, editor of the Evening Herald, St. John's, Newfoundland, prepared from frequent interviews with Mr. Marconi during the inventor's three weeks' stay in that city. The same number will contain the first full account by Dr. Albert P. Mathews, of the Chicago University, of his recently announced discoveries in "The Nature of Nerve Force." The Century announces that it will publish during the present year a number of other curious and important articles in the field of popular science.

EMPLOYES OWN STOCK.

Lyman Cronk & Son is Converted into Stock Company Known as Cronk Manufacturing Co.

The firm of Lyman Cronk & Son, box manufacturers, of New Brunswick, who have a branch in this city, has been converted into a stock company, with a great deal of the stock held by the employes of the company. This is in line with the views of the firm that the relation between capital and labor should be close.

The new concern will be known as the Cronk Manufacturing Company. It begins business with a capital stock of $34,000, of which the senior member holds $24,000: Hubert Cronk, a former member of the firm, $8,000, and the balance is held by employes, among whom is John Lloyd, of this city, who holds $200 worth of stock. The co-operative idea will be developed as far as possible.

SPRING ELECTIONS.

County Republicans Appoint Committee to Canvass Union County as to Their Abolishment.

The Union County Republican committee met last week at Elizabeth and, in view of the fact that the county was short one representative on the Congressional committee of the Fifth Congressional district, it was unanimously decided to appoint Charles J. Fisk to membership of that committee.

A discussion was had as to the feeling among the voters in the boroughs and townships in reference to abolishing spring elections. A committee of three, consisting of Ellis A. Meeker, of Elizabeth, W. T. Kirk, of Plainfield, and Dr. Westcott, of Fanwood, was appointed to canvass the county and report the result to the representatives of Union county in the State Legislature.

Bleachers Will Surely be Built at Hope Chapel Baseball Field.

The members of the Y. M. For the latter it is intended to build bleachers, protected from the sun, and if the patronage is encouraging, a grand stand will be erected next year. There has also been talk of having enclosed grounds in the near future, but this improvement will also depend upon the season's receipts.

THEATRICAL.

The advancing theatrical season brings a continuation of remarkable prosperity to the Proctor theatres in New York city, Newark, Albany and Montreal.

Proctor's Newark, which opened with a boom, has continued to play to tremendous business. The best attractions known to vaudeville are presented, with a complete change of bill weekly. The daily matinees are patronized by women and children almost exclusively, and the night houses are invariably limited only by the capacity of the house. Popular prices for the best grade of entertainment is making Proctor's the most prosperous theatre in Newark.

Proctor's four theatres in New York City are enjoying a remarkably successful season. The continuous vaudeville presented at the Twenty-third Street is of the best available, and large business rules at all times. The Proctor Stock Company is the chief attraction at the Fifth Avenue, Fifty-eighth and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, presentations of the best comedies being the rule. Vaudeville is interlarded between acts, and the combination of the drama with variety is still a decidedly popular form of amusement.

The Proctor Stock Company is presenting many celebrated plays, along with revivals of old comedies. The plays of the late Charles H. Hoyt are now in hand and the full repertoire will be presented. Clay M. Greene has been secured to write travesties on current dramatic successes, and will devote himself exclusively to the service of Manager Proctor for the remainder of the season. A special branch of the Proctor Stock will present these travesties and the innovation will be made a feature in the Proctor entertainments.

IN HIS PLACE.

Rev. C. E. Herring Preached on Need of Putting One's Self in Another's Place.

"Put Yourself in His Place" was the subject of the discourse given last Sunday night at the First Presbyterian church by the pastor, Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor. The text from which the pastor spoke was "Let not a man consider his own things, but also the things of others." The trend of the discourse was that Jesus Christ came to earth and put himself in the place of others, thus making redemption possible.

The speaker thought that it was the duty of a person to help his or her neighbor and to put himself in their place. He believed that during the coming century Christianity would mean more to everyone and it would even be a greater power unto salvation. He deplored a selfish spirit, one which would allow a neighbor or friend to suffer while there was plenty.

Mr. Herring spoke of sacrifice in its different forms, and said that in these times it was not necessary for one to cut off their arm to atone for a wrong act, yet the brave soldier who goes to war and loses an arm is sacrificing a great deal for his country. In conclusion the speaker urged all to have more charity for others and this he considered only possible by putting one's self in the place of another and not judging too harshly.

FELL FROM SCAFFOLD

Charles Thompson Fractured His Ankle in Fall at Otterson's New House.

Charles Thompson, of East Third street, is detained at home with a fractured ankle the result of a fall from a scaffold Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Thompson, who is employed by Contractor Charles M. Wilcox, was working on Mr. Otterson's house on Evergreen avenue. At the time he was shingling on a scaffold thirty feet from the ground. In trying to reach a higher point, he made use of a box. The box slipped and precipitated him to the ground.

A telephone call was given for the ambulance and Mr. Thompson was removed to his home where medical aid was summoned. The injured man will be a kept at home some time.

BASEBALL SCHEDULE AT THE HIGH SCHOOL

Manager Nomer Has Announced the Games for the Coming Season.

MUCH INTEREST SHOWN

SOME TALK ABOUT HAVING INDOOR BATTERY PRACTICE.

Some Strong Teams Are Scheduled to Meet the Plainfield High School Nine During the Spring Months.

Already is the management of the baseball nine of the Plainfield High School astir. While it is too early to think of practicing outdoors yet, Manager Harold Nomer has booked a number of games for the coming season. His schedule has been so nearly completed that he was able to announce Friday afternoon the result of his labors.

While some additional games will undoubtedly be arranged later, the schedule at present is as follows:

April 2—Orange High School, at Plainfield.

April 9—Pingry School, at Elizabeth.

April 16—Newark Academy, at Plainfield.

April 26—Westerleigh Collegiate Institute, at Plainfield.

April 30—Hope chapel, on Hope grounds.

May 2—Hasbrouck Institute, at Plainfield.

May 7—N. P. H. S., on P. H. S. field.

May 10—Westerleigh Collegiate Institute, at West New Brighton.

May 14—Rutgers Preparatory School, at New Brunswick.

May 17—N. P. H. S., on N. P. H. S. field.

May 21—Hope chapel, on P. H. S. field.

May 30 — Rutgers Preparatory School, at Plainfield.

June 7 — Port Richmond High School, at Plainfield.

With such a hustling management at work, the players have been greatly encouraged over the prospects for the coming spring. There is a nucleus of four of the old team to start with and plenty of good material from which to pick the remainder of the nine. A number of the boys are members of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium and are keeping in good physical condition so as to be ready to take the first opportunity at outdoor practice. There has been some talk of securing some place indoors for battery practice but nothing definite has been done in that direction.

LAD KILLED BY WAGON WHEEL

Eight-Year-Old Edward P. Thul Met Death in Accident on Park Avenue.

PUSHED INTO WHEEL

So Said Boy on His Death Bed—Wheel Carried Him Around and Crushed Him Between Brake Rod and Tire—His Parents Reached Him Before Death.

Edward Perter Thul, the eight-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Thul, of Rahway road, died Friday night at 11 o'clock at Muhlenberg Hospital, the result of injuries received Friday afternoon, when he became entangled in the wheel of a coal wagon on Park avenue about which he was playing.

The circumstances surrounding the whole affair are of the saddest. Young Thul, who attends St. Mary's Parochial school, was on his way home in company with several boys. They were on Park avenue in the vicinity of Eighth street, when a coal wagon came along. Boy like, the lads ran alongside of the wagon and attempted to catch on.

From the story told by young Thul shortly before he died it is the belief that some of the boys gave young Thul a shove toward the wagon and that his shoulder was caught between the spokes of the rear wheel. The next instant he was revolving with the wheel. His piercing shrieks attracted the attention of the driver, who immediately stopped his wagon. Frank Russell, of New York, who happened to be near, rescued the boy by taking his body from between the brake and wheels where it was pinioned. It was noticed at once that the boy was seriously injured. Blood was flowing from his nose and mouth.

Word was sent to Dr. Endicott's office. The doctor was not home, but Miss Margaret Cramer, the office nurse, gave instructions to have the boy brought to the office. This was done immediately.

When young Thul was brought to the office Miss Cramer did not believe that he would live long. She administered the proper treatment in such cases and soon there was a response to the medicine. The pulse became stronger and the boy was comfortable. In the meantime, Dr. Boone was sent for, he being the physician nearest at hand. He arrived soon afterward and the injured boy was taken to the hospital.

Not once from the time the boy was injured until he died did he lose consciousness. On the way to the hospital he cautioned the physician and the nurse about losing his school books. When told they were all right he was not satisfied and wanted to see them.

At the hospital, an examination disclosed the fact that there was a fractured arm, between the shoulder and elbow, the collar bone was fractured and the body from head to foot was covered with bruises, all more or less serious. It was believed that the fractured collar bone had punctured the lung thus causing the hemorrhages. About the lad's head and back there were many bruises. Dr. J. H. Probasco was also called and he assisted Dr. Boone in the treatment of the boy.

When the lad did not return home from school at the usual time, his mother became worried and she started out to meet him. When near the top of what is known as Short Hills she met a man on a bicycle, who informed her that her boy had been injured. There happened to be a grocery wagon coming to town and the driver brought her to Dr. Endicott's office. There she learned that her son had been taken to the hospital. Before going to the hospital she went to Scott's Press Works to inform her husband, who is employed there. The parents then went to the hospital and soon learned that their son's injuries were fatal. They remained with him until he died.

The parents questioned the boy as to the accident and he told them that several boys, oldest than himself, had pushed him into the wagon. He said that he did not know the boys with him. The parents are grief-stricken over the sad affair. The lad was next to the oldest of six children.

It is considered particularly fortunate that Miss Cramer, the nurse, was nearby, for it is believed that through her efforts the boy's life was prolonged, making it possible for his parents to see him before he died.

The remains were taken to the home of the parents last night and the funeral services will be held Tuesday morning next from St. Mary's church.

The police were not informed of the accident until next morning and it was only then that the owner of the wagon and the identity of the driver was learned. The latter was Charles Bicknell, of Lake street, employed L. A. Rheamme.

He was questioned at police headquarters and declared he knew nothing of the accident until he heard some one shout a boy was beneath his wagon. He leaped to the ground and found young Thul pinned between the wagon body and a rear wheel. Wrapping him in a blanket he took him to Dr. Endicott's home and on the advice of the nurse there, saw that he was removed to Muhlenberg hospital. He was informed by Frank Russell, of Crescent avenue, who was a witness, he said, that the boy was riding on the rear of the wagon and in attempting to jump off, slipped between the spokes. He was not on the ground and there was no one near him, according to Mr. Russell's statement.

Bicknell's version of the affair was accepted and he was not held.

PREACHED ON PESSIMISM

PHILOSOPHICAL SERMON BY REV. A. C. NICKERSON.

Traced Pessimism to Its Very Beginnings—Condemned Many Sorts of Pessimism.

A philosophical sermon, the subject being "Pessimism," was delivered by Rev. A. C. Nickerson, pastor of All Souls' Unitarian church, Sunday morning. The clergyman took his theme from Psalms iv, 6: "Who will show us any good?" In condemning many sorts of pessimism, he took occasion to point out a pessimism that is honest.

In tracing pessimism to its very beginnings, he referred to the ancient theology that called all personal suspicion, horror of one's self and fear of eternal consequences, meritorious. The old Puritans, said he, exploited fears and deepened shadows, and although all know the blackness of sin and the depth of sorrow, one cannot see that that sort of pessimism helped the world. Schobenhauer, a modern pessimist, taught that this is the worst possible world and to get out of it as soon as may be is man's purest blessing. This doctrine, said he, may be traced back to Buddism, which teaches that no desire is of any essential worth.

Nitzsche, the German philosopher, teaches the supreme right of force and genius, and the youth of that country are said to be embracing this theory.

Bismarck is the man they applaud in this connection. Continuing, he said, "Honest pessimism, possibly justifiable, not despondency, not disinclination to effort, not cynicism of the selfish philosophy, not the outcome of a dark philosophy, or the wail of a blase soul, is honest fear of suffering, when men are discouraged about life."

Father McGlynn said of poverty that it is a curse. Permissible pessimism is justifiable fear; a social rather than a selfish instinct which wills and works for the better day. Its accentuation by Christianity could hardly be better illustrated than it is on many a white stone throughout Christendom by the words: "I shall arise again!"

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Cuming Celebrated Thirtieth Anniversary.

An event attended with many pleasant features was the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Cuming, of 1012 Putnam avenue, Thursday evening. The affair was in the nature of a surprise, arranged by the seven children of the celebrants, all of whom were present.

A number of relatives and intimate friends from Brooklyn and Plainfield met by pre-arrangement at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Cuming, nearby. They then proceeded to the home of the celebrants, where all partook of the wedding anniversary supper, which had been prepared. Letters of congratulation were also received from friends in distant parts, who could not be present.

LOST VALUABLE BIRDS.

Thief Has Been at Work at Pigeon Cote of Bertram Glaentzer.

Two nocturnal visits by an unknown depredator to the pigeon cote of Bertram Glaentzer, of New street, have depleted it of a lot of fine birds. Fourteen in all have been taken, all of which were valuable specimens. A number of them had become very tame and their loss is greatly felt by the young owner. The matter has been reported to the police and an investigation has been commenced.

Intend Removing From Plainfield.

E. E. Anthony, of West Front street, has received positive orders from his physician to take a year's rest from his business, and Mr. Anthony and his family will leave Plainfield early this spring and probably go on a farm in New York State, in the vicinity of Fishkill, if possible.

HINTS IN THE ART OF BUILDING A HOME

Fifth Exhibit at the Public Library Was Held Saturday and Sunday Afternoons.

EXPERTS IN CHARGE.

MANY VALUABLE WORKS ON THE SUBJECT DISPLAYED AND EXPLAINED.

Interior Decorations Were Illustrated by Pictures and Reproductions—Those Who Assisted in Explaining the Exhibits.

Practical and beneficial hints in the art of building a home and beautifying the interior afterward formed the basis of the Public Library's fifth exhibit, held Saturday afternoon and evening and Sunday afternoon.

The value of the exhibit was greatly enhanced by the attendance of specialists thoroughly conversant with the subjects. These were in reality, "Domestic Architecture and House Decorations and Furnishings." The former was in charge of Architect Edward V. French, of this city, and Evarts Tracy, of New York. They referred the visitors to the best works on various branches of the subject and then by their thorough practical knowledge of the drawings and designs imparted ideas which greatly assisted in comprehending the author's ideas.

Most of the books shown in this department belong to the Babcock Scientific library and are not always accessible to the public, by reason of their great value. Some of the authors are Viollet-le-Duc, the great French architect, H. H. Stratham, William Fergusson, Reginald Bloomfield, Edward S. Prior and Russell Sturgis. Mr. French strongly recommended to the visitors for valuable information, Sturgiss, "Dictionary of Architecture and Building," John Beverly Robinson's "The Principles of Architectural Composition" and Kidder's "Pocket Book of Building."

The interior decorations for homes and tapestries were illustrated mostly by pictures of exhibits at international fairs and reproductions of interiors of some of America's celebrated homes. There were numerous designs of Colonial homes and their fittings in Virginia and New England.

Olaf Sangstad assisted by Mrs. Sangstad, both experienced wood carvers, who were in charge, were enabled to direct attention to the minute detail and intricate work in old style carvings, which would otherwise have escaped notice. Many of the plates were in colors and were facsimiles of those shown at the Paris and Pan-American fairs.

The sixth exhibit will be held next month but the subject has not yet been decided upon.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

Members of W. C. T. U. Observed Miss Willard's Death.

The members of the W. C. T. U. observed the fourth anniversary of the Heavenly birthday of their late president, Miss Francis E. Willard, in the rooms on Madison avenue, Sunday afternoon. The meeting was in charge of Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, county superintendent, who spoke of the work of the organization in which Miss Willard was so much interested.

At the close of the meeting William Langer made a few remarks about an organization now being perfected in this city, the Home Educational Protective Association, which proposes to publish "The Searchlight," a temperance paper. When five hundred members are secured, an organization will be perfected.

Only Small Loss.

It is estimated that the loss as a result of the fire in the Stillman building last Saturday will not be over $150. Another paper reported one individual loss as $6,000, which is wide of the mark.

School Dramatics.

Rehearsals are being held by the pupils of Leal's School for the dramatic entertainment to be given during the fore part of April. "Jane" will be presented on this occasion. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the athletic association of the school.

Substitute in Choir.

Mrs. MacBride, the alto of the Crescent Avenue church quartette, did not sing at the church Sunday evening, being engaged in the rendition of an oratorio in New York. A substitute from New York took her place.

plant. At the foot of the mountain wells could be dug which would furnish an almost inexhaustable supply of water. The water company's supply is obtained from wells fed by a different body of water altogether. That concern would do a big business even if Plainfield and North Plainfield were cut off as customers. An independent municipal plant could be established, he thinks, at a reasonable figure, and in the end it would be a great saving to the citizens, who he thinks are charged too high a rate for water. Co-operation in such municipal improvements, the Mayor believes, would prove equally beneficial to the citizens of the borough and those of the city.

The close proximity of the city to the borough, said the Mayor, has proven detrimental to the interests of the latter in some respects. The law that postoffices must be at least a mile apart has deprived the borough of an independent office in a central locality. One could be placed at a remote part of the borough, but such a move would be more inconvenient than the present condition of affairs. There's no bank in the borough and this he says is due to the fact that the interest of the city and borough are so identical that none would be established.

Again he referred to the train service, and said that the lack of transportation facilities has been a hindrance to the borough's growth. No factory will locate there for the New Jersey Central line is too far distant. On the other hand he claimed that the want of a railroad service within the borough limits has been beneficial in one respect at least. A bad element has been eliminated from consideration since there is no railroad for them to be brought into the borough. Under the proposed system of joining interests the banks and the like would be still more identified with borough interests since they would be in Greater Plainfield.

The claim is made by the Mayor that in the event of annexation Plainfield would be benefitted by the addition of a desirable class of citizens. The lower element of foreigners is almost an unknown quantity in the borough. A large proportion of the citizens are business men, many of whom are commuters. As for the colored population, he says there are less than fifty in the limits of the borough, while Plainfield he declares has an exceptionally large percentage.

The matter of licenses has not been overlooked by the Mayor. Under the present conditions it is necessary to obtain liquor licenses from the county court at Somerville. Were annexation accomplished the privileges would be obtained from the councilmanic body of Greatre Plainfield.

Saved Him From Torture.

There is no more agonizing trouble than piles. The constant itching and burning make life intolerable. No position is comfortable. The torture is unceasing. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures piles at once. For skin diseases, cuts, burns, bruises, all kinds of wounds it is unequalled. J. S. Gerall, St. Paul, Ark., says: "From 1865 I suffered with the protruding, bleeding piles and could find nothing to help me until I used DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. A few boxes completely cured me." Beware of counterfeits. L. W. Randolph.

End Men Chosen.

City Judge William N. Runyon, who is coaching the members of the Hope chapel Y. M. A. minstrel troupe, for the performance on March 11, has announced that the end men will be Matthew Sweeney, Fred Dixon, George Cone and Thomas Muir. They will be backed in the first part by a chorus of thirty sweet-voiced singers. There will also be an olio of five numbers and a rollicking sketch.

I. P. BROWN, JR., AND H. L. OVERBAUGH HAVE REACHED AN AGREEMENT.

Damage Suit Started by Patrolman Overbaugh Discontinued—Paid $400 and Expenses.

Settlement out of court has been made in the suit for damages brought by Patrolman Herbert L. Overbaugh against Isaac F. Brown, Jr., for injuries received at the hands of the latter, Christmas morning. Brown agreed to pay the plaintiff $400 and expenses of the suit, amounting in all to about $600. The suit was for $5,000.

Overbaugh was shot by Brown as he was entering the latter's yard to learn the cause of a commotion in a beanery. The police had been previously asked by Brown to keep a close watch on his place as he had been troubled by chicken thieves. Without investigation he discharged a load of buckshot at the policeman from an upper window. His face and the upper part of his body was punctured in many places.

It was the desire of the police board and Mayor Jenkins from the start of the suit that the matter come to an amicable settlement out of court.

HEAD NOISES CEASE IMMEDIATELY.

F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, MD.

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, I write to place it on record. I had a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.

About five years ago my right ear began to ring, and Oh! how it grew worse with my hearing. It was my custom

I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without appreciable benefit of any kind. Hearing others, the most eminent ear specialists, spoken highly of, I tried only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.

I then saw your advertisement accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises left me entirely, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain

Very truly yours,

DETAILS OF GROWTH OF 'PHONE SERVICE

How Local Exchange Has Prospered in its Twenty-One Years of Existence.

NUMBER OF MESSAGES.

GREATEST GROWTH SINCE MANAGER C. W. RUNYON TOOK CHARGE.

System Extended to Westfield, New Market, Bound Brook, Somerville and South Plainfield—Trunk Wires Now in Service.

It is interesting to review the history of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company so far as its local interests are concerned. It has formed an important part of the growth of the city. As already stated the first telephone installed in this city was in the office of The Constitutionalist in 1880 by Charles W. Runyon, who is now manager for the company. One hundred telephones were installed that year. Percy C. Ohl was the manager at the time, while Charles Wann, of the borough, was an assistant.

During the following six years the plant did not grow very much. Mr. Ohl was manager for two years and was succeeded by Homer Miller, of Bound Brook, who remained here one year. The next manager was H. W. Leland, of South Framingham, Mass., who also remained one year. He was succeeded by Henry G. Root, who served for three years as manager. Charles W. Runyon then returned to Plainfield in the year, 1889, and has ever since held the position of manager.

When Manager Runyon came to Plainfield there were no telephones in Westfield, Bound Brook, Somerville, South Plainfield or New Market. There were in all 135 subscribers at that time. Today there are 700 in Plainfield, 140 in Somerville, 100 in Westfield, thirty-five in Bound Brook and there is connection with South Plainfield and New Market.

In the early days there was one trunk wire to New York by the way of Rahway and Elizabeth and there were only two operators, one day and one night. The night operator went to sleep after 10 o'clock. At present there are six direct trunk lines to Cortlandt street, New York; three to Newark, three to Elizabeth; five to New Brunswick; two to Somerville and two to Bound Brook.

Four years ago extra operators were engaged one at a time, until at present there are eight day operators. In the evening, three work until 9 o'clock, two work from 9 to 10 o'clock and one from 10 o'clock to 7 o'clock the next morning. From this city it is possible to talk to a million subscribers.

Prior to three years ago all wires were overhead, while at present two-thirds are underground with up-to-date equipment. In time all wires will be underground. Three years go a modern and up-to-date switch-board was installed, but the business has outgrown this. Within a few weeks one of the finest switch-boards in the country, if not in the world, will be installed. It is known as the multiple board.

At present 3,500 calls are received and sent through the local office every day. In 1888 there was an average of 250 a day. The new board for the local office has been received and the work of installing it commenced. It will take six men eight weeks to complete the work.

The first office of the company was at the corner of Front street and Park avenue. Manager Runyon moved it from that place to North avenue in 1891 and three years ago next spring the office was moved to its present commodious quarters on Park avenue in a building now owned by the company.

It requires eighteen people to look after the local business. There are now 400 resident telephones and 300 business instruments. The up-to-date system in this city represents twenty-one years of steady building and to Manager Charles W. Runyon a great deal of credit is due for the very excellent service given to Plainfield.

The company's representatives are now in this city writing new contracts. They will remain about ten days. The men are under the direction of Special Agent H. G. Kerr. They are at the office every day and in the evening, where anyone interested can see them.

Hundred New 'Phones.

As a result of the work being done by special contract men, there has already been received nearly one hundred new contracts for telephones in this city. The system will be extended considerably during the next few weeks, giving those who have telephones a far greater talking radius.

Miss Nellie Manning, of this city, has been visiting her friend, Miss Mae Higgins, of Bound Brook.

HE TOLD ABOUT PALESTINE

LECTURE GIVEN BY A. V. D. HONEYMAN AT WARREN CHAPEL.

Address Given Under Auspices of Endeavor Society—Some Musical Features.

A talk on "Palestine" was given by A. V. D. Honeyman in Warren chapel, Thursday night. The address was the feature of a programme rendered under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the church. Unfortunately the chilly blasts was accountable for a smaller audience than is generally seen at the chapel, but those who were there were well repaid for venturing out.

Mr. Honeyman, who is well informed on the subject of travels in foreign lands, vividly described the geographical and geological features of the Holy Land, bringing out many points of interest not merely to the Biblical pupil but to the public in general. He sketched the condition of the country as it was two centuries ago and as it is today. The sole attraction of the land is its association with Biblical scenes. He recounted the story of a journey through the Holy Land some years ago, and dwelt at some length on the places visited.

Preceding this address, a musical programme was given. Miss Etta Raybert and E. Maxwell Honeyman gave a vocal duet and Miss Carolyn Dewey rendered a couple of piano solos. Two quartette selections were contributed by Henry Baldwin Drake, E. Maxwell Honeyman, Mrs. Charlotte Ross and Miss Raybert. Each number in turn was heartily applauded.

HOUSE TOO COLD.

That Caused the Tenant to Depart and a Suit Over the Rent Followed.

A landlord and tenant case brought by J. F. Emmons, as agent for Augustus J. Brunson, against George DeWitt Herring and Foster Opdyke, practicing osteopathists, as sureties on a lease of the premises at the corner of Ninth street and Crescent avenue, was heard in Justice Nash's court, yesterday afternoon. W. S. Angleman appeared for the plaintiff, while H. C. Runyon represented the defendants.

Composing the jury were: U. B. Crane, John Manley, George R. Rockfellow, Robert Martin, James Fortell, Henry Mallinson, John Green, William Day, John Conners, Leslie Marsh, J. Garvey and Adam Seader.

The defense was that the lessor had not fulfilled the terms of the agreement in having failed to install a heater, while the plaintiff declared that this breach was due to the fact that the lessee prevented the introduction of the heater. Mrs. Culberson vacated the premises during the term of the lease. The amount of rent claimed, $55, was awarded by the jury.

Harry Templar, of Spooner avenue, has gone to Bridgeport, Conn., where he will assume a responsible position in a large factory.

THE SMALLEST MEMBERS.

Two Representatives in the House Who Are the Most Diminutive of Statesmen.

The baby member of the house is Representative Lever, of South Carolina. He is only 27 years old, and looks 20. He was private secretary of the late Representative Stokes, and when the latter died was voted by a grateful constituency into the vacant seat, states the Washington Post.

Every day at 11:45 o'clock Bert Kennedy, assistant doorkeeper, warns all persons not entitled to the floor to vacate, "the rules of the house requiring the same." For three days Kennedy saw a small boy sitting at a desk and coolly disregarding the official summons to retire. He threw his piping, penetrating voice in the direction of the lad, but without effect. On the third day Kennedy told his troubles to Amos Cummings.

"If that boy don't get out of here before 12 o'clock I'll throw him out," said Kennedy.

"What boy?" asked Cummings.

"Sitting over there," replied Kennedy, pointing in Lever's direction.

"I wouldn't throw him out," said Cummings.

"Why not?" inquired Kennedy.

"Because," remarked Cummings, "you might lose your job. He's a member of the house."

Kennedy didn't say a word, and Representative Lever remained undisturbed.

Speaking of little men, the new congressman from New York who defeated Perry Belmont could be hidden away in a gripsack.

Viewed from the gallery, Mr. Lessler seems like a blade of grass. He is certainly less than five feet high, weighs about 90 pounds, and his arms are like those worn by the boys' shoes and a boy's hat. Under his hat, however, are brains entirely out of proportion to his size. Everybody agrees that he has plenty of ability.

"Alexander Stephens was the smallest man in congress," says Mr. Lessler, "but he was also one of the greatest men. There is hope for me."

A SILK STRING CURE.

Novel Self-Treatment That Proved Effective in a Severe Case of Lumbago.

In Gen. F. C. Latrobe's varied and extensive mail during the past year there have been hundreds of letters begging him to send the writers some of his renowned silken strings for the cure of lumbago, reports the Baltimore Sun.

While Gen. Latrobe was attending the sessions of the last legislature, and was incidentally gursing a severe case of lumbago, S. W. Pattison met him in the corridor of the house and said he would simply tie a silk string about his waist next to the skin he would be cured. The general experienced an unusually severe twinge that night, and in desperation ordered his man Sterling to tie the silk string. From that time the lumbago began to depart until the next day, when it entirely disappeared. Gen. Latrobe was enabled to stay in Annapolis.

The story of his cure becoming noised abroad, it began to come in by the score, until finally, in order to find time to attend to any other business, Gen. Latrobe referred all letters to his man Robert, whom he thereupon gave the name of Dr. Wilson.

Since that time "Dr." Wilson, specialist in lumbago, has been making a tidy little income selling silk strings of the proper curative kind.

FEW ROYAL DIVORCES.

Separations Have Not Been Numerous Among the Titled During the Last Century.

A royal divorce is a very rare event; indeed, those which have taken place during the last century—even including the most famous of all, that of Emperor Napoleon I. and his unfortunate consort, Josephine — may be counted on the fingers of one hand, says the Detroit Free Press. To these must be added the divorce, on the grounds of hopeless incompatibility of temper, of two of Queen Victoria's grandchildren, namely, the grand duke and grand duchess of Hesse. The grand duke is the only surviving son of the late Princess Alice; he has several sisters, of whom the best-known are the empress of Russia and Princess Henry of Prussia, while yet a third, Princess Louise of Battenberg, has lived for many years in England. The grand duchess is the second daughter of the late duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha and she spent much of her girlhood in London. There is but one child, a daughter, and it has been arranged that she shall divide her time between the two parents, who are, of course, first cousins as well as man and wife.

Kissing Bracelets.

A piece of jewelry which the jewelers says is becoming popular with women off the stage as well as those on is the kissing bracelet. On the stage the kissing of the lady's hand has increased recently, and although the practice won't replace the good old-fashioned way seen in real life, the bracelet, according to the men who sell jewelry, will be worn extensively. The bracelet consists of a narrow, thin gold bangle or medallion.

Boy Bridegrooms in England.

Boy bridegrooms are growing in number in London. There are four under 21 in every 100 bridegrooms. About 16 girls under 21 per 100 get married.

Work by Japanese Women.

The women of Japan are now largely employed in telephone and post offices, and they are said to be excellent bookkeepers.

THEATRICAL.

William Collier returned to the Madison Square Theatre Monday night with "On the Quiet," Augustus Thomas' most enjoyable comedy, which for six months last season was the laughing success of the metropolis at this same theatre. The play seems to have been the gainer during its absence in that there have been added a number of new lines which are sparkling and the situations are, if possible, more laughable than when the comedy was originally presented. Collier himself is inimitable. In his own particular line it is doubtful if he has a superior on the stage. William Winter, the dean of the New York dramatic critics, said in The Tribune Tuesday morning: "The ludicrous complications resultant from a secret marriage between an impatient collegian and a runaway heiress were again found to be interesting and laughable, and Mr. Collier's demure and ingenuous demeanor, dry, involuntary humor were again observed as excellent qualifications of an eccentric comedian. Much of the art of Mr. Collier consists in his faculty for sustaining impermeable gravity under circumstances most ludicrous, and Mr. Thomas provided him with a play in which this faculty can be employed to advantage." The mission of "On the Quiet" is simply to promote healthy laughter and this, in the hands of Mr. Collier, it accomplishes to perfection. There isn't a dull moment from the first curtain until the last one. "On the Quiet" and William Collier will remain at the Madison Square theatre for many weeks to come.

Washington's Birthday will end another gala week at the Proctor theaters in New York and Newark. The holiday will be observed with the usual early openings and continuous performances at all houses. Proctor's, Newark, continues to be genuinely popular and unquestionably prosperous. The Russell Brothers will be the leaders in presentations of a timely skit by George N. Cohan, entitled "A Romance of New Jersey." Joseph Maxwell & Co. will offer a musical sketch, depicting the life of a New York fireman, appealing to local "fire laddies" with equal force.

Clay M. Greene has written another travesty and it is said to be the wittiest which has come from his pen. This time he lampoons "A Gentleman of France" and the Proctor Stock Company will present it at the Fifth Avenue under the title of "The Gentle Mr. Bellew of France." "A Midnight Bell," one of Charles H. Hoyt's most popular plays, will also be presented at the Fifth Avenue by the Stock Company. Another Hoyt play, "A Trip to Chinatown," will be presented by the Proctor Stock Company at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street.

The Fifty-eighth Street will return to straight vaudeville for one week only and Manager Proctor will make it an event of the season for Miss Sidney Deane Nowe, the famous lady baritone, heads Manager Proctor's continuous vaudeville programme at the Twenty-third Street. She has an entirely new song reportoire and will present her act with costume changes and special scenic and lighting effects. The Smedley Sketch Club will offer a pathetic little play as a second feature and George Evans, the "Honey Boy," in his black-face singing and talking specialty will be another leading number. The Proctor Stock Co. will present one of Clay M. Greene's travesties as an extra feature.

Next week's programme at Keith's Theatre, New York, announces some of the most prominent stars of America and Europe, the place of honor being given to the popular sketch artists, Charles J. Grapewin and Anna Chance. This versatile pair of comedians have presented some of the greatest successes of vaudeville, and have firmly established themselves in the good graces of the Keith audience. Their present offering is called "The Awakening of Pipp," and in this petite comedy they have attained one of the most pronounced hits of their career. The great Rudinoff has been retained for another week to offer his European novelties which have delighted the elite tastes of two continents. The same style of merit has been accorded Mlle. Marcella's troupe of trained birds. These pretty little creatures have pleased the adults and sent the children into paroxysms of delight. Duke and Harris; the five Nosses; and the jolly minstrel, Carroll Johnson, with a score of other stars, constitute Keith's brilliant programme.

Next Star Course Entertainment.

Commander Wadhams, of the U. S. Navy, will give his lecture entitled "Yarns About Jack and Others" in the Y. M. C. A. Star Course, Saturday evening, Feb. 21. Fred F. and Wm. P. VanEps will render banjo and mandolin solos.

Going to Make Ice Again.

In a short time the Plainfield Hygeia Ice Company will once begin the manufacture of ice. The plant has been shut down for a few weeks, there being a sufficient quantity of ice on hand for the present.

RULE WORKS ONE WAY.

The Valuation Clause in Express Shipping Provisions Is in Favor of the Company.

"What is the value?" asked an express agent in a Broadway office of a keen-eyed, sharp-nosed customer who had handed him a package to be sent to a western city. The man addressed did not answer at once, says the New York Herald, but glanced at a printed card on the wall that read: "Always state the value of your shipment."

"If I state the value will your company pay me that amount in case the package is lost?" asked the man in his turn.

"Certainly not, unless that is proved to be its value," answered the agent.

"If I state the value, can I prove a greater value if it is lost?"

"You will have to ask a lawyer that question," replied the agent.

"That isn't necessary, for I happen to know the law," said the shipper. "Your company is trying to establish an unfair rule, because it works only one way. You are right when you say that my statement cannot bind you, for in case of loss you can prove the value; but my statement would bind me, for the court would say I was 'estopped' by my declaration as to the value.

"If a shipper should undervalue his shipment, thinking that thereby he would reduce the charges, he would have to stand by his statement, and your notice is calculated to make him do that very thing. You can mark my shipment 'No value stated,' and then if we meet in the courts it will be on an equal footing."

APT IN OPTICAL WORK.

Women Are Said to Have a Peculiar Faculty for Conserving the Eyesight.

One of the professions that seem admirably suited to women is that of the optician, and many have entered that field of endeavor and are winning success purely on the ground of merit. Not only are these women proving their worth and ability for the work, but they are making it remunerative as well. In these days when even babies are put into glasses and when each successive generation finds eye troubles more prevalent, it is plain to be seen that the demand for good opticians as well as oculists must continually increase.

Professors of optics frequently prefer women as assistants because of their accuracy and discrimination, things which are absolutely essential in the measurement and fitting of spectacle frames and the fitting of glasses to the eye. To become an expert optician it is necessary to have some knowledge of physiology, anatomy and chemistry.

Many of the various schools for instruction in optical science now admit women on equal terms with men. Professors and teachers are coming to regard women opticians with favor, finding that in nearly every case they are careful and conscientious. And surely if ever a profession called for conscientious handling it is that which treats so delicate and sensative an organ as the eye.

THE CALENDAR CUSTOM.

Giving of Them as Holiday Gifts, an Ancient Custom That Is Growing in Popularity.

The custom of giving calendars at the holiday season seems to be rapidly extending, says the Philadelphia Telegraph, and the gifts are made each year more ornate and expensive. Although thus becoming known to an ever-widening circle of givers and receivers the custom is by no means a new one. It was known in the Greek and the Romans as early as the second century of our era, the primitive almanacs made by the scribes of Alexandria being offered, with other costly gifts, to rulers and great personages. Julius Caesar, one of the chief of pontifex was to issue an almanac or calendar, called the Kalendarium Novum, at Buda, in Hungary, in the year 1475. It was a costly publication, ten crowns, gold, being paid for a single copy, which served as a gift to the fortunate. The almanac displaced the calendar after the invention of printing, but the monthly record of days as we now know it was received in the eighteenth century, and has gradually attained independent importance. It may be fairly be said that the printed calendars have never been so beautiful as those issued for this year.

Lynchers' Rope Killed Trees.

A writer for the Wellington Mail describes the lynching of three horse thieves in the early days of Sumner county, Kan., and the death of the trees which they were hung immediately withered and died. Traditions of this sort were familiar in a number of western Kansas communities, says the Kansas City Journal. Near Hays City on the bank of what is known as "dead Man's Gulch" was a fine cottonwood. To this tree a couple of men were hung one night, and with the coming of another spring the tree showed no signs of life. Superstitious people used to point it out to strangers and for a long time it was one of the town's proudest points of interest. But little by little poor people carried it away for firewood, and for 20 years it has been only a memory.

CHANCES OF A BIG FIRE IN PLAINFIELD

Chief T. O. Doane Talks on the Possibilities of Repeating Paterson's History.

LOCAL CONFLAGRATIONS

THE MOST DISASTROUS FIRES WHICH HAVE OCCURRED IN PLAINFIELD.

Plainfield Has a Number of Large Buildings Which are Not Fire-Proof — What Force Could be Called On.

The awful devastation wrought by fire at Paterson has been the cause of much discussion on the part of many persons in this city, who realize that such a calamity is possible to occur here at any time without a moment's warning. In fact, numerous inquiries have been made of the capability of the local fire department in the event of such a horror overtaking Plainfield.

With this in mind, a Daily Press reporter asked Chief Doane, Thursday "What chance would the local department have to successfully battle against such a conflagration?"

"We wouldn't be 'one, two, six!'" responded the chief in a matter of fact way. "Such a thing is apt to happen to any city, but so far we have fortunately escaped a fire of such proportions," he added.

Continuing, in this strain, the chief said that the worst place for a fire here would be in the business section on West Front street. He declared that Plainfield has as many and even more high buildings than any other city in the State. This is the worst feature in case of a big fire. The disadvantageous part of it all is, according to the chief, that there is not a single fire proof structure among the many large buildings in the business portion of the city.

Should there be a big blaze in this part, when the alarm is turned in, only two hose wagons, a chemical engine and a truck would be able to arrive on the scene in a few moments. It would take at least six minutes for the third hose wagon, at the West End house, to get on the spot. In that interval of time, he said, there is no telling what damage would be done. Ten lines of hose is all that could be brought into play by the city department. There are twelve regular men and twenty-four call men, but all told not over twenty-four men would respond. This number, however, would be sufficient to handle the apparatus.

The chief explained in detail how the Metropolitan department copes with large fires. The flames are surrounded completely as wherever they spread additional companies surround them there. They do not have to "follow up" a fire, a they did in Paterson, or as the Plainfield department would have to do. They have lots of apparatus and lots of men, but such a thing could not be expected of the smaller cities, for they couldn't afford it.

There has been several conflagrations in this city, but none recently. On West Front street, a whole section from what is now Campbell's store as far as the Compton building was devastated by flames, in 1872 and the volunteer department worked heroically. Two years previously the Schiepdin building on the corner of West Front and Grove streets was a conflagration which worried the firemen. The building was completely ruined by fire.

In 1885, the lumber yards of A. D. Cook & Brother, on Park avenue, caught fire and the flames threatened that part of the city. It was a huge blaze, but not as great as the conflagration which occurred at the yards of Boice, Runyon & Co., on the same site, in 1891, which again threatened the city. Another fire of considerable magnitude was that which destroyed the buildings on the site of what are now the stores of Boehm and Lederer, on West Front street. Then the Bard Cycle Company's fire, where the Smalley building now stands, was an exciting one.

The Plainfield deparment is every bit as good and as well equipped in proportion as that of Paterson, in the opinion of Chief Doane. He says that a fireman can never tell how flames should be coped with until a fire occurs, for there are no two cases alike. Another thing which he calls attention to is that high winds are not always detrimental to the work of extinguishing flames. This he explains by showing that the heavy volumes of smoke may be carried away by the winds and thus the firemen are allowed to get right at the heart of the fire. Big fires, says the chief, are no exception. He is not worrying over the risk run of Plainfield being visited as Paterson was recently.

Miss Garretson, of East Millstone, has returned home after a visit with Mr. and Mrs. T. B. VanZandt, of Madison avenue.

BASEBALL IS BOOMING UP AT HOPE CHAPEL

All the Old Men Back and Lots of New Candidates for the Nine.

MANAGER COSE'S PLANS.

WILL FORM TWO TEAMS TO MEET IN PRACTICE CONTESTS.

Final Selection Will Depend on Showing Made in Practice—Will Have an Extra Pitcher This Year Also.

Despite the fact that winter is far from being over and the weather is anything but conducive to talk of out door sports, distinct murmurings of baseball matters are beginning to be heard. A number of local organizations, which number athletics among their divertisements, intend pacing teams in the field and prospects for the national game in Plainfield during 1903 are very promising.

One of the associations which has already taken the matter in hand, is the Y. M. A. of Hope chapel, which had one of last season's leading teams It is the intention of the members to form another one which will be second to none.

At a recent meeting of the association, John H. Cose was elected manager of the proposed team and David P. Martin was made captain. Both are familiar with every phase of baseball and their selection of players will undoubtedly meet with the approval of every enthusiast. There are at present fourteen candidates for positions on the team, among which are all of last year's players. The surplus material is all very good and in consequence the rivalry for places will be keen. Most of the old team will be retained but there will be considerable shifting.

Among the features of the new nine will be an efficient corps of pitchers. Isaac Monroe and Tunis Hewitt, two of last season's twirlers, will again be signed and another at least, will be added. In this way the pitchers can alternate and there will be little possibility of one man having to bear the brunt of the work. Too much work devolving on Monroe is assigned as one reason why the Hopes lost one of last season's most interesting contests.

Manager Cose is already securing dates for the season and next month or during the early part of April, practice will be commenced. It is his intention to have two teams made up for preliminary play and the showing made by each man will have much to do in the final selections. The actual schedule will be inaugurated toward the close of April, on last season's grounds at Grant and Sherman avenues.

SAME OLD DATE.

The Martha Washington Supper at Hope Chapel to be Held Feb. 22.

The Ladies' Aid Society, of Hope chapel, definitely decided at its meeting, Wednesday afternoon, to hold its annual Martha Washington supper on Saturday, February 22. There was some talk of changing the date on account of the holiday falling on Saturday, but a change of date was not found practicable. The supper will be attended with the usual entertaining features which have made the occasion a feature of chapel social affairs.

A NEW FIRM.

Schuerlein & Shirley Succeed the Old Firm of Schuerlein Brothers.

The partnership existing between Frank and Fred Schuerlein, trading as Schuerline Brothers, of Somerset street, has been dissolved. Fred Schuerline has formed a partnership with T. J. Shirley and they will trade as Schuerlein & Shirley, doing business at the old stand. Schuerline Brothers succeeded George F. Brown in business, Mr. and Shirley has been connected with the carpet department of Woodhull & Martin's for the last five years.

Chosen Officers.

Talking of Fire Company.

LOCAL YOUNG PEOPLE JOINED IN WEDLOCK

Marriage of Miss Jennie A. Quick and A. H. Derby Took Place Feb. 11.

AT THE BRIDE'S HOME.

PRETTY HOME CEREMONY WAS WITNESSED BY MANY FRIENDS.

After a Reception the Couple Departed on Their Honeymoon—Members of the Bridal Party—To Reside at Perth Amboy.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar W. Dunham, of East Fifth street, was filled with a joyful assemblage, Wednesday afternoon, the occasion being the wedding of Miss Jennie Andrews Quick, Mrs. Dunham's daughter, to Archibald Harvey Derby, of West Front street. Though the nuptial event was intended to be a quiet affair, it was a bright and happy gathering that welcomed the young couple.

The ceremony took place at 5:30 o'clock and at that time the parlors were thronged with the friends of the young people. The rooms were tastefully adorned with southern smilax, ferns and palms, mingled with white were a profusion of pink carnations and roses. Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, of which the bride is a member, was the officiating clergyman. He was assisted by Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, which the groom's family attend. The simple marriage ceremony of the Reformed church was used.

The opening strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin," rendered by Peter Smith, the pianist, from Somerville, was a signal that the nuptial ceremony was about to begin. The groom and his brother, Wilson Derby, who acted as best man, entered from the large hallway and took their places near the clergymen in the front parlor. The bridal party entered from the rear parlor. The maid-of-honor was Miss Emma Burdette, of Elizabeth. When the ritual of the church was ended, the gladsome notes of Mendelssohn's wedding march were heard above the jubilant sounds of the words of congratulation extended to Mr. and Mrs. Derby by the delighted gathering.

During the reception a supper was served by a caterer. The menu was an elaborate affair, and enjoyed by those who had been bidden to the wedding. All during the evening Mr. Smith favored the assemblage with various piano selections of a pleasing nature.

Mr. and Mrs. Derby took their departure shortly after 8 o'clock, boarding an express train for the south. They will have a short honeymoon trip and will subsequently take up their residence at Perth Amboy, where the groom is employed. He is connected with the Hibbard-Rodman-Ely safe works in that place.

William Vroom, of Somerville, and Alvah Davis, of this city, were the ushers at the wedding.

The bride was gowned in white satin, with Duchesse lace and pearl trimmings. She wore a veil of tulle, and carried bridal roses. Miss Burdette, the maid of honor, was gowned in white Persian lawn, with pink trimmings, and she carried pink roses. The gift of the groom to the best man and the ushers was a gold stick pin, while the bride's gift to the maid of honor was a neat pearl pin. Among the guests present were friends from Brooklyn, New York, Orange, Montclair, Elizabeth, Trenton and Somerville.

The presents received by the bride were very elaborate and exceptionally numerous. Among them were designs in cut glass, silver, Dresden and Haviland china, Favrile glass, parlor ornaments, hand framed works of art, linen, embroidery and furniture. The Sunday-school class of the bride remembered her by sending a collection of solid silver oyster forks.

Mr. and Mrs. James Derby, of West Front street, the parents of the groom presented to the bride a handsome leather bound family Bible, in which was enclosed the gynecological history of the Cary-Derby family, of which he is a descendant. The family record is traced back to Baron De Kari, a noted Englishman of the eleventh century, and to Thomas Derby, who resided in Derbyshire, England, at the beginning of the eighteenth century.

Attractions at Casino.

Manager Maze Edwards has arranged for a vaudeville performance to be given at the Casino on the afternoon and evening of Washington's Birthday. Some excellent talent from New York has been secured for the two performances. Mr. Edwards is also arranging with a minstrel show which will appear at the Casino on the evening of February 24 or 26.

Seeley's paper mill will begin working night and day Monday.

FINE LECTURE GIVEN BY REV. D. W. SKELLENGER, OF WASHINGTON.

Spoke in Supplementary Course at Y. M. C. A. Hall on "Rips in the Rockies."

An audience, that more than filled the Y. M. C. A. Hall, gathered last Wednesday to enjoy the illustrated lecture on "Rips in the Rockies," given by Rev. D. W. Skellenger, of Washington, D. C. The lecture, without exception, was one of the best ever seen and attracted much interest on the part of all. Mr. Skellenger formerly preached at Dunellen and has a host of friends in this vicinity.

The views shown last evening by Mr. Skellenger were beautiful and pictured more vividly the attractive country of the west than any heretofore seen. Mr. Skellenger took his audience from Chicago to Denver and then through the grand old Rockies, showing the grandeur of the scenery in that part of the country. It is safe to say that not many of those present had such ideas of the Rockies.

Mr. Skellenger's lecture was delightful. In a graphic manner he told of his trip and from beginning to end he held the closest attention of all. As an intermission and at the close of them were selections by the Zobo quartette. A. V. Searing, Jr., operated the lantern in a satisfactory manner.

OLD FRIENDS WED.

Mrs. Sarah C. Kline and John A. Coddington Quietly Married Wednesday, Feb. 12.

Mrs. Sarah C. Kline and John A. Coddington were quietly married at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Mary Everett, of Fairview avenue, Wednesday afternoon. The ceremony took place at 4:30 o'clock and was witnessed only by a few immediate friends.

Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, of which the bride is a member, was the officiating clergyman. After a short reception, which followed the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Coddington left on the Lehigh Valley express at 5:30 o'clock, for the west. They will go direct to Sharon, Ill., where the groom is engaged in business, and will make their home there.

Mr. Coddington is a former resident of Plainfield, having lived here thirty years ago, and has many friends in this city. The bride has resided here for over thirty two years. The couple have been friends since childhood days.

The groom's gift to the bride was a check for $10,000.

BASEBALL PLANS.

North Plainfield High School Will Have a Good Nine This Spring.

The boys of the North Plainfield High School are making preparations for a baseball team to represent the athletic association of the school on the diamond this spring. There is no lack of material.

A number of the former players will be on the nine. Among these will be Edward Overton, Harry Woodland and Frank Emmons, all fielders, and Fred Armstrong, George Conover and Hilare Blats, basemen. Every will be few places on the nine to be filled and a lively contest is expected from the members of the junior classes. Robert Sander, one of the instructors, will act as coach.

SEEING THE WORLD.

Howard E. Bennett Writes Home of His Cruise on Man-of-War.

Mrs. H. E. Bennett, of East Third street, has received a letter from her husband, Howard E. Bennett, who is a marine attached to the U. S. S. Buffalo. He writes that he is enjoying good health and that in the past year his ship has touched at ports in England, Russia, Norway, Africa, Chili and the Canary Islands. He is now stationed at New Orleans for ten days at the conclusion of which he expects to sail for New York.

Clerk's Wise Suggestion.

"I have lately been much troubled with dyspepsia, belching and sour stomach," writes M. S. Mead, leading pharmacist of Attleboro, Mass. "I could eat hardly anything without suffering several hours. My clerk suggested I try Kodol Dyspepsia Cure which I did with most happy results. I have had no more trouble and when one can go to eating mince pie, cheese, candy and nuts after such a time, their digestion must be pretty good. I endorse Kodol Dyspepsia Cure heartily." You don't have to diet. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests your food. L. W. Randolph.

Death Mask of Lincoln.

An excellent death mask of Lincoln is to be seen in the window of J. Herver Doane's jewelry store on Park avenue. This belongs to a valuable collection and is a rare mask.

EPWORTH LEAGUE

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 23. "Obedience"—Text, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23; 1 Kings iii. 14; Rev. xxii, 14.

"To obey is better than sacrifice." "Blessed are they that do His commandments."

This does not always appear the easiest or most attractive way. Indeed, it is often much easier to pay a heavy forfeit or incur severe penalty than to do the straightforward, plain and simple duty. It takes more manhood to obey than to give a costly sacrifice. Many a person will give $10 in a cause rather than speak a word or be bothered to think of the subject. Sacrifice is worship by proxy. Obedience is personal service. Sacrifice kills something else, obedience kills one's own self will and pride. The one presents things, while the other presents self to God.

To obey is not to go through outward motions merely. It is from depths of the heart to recognize mother's claim and one's own duty to pay those dues, and more than such assent of mind is the consent of feeling that it is good to do it, and we prefer such course to any other." The glad response of heart is the most valuable part of all obedience. Lack of understanding, even misunderstanding, can be overlooked, and mistakes of mind also, but where the intention is not right, where love is lacking and will is rebellious and service performed grudgingly, it is impossible to pass it by. There must be correction until there is complete change of attitude.

"Right to the tree of life."

Great stress has been put in times past on the personal element of the judge in the adjustment of rewards and penalties under the divine law until it is to be feared not a few have conceived of it as rather matter of caprice or favoritism than of justice mercifully and lovingly administered. It is well sometimes to look at the whole subject on its natural side as the orderly working of forces which must inevitably result in certain ends. We are made in a certain way and are surrounded by a world in which the interworking of powers is fixed to move according to definite laws. Violation of these laws brings disaster, obedience to them brings prosperity. No special pleading will alter results. No favoritism need be expected. No caprice or peculiar case be discovered. The merit system prevails here. Obedience to spiritual law gives right to the tree of life—that is, it opens the path, it is the means by which the eternal life is appropriated. It is the method by which the entire being is brought into the city. God loves the world with infinite compassion, but not with lawless disregard of moral distinctions. He gives His only begotten Son that men may be saved. But the provision for salvation is restricted to those who will accept Him. Those who perish not are the "whosoever believeth on Him." They have eternal life because spiritual processes in them produce that result as naturally as vital processes in the body produce physical life and health.

We must keep God's directions for soul life and strength if we will have eternal blessedness. Neglect is as fatal as rebellion. No one becomes good by mere accident. We learn obedience—learned it through the things which He suffered. God leads us the same road.

Having Peace.

We cannot have peace if we are living our own life, striving for our own will, seeking to walk in our own way. But if in very truth we have faith in God, if we believe that He is compassioning us, redeeming us, that all material things are simply the instruments preparing us for another world, that our failures here are the secret and the starting point of a grander success hereafter, if we are willing to leave the past in His hands because we cannot alter it and the future because we cannot control it and live simply in the present moment, we may walk as He walked in the midst of the tempest and go over the sea, and the sea shall sink as the angel in the tempest shall not destroy us.—Lyman Abbott.

Loving With the Mind.

It seems very easy for many people to forget that we are commanded to love God not only with all the heart, but with all the mind. They imagine that they will have become altogether Christlike if their heart—that is, their intention—is pure, if their will to do right is good, if their affections are supremely centered on God. It is a mistake to belittle the exalted great harm brought disrepute on an important doctrine, led people to make professions which their behavior has belied and produced discouragement, failure and loss.—Zion's Herald.

The Answers to Our Prayers.

How deeply rooted must unbelief be in our hearts when we are surprised to find our prayers answered, instead of feeling sure they will be so, if they are only offered up in faith and are in accord with the will of God!—Lutheran Observer.

Contentment.

We shall be made truly wise if we be made content; content, too, not only with what we can understand, but content with what we do not understand—the habit of minds which theologians call, and rightly, faith in God.—Charles Kingsley.

They Will Be Done.

They will that storks from clod to star,
That stretches the bright rainbow bar,
That rules the land, restrains the sea,
That perfect will be done in me.
So shall I rest from pain and care,
Be safe and peaceful everywhere.
—Christian Endeavor World.

WELLINGTON PUTNAM FINE

AUDIENCE AT HIGH SCHOOL A. A. BENEFIT WELL ENTERTAINED.

Mr. Putnam Gave Two Splendid Numbers of Varied Nature at the Casino.

A recognized master of the dramatic art, Wellington Putnam, of New York, gave a couple of recitations at the Casino Thursday, which served to fully demonstrate his marvelous ability and to hold the undivided attention of a large audience. Mr. Putnam is at present a professor of elocution in the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, of New York, and was formerly a member of the Columbia College faculty.

The affair last evening was given under the auspices of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association, and the organization realized how fortunate it was in securing such a talented elocutionist. William Dean Howell's "The Albany Depot" and Stephen Phillips' "Herod" were the two recitations he gave. The broad jump from the one to the other showed him to be an undoubted master, for in both he displayed a most complete understanding of the lines and portrayed the parts in a manner that would have brought joy to the authors.

After the recital the young people in the audience enjoyed a dance, the music for which was furnished by Frame's orchestra. This festivity lasted until near the midnight hour. Light refreshments were served. The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Harvey E. Doane, chairman, the Misses Dorothy Waldo and Edna Moore, Harold Nomer, Fred VanAuken and VanWyck Brooks, Blanchard Fosgate, Linden Bridgeman, Archibald Brakeley, Aldus Moore, Edward Janes, VanWyck Brooks and George Babcock were the ushers.

GOD IN NATIONAL AFFAIRS

SPECIAL MEETING AT FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH FEB. 12.

Told of the Work Done by Prominent Personages in History.

The prayer-meeting service at the First Presbyterian church, February 12, took the form of a discussion of prominent persons in history. The subject was "God's Providence in National Affairs."

Isaac B. Hill spoke of Oliver Cromwell, showing his devotion to his country and the sincere services he rendered. He spoke of his great sacrifice to duty, rather than self-glorification.

Edwin E. Gano was the next speaker. His remarks were concerning Lincoln, the martyred President. He reviewed briefly the many excellent points in the life of Lincoln, showing how he sacrificed everything that this country might be supreme and that it might indeed be the land of the free and the home of the brave.

G. P. Hinman then spoke on a general topic in which he showed how in so many instances order was brought out of a chaotic condition of things. Rev. C. E. Herring was the last speaker. He took for his subject "Deborah," and told how she was used by God for the good of the many. He spoke of her beautiful life and character and how devoted she was to God and his work.

The programme was a helpful and interesting one throughout and held the close attention of a large audience.

MEDAL FOR DRILL.

Will be Given for Best Work in City High School Cadets.

The handsome gold medal, which J. D. Mecrish, commandant of the Plainfield High School battalion, has offered in drilling, was exhibited to the cadets today. It is intended to be awarded at the close of the school year to the cadet who has shown the greatest proficiency in tactics. The medal is about an inch and a half in diameter and is in the shape of a maltese cross. Upon it are the letters "P. H. S. C." and around the centre circle "military medal." The figures "07" are in the centre. The colors are those of the school, red and blue. Surrounding the cross is a wreath.

Meeting With Great Luck.

Several friends in this city have received word from Clarence Thorn, who is on a hunting trip in West Virginia, to the effect that he is meeting with great luck and that a shipment of turkeys and ducks may be expected soon. He will remain south one week longer as the guest of Former Mayor George Rockfellow and family.

Assistant State Secretary Brown Ill.

Assistant State Secretary Charles B. Brown, of the Y. M. C. A., is seriously ill in Camden, where he has been working under the auspices of the association. It is feared that he may suffer an attack of pneumonia.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 23—Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle. Topic—Obedience.—1 Sam. xv. 22, 23; 1 Kings iii, 14; Rev. xxii, 14.

The obedience of the topic is obedience to God. It is the duty of every man born into this life to obey God "Fear God and keep His command ments. This is the whole duty of man." But we should not only obey God, but our obedience should be prompt and cheerful. Our obedience should be characterized by the spirit of the psalmist when he said, "I will run in the way of Thy commandments" and "I will delight to do Thy will." God not only loves cheerful giving, but cheerful obedience.

But if obedience is doing God's will and is of such great importance, what does God want us to do? God's will is revealed within us, and in his revelation the Bible, conscience, the voice of God within us, tells us what is right and what is wrong and urges to shun evil and to do good. The Bible also tells us what we must believe and do concerning God and what duty God requires of man." How important that we hear and heed the voice of conscience! How important that we know and understand the word of God! There God tells us that He wants us to accept Jesus Christ as our Saviour and that He wants us to obey His laws and do His will in Christ.

The topical references present two important facts, both of which should inspire us to obedience to the will of God.

1. The consequences of disobedience should inspire us to obedience. Disobedience means rejection by God and the ruination of life. How awfully is this illustrated in the case of Saul! No young man ever faced life under more promising circumstances than Saul, the first king of Israel. In physical equipment, in intellectual endowment, in political power, in spiritual equipment, Saul stood pre-eminent among the men of his day. Yet all his hopes and prospects for life were blasted in an hour. One act of disobedience led to his rejection by God, and he fell to the lowest depths and died by his own hand! What a wrecked life, and all because of disobedience! And how many modern Sauls are wrecking their lives by disobeying the laws of God. Talents, opportunities, positions, count for naught if we are trampling under foot the will and laws of God.

2. The blessings of obedience should inspire us to it. Precious promises are attached to God's commands to obedience. God promises to bless us in this life if we will obey him. "If thou wilt walk in My ways to keep My statutes and My commandments, . . . then I will lengthen thy days." God provides best to bless us in the future if we obey him. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates to the city." Such precious promises should inspire us to obey God promptly, cheerfully, fully.

BIBLE READINGS.

Deut. xi, 26-28; xxviii, 1-14; Ps. xl, 8; cxix, 9, 33-40; Matt. vii, 21-29; John xv, 10-16; Rom. xvi, 19; Phil. ii, 1-12; Jas. i, 22-27; Rev. xxii, 12.

Christ's Sympathy.

Christ shows Himself especially sympathetic with questions of domesticity, as is natural. He who in Cana graciously alleviated a housekeeper's predicament, as when tears rushed forth at the broken home of Mary and Martha and Lazarus. Men are sometimes ashamed to weep. There are men who, like the tears start, will conceal them. They think it is unmanly to cry. They do not seem to understand it is manliness and evidence of a great heart. I am afraid of a man who does not know how to cry. And I am afraid of a man not ashamed to cry over human misfortune. Look at that deep lake of tears opened by the two words of the evangelist, "Jesus wept." Behold Christ on the only day of His early triumph marching on Jerusalem, the glittering domes obliterated by the blinding rain of tears in His eyes and on His cheek, for when He beheld the city He wept over it. O man of the many trials, O woman of the heartbreak, why do you not touch Him?—Talmage.

Nothing but His Own Will.

Nothing but the setting up of his own will separates man from his true life in God. And in the strong language of an old writer, "Nothing burneth in hell but self will." The human will must be harmonized with the Divine will, the human spirit must be reunited to the Divine spirit, or hopeless disaster overtakes the soul. To accomplish this restoration is the work of the invisible Christ within us. His Spirit broods always over the chaotic waste of our rootless lives—restless and shapeless—until the marriage of the image of His Father and reinspired with the breath of His own eternal being. We find ourselves, we know ourselves, we are ourselves, only in Him.—Lucy Larcom.

The Song of the Angels.

No sweeter song, no richer benediction, ever thrilled the air of earth than that of the angels at the Nativity—"Peace on earth" is surely a gift of heaven. This is the world of sin, and so peace, like its Prince, finds "no room in the inn." Enmity, hatred, murder, unbridled war, are the natural fruits of sin. Peace, like its Prince, is a stranger and a protest and struggles for a place and a home and a kingdom on earth. How strong and happy are we in the confidence that our "peace shall flow on as a river and righteousness as the waves of the sea!"—Central Presbyterian.

Unexpected.

Not in withdrawing from the world, but in keeping yourself unspotted from the world, is your virtue or religion shown.—Episcopal Recorder.

TO DOUBLE PRESENT PLANT

CRESCENT EMBOSSING WORKS IS GOING TO BUILD ADDITION.

Three-Story Brick and Frame Structure Has Been Planned—Because of Increased Business.

Continued brisk business and the daily receipt of large orders has made it necessary for the Crescent Embossing Company to increase the capacity of its plant almost double. Contractors have been asked to figure on plans for a modern addition to the present building, from plans and specifications recently prepared by Architect Fred L. Lancaster.

The designs call for a three story brick and frame structure, forty by fifty feet in dimensions, with all improvements. It will be modern in every respect, a distinctive feature being metal ceilings and sides in the main and private offices. The employes' quarters will be be fitted with the latest sanitary appliances.

On the completion of the building, which will be erected on the south side of the present factory on West Second street, the working force will be greatly enlarged. At present the factory is running early and late to keep up with a rush of orders for fine card and embossing work.

SUDDENLY CALLED.

Mrs. Katharine Vail Runyon Passed Away Yesterday—A Beautiful Character.

The sudden death of Mrs. Katharine Vail Runyon, which occurred Feb. 11, was a shock to a large circle of friends.

She was the daughter of Stephen and Susan Vail and was born near Greenbrook, within the present limits of Plainfield. She was married at the age of nineteen to the late Judge Enos W. Runyon, who was always proud to refer to her as his helper and inspiration, and whose love and devotion he attributed his success, both as a lawyer and as a public man.

Mrs. Runyon was noted for her sunny disposition, her loyalty to her friends, her gentle sympathy and her earnest Christian character. She was baptized at the age of twenty by Rev. Daniel T. Hill and has ever since been a faithful member of the Baptist church. In her early life she was identified with the various charities of Plainfield, but of late years her delicate health prevented her from being very active.

She is survived by four children, Mrs. Robert Lowry and Mrs. Chas. A. Stovel, of this city, Mrs. Arthur E. Lee, of Havana, and Albert L. Runyon, who has been many years in south Africa.

Mrs. Runyon also leaves one sister, Mrs. Susan Moffett, of Philadelphia, and one brother, Wallace Vail, of this city.

The funeral services were held Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the residence of Mrs. Robert Lowry, of 324 Webster place.

LUNCH-BOX SOCIAL.

Given by Members of a Sunday-School Class at Grace M. E. Church.

A delightful lunch-box social was given at the home of Miss Emma Swalley, of Manning avenue, Thursday. The affair was arranged by the members of her Sunday-school class in Grace M. E. church, and was for the purpose of raising part of the sum pledged by the class towards the liquidation of the church debt.

In all there were sixty persons present and an enjoyable time was had. Music and games were the features, although the lunch box refreshments were not neglected. A neat sum was realized by the affair.

ANNOUNCED AT DINNER.

Engagement of Miss Edith Arens and A. Hagedorn, of New York.

At the handsome new home, "Waldfrienden," of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Arens, Rahway road, an elegant dinner was given last evening, during which announcement was made of their daughter Edith's engagement to Adolph Hasedorn, of New York city. Covers were laid for twelve. The decorations in the beautiful main hall and dining room, smilax and bridal roses, were arranged by Miss Lincoln.

Putting Down New Planking.

The employes of the New Jersey Central have been repairing the planking along the tracks in front of the new railroad station. When the cold weather arrived it played havoc with the old boards and they rose above the level of the tracks. This made it somewhat dangerous. The old boards were removed and new and heavier planking will now take their place.

To Build Addition.

Building Inspector T. O. Doane has issued a permit to Mrs. Amelia L. French, of Brooklyn, for the construction of improvements to the premises, 207 West Front street. An extension, thirty-two by twenty feet, will be made to the rear of the building. It will be of frame construction.

MASTER MECHANICS AT THEIR ANNUAL BANQUET

After an Excellent Repast, They Listened to Speeches by Prominent Citizens.

AT HOTEL PLAINFIELD.

PRESIDENT L. B. WOOLSTON ACTED AS MASTER OF CEREMONIES.

First Annual Banquet of Master Mechanics Association Held February 11.—The Speakers—The Others Present.

Seventy-five members of the Master Mechanics Association, representing every branch of the building trades in this city, gathered in the Hotel Plainfield, February 11, for the organization's first annual banquet. There were also in attendance many of Plainfield's prominent business men and officials, all of whom assisted in making the event a memorable one.

The guests assembled early in the evening. After being allowed ample time to do full justice to the excellent dinner served under the personal supervision of Manager J. E. McConnell, food for the mind was furnished by some of the city's most prominent speakers. This part of the affair was under the direction of President L. B. Woolston, who acted as chairman and called for the speeches. In every case his requests were met with a ready response and so interesting were the remarks that it was long after midnight before the gathering terminated.

Entertainment in another form was furnished by Joseph Longhead with excellent banjo selections, John Carney in his always welcome Teutonic comicalities and William Holmes, with vocal selections. They were encored repeatedly.

Principal among the speakers were "Patriotic Oration" James E. Martine, who spoke on "The Invasion of American Labor in Foreign Countries;" Mayor O. L. Jenkins, "Beautiful Buildings in Plainfield;" George J. Tobin, "Modern Plumbing;" Health Inspector William H. Addis, "Plumbing Advancement;" Chief of the Fire Department T. O. Doane, "Plainfield's Building Ordinance;" C. Powell Carr, "Benefits to be Derived by Architects and Builders Working Together." Other addresses were made by A. V. French, John Abbott, C. W. Krause, W. C. Smith and L. B. Woolston. All of the speeches applied in some way to the building trades and were of benefit to every one in attendance.

Among the members of the Master Mechanics who were present in addition to those mentioned were Albert Enander, Seaman Williams, I. L. McVoy, Raymond McVoy, Robert Rushton, John Heeney, David Donovan, William Pangborn, Robert Jahn, Charles M. Naylor, D. W. Littell, A. I. Littell, John Coss, Bertram Tallamy, William H. Brokaw, Michael Armstrong, Thomas Osmun, William Chamberlain, Charles Dutcher, A. A. Stryker, George Hammer, Lorens Townley, William Bohl, Charles M. Wilson, Herman Hansen, James Manning, Joseph Morrison and Titus Lantry.

NEW ORGANIST.

Herbert H. Joy Engaged as Organist of Crescent Avenue Church.

The trustees of the Crescent Avenue church have appointed Herbert Hemingway Joy, of West Fifty-seventh street, New York, as organist in the place of Ward Stephens. At present, Mr. Joy will substitute during Mr. Stephens' absence but will fill the position permanently after May 1, when Mr. Stephen's resignation takes effect.

The new organist has had a large experience in special voice culture, the training of choruses and the organizing of convention choirs. It is probable that he will open a studio for voice culture in this city.

The church choir is shortly to be reorganized, owing to the resignation of several of the present members. It is understood that all of the old members will leave as there is too much opposition to there going.

Can Hear Better Now.

The acoustic properties of the Park Avenue Baptist church have been greatly improved of late by a rearrangement of the large covering that was formerly in the upper part of the edifice. This covering has been placed against the rear wall of the church and has helped very much to rid the church of the echo.

Change in Dr. Peter's Visit.

Owing to Rev. Dr. Peters' removal from Brooklyn to Baltimore, the meetings to be held in the Park Avenue Baptist church will be held during the first and second weeks of March, instead of the last. The services will be open to the public and all will be cordially welcome.

LEAGUE ENDS WITH A TIE

Roselle Casino and Westfield Club Will Have to Roll an Extra Series.

IN DAILY PRESS LEAGUE

Concluding Games Last Thursday Resulted in Three Straight Victories for Roselle Over Cranford—Large Audience Watched the Games—Easy for Roselle.

Three easy victories for Roselle Casino over the Cranford Casino on the former's alleys, last Thursday, completed the scheduled games in The Daily Press Bowling League and left the Roselle Casino and the Westfield Club tied for first place. An extra series of games will be arranged in the near future to decide the tie. The Park Club, of Plainfield, finishes third and the Cranford Casino at the end of the list.

Much interest was centred in the results of last evening's games. It was a critical time for Roselle. A single defeat meant that the trophy would pass to Westfield and Roselle's unbroken succession of victories would come to an end. While Roselle is ordinarily invincible on its own alleys, it was possible that Cranford might have a surprise party in store and win one game at least. Every club in the league was represented in the large audience that witnessed the contests. Again there was much enthusiasm and lots of applause.

The home bowlers were evidently worried when the opening game began. Kenney was the only one who settled down to work at once. A few frames sufficed, however, to give them back their nerve and then the Roselle team simply walked away from its opponents. The Cranford men were over anxious and the first game went to Roselle by 156 pins.

Cranford made its best showing in the second game but that was not good enough to come within 74 hundred pins of the winners. In that game as well, Roselle led from start to finish. Kenney again distinguished himself.

For a few minutes only it looked as if the third game might develope into something close. But Roselle players were in winning form and Smith and Mulford downed the pins with much regularity. By the fifth frame it was evident that only the unexpected could change the result. Cranford failed to do it and the third game was won by 140 pins. C. A. Smith was high man as in the first game.

The scores were:

MANY IMPROVEMENTS.

Mrs. Truell is Going to Improve Her Property on Central Ave.

Mrs. John R. Truell, of Central avenue, has received the necessary permits from Building Inspector T. O. Doane for the construction of some improvements on her property at the corner of Fourth street and Central avenue. A large piazza will be built to connect the houses No. 318 and 326 Central avenue. The partitions in the rear part of the dining hall, at 326 Central avenue, will be removed and the necessary supports in the shape of girders and columns will take their place.

To Erect Residence.

Morris Abrams, of West Front street, has sold his valuable property at the corner of Grove street and Craig place to Charles B. Pope. The latter, who is a contractor, will erect a house on the property to cost $5,500, and it is said that it will be occupied by a physician. The deal for the property was consummated by Assemblyman William Newcorn.

Changed Its Name.

Hereafter it will be "The Friends' Association," instead of "The Young Friends' Association," as the name of that body which meets regularly at the Friends' meeting-house on Watchung avenue. Heretofore the name basis been confusing.

LAY READER HAS RETIRED

WM. WINANS MOORE DISCONTINUES SERVICES AT HEAVENLY REST.

That Parish Has Passed Under Control of Diocese and Missionary Will Be in Charge.

After faithfully serving the parish of the Church of the Heavenly Rest as lay reader for over five years, William Winans Moore, of West Seventh street, discontinues his valuable services to be succeeded by a missionary appointed by Rt. Rev. Dr. Scarborough, bishop of the diocese of New Jersey. The entire responsibilities of the work have rested on his shoulders during this period and under his administration the parish has grown rapidly.

Rev. Robert M. Beach, of Trenton, N. J., will take up the work so well conducted by Mr. Moore. Until very recently the parish was an independent mission of the Episcopal church, but now it has been transferred to the jurisdiction of the associate missions of the diocese. At the request of the bishop, Rev. Mr. Beach visited the parish last week and he has informed the head of the diocese of his favorable impressions.

Many changes have taken place in the condition of the parish since Mr. Moore assumed charge as lay reader five years ago. The congregation has increased four-fold and the Sunday-school to a greater degree. There were then eighteen pupils in the school while today there are eighty-two. In the Woman's Friendly Society there were only six members and now there are twenty-five. In the other departments of church work there has been a similar growth.

His duties as superintendent of the Sunday-school in addition to those as lay reader have taken up much of his time. During the entire period he has not missed one Sunday at the church edifice. When hundreds of miles away on business trips, Mr. Moore would carefully arrange to be back in Plainfield on Sundays in order to be in his accustomed place at the church. Mr. Moore will continue as a communicant at the church.

LITTLE BLAZE IN SAWDUST

FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED TO THE OLD STILLMAN BUILDING SATUDAY.

Fire, of Unknown Origin, Started in Packing About Steam Pipes—Discovered In Time.

A fire was discovered at 11 o'clock Saturday in the second floor of the Stillman building, by James DeGraw, who with his brother, Charles DeGraw, occupies a room on that floor. An hurried investigation showed the fire to be in one of several closets arranged alongside the hallyway.

Mr. DeGraw opened the door of the closet and discovered a fire burning briskly beneath the floor. Realizing that it might prove to be serious, he sent for Chief Doane, who was found in Assemblyman Newcorn's office.

William Townley the chief's driver was dispatched for the chemical engine and hose wagon. While waiting for the apparatus, Callman Albert L. Littell assisted Chief Doane in keeping the fire under control, an extinguisher being used. The flooring was ripped up and there was found a great quantity of sawdust packed in and about the steam and water pipes. This was found smouldering. Close by is the valuable collection of the late Col. Scott and this was threatened with destruction.

In a few minutes Assistant Chief Jennings and other firemen arrived and the fire was soon extinguished. The ceiling in Mr. Weinberger's store was removed for a considerable distance and all the sawdust taken out. The origin of the fire is unknown.

LOVE AND MARRIAGE

Evidently the Two Are Not Always Closely Associated.

Lightning Courtships Which Seem to Prove That Cupid Sometimes Does Not Aim His Arrows with Needful Care.

"So you married him after an acquaintance of only two weeks?" asked the magistrate at the Marylebone police court at London not long ago of a well-dressed young woman, who stated that she had lost her husband the previous evening in Leicester square. She had married her husband—a young fellow five years her junior—but three weeks previously; so that between his first and last appearances but five weeks had elapsed.

The superstitious believe that for a lady to find a thimble in the wedding cake is an infallible sign that she will die an old maid. One who was acting as bridesmaid to Miss Alice Sinclair, of Cincinnati, to whom this mischance happened, resolved, however, to conquer fate, and on one of the guests, Mr. Keeler, whom she had met for the first time, expressing warm admiration for her charms agreed to marry him forthwith. So a clergyman was procured, and the ceremony was performed within three hours after she had first encountered her husband.

On the morning of the day fixed for his wedding a young Manchester tradesman received a telegram announcing that his prospective bride was ill, so he put off the ceremony being celebrated, and requesting him to apprise the clergyman and invited guests of the postponement. Annoyed at this somewhat cavalier treatment the bridegroom, instead of complying, hastened round to an inn where served a barmaid of his acquaintance bearing the same name as his fiancee, made ardent love for 20 minutes or so, proposed, was accepted, and within an hour was a married man.

Rapid and unique was the courtship of Charles Kruger, of St. Louis. He was an aerial performer. So too was the lady who afterwards became his wife, and who was wont to terminate

In brief but impassioned speech he communicated his feelings to the lady smiled. He proposed; she murmured: "Yes." Next day they were married.

Another American courtship. At the house of a mutual friend at Rahokes, N. Y., the couple met for the first time. Half an hour later he proposed and was accepted. Long engagements were to the taste of neither, so, with the lady's consent, a justice of the peace was summoned for, and the knot was tied just 50 minutes after the twain had set eyes upon each other.

Desiring to see his son married, a New Yorker named Bower, who was on the point of death, summoned the young man and urged him to wed. The son, however, who was happy enough as a bachelor, demurred, whereupon the father, waxing wroth, declared that unless he married that very day he would cut him out of his will. It chanced that the first person whom the son met on leaving his father's presence was a pretty waitress at a neighboring hotel. To her he introduced himself and told his dilemma. She consented to extricate him, and a minister having been fetched, the pair were married that afternoon at the dying man's bedside.

Prof. McShane lectured at Scranton, Pa., on "Love, Courtship and Marriage," illustrating his words by selecting from his audience five couples, who, he averred, were suitable for each other. Of these selected couples one evidently placed implicit faith in the professor's prognostication, for no sooner was the lecture finished than Miss Mattie Weaver and Mr. John Ward, although they had never previously set eyes on each other, were made man and wife.

SPECIAL HOURS ARE TO BE DEVOTED TO THAT WORK.

Arrangement Made So Business Men Can Also Secure Any Desired Information.

Owing to the greatly increased work of the Public Library in giving assistance to readers and students, it has been decided to devote the afternoon hours to this work, that is from 2 until 5:30 daily, Saturdays excepted. This work will be in charge of the librarian who may be found during the above mentioned hours at the information desk in the reading room. All questions relating to the library or its catalogues, as well as those involving research should be brought to this desk.

No efforts will be spared in making available the resources of the library and assisting inquirers in finding the information of which they are in search. So far as possible users of this department are asked to make their inquiries during the hours mentioned.

Probably not many are aware of the extent of this branch of the library's work. It is consulted to a very considerable extent by business and professional men for matters pertaining to their work, by a number of authors, by teachers and pupils of the public and parochial schools, by ministers, by debaters and essay writers, as well as by the general reader.

Persons who visit the library only in the evening may use this department by leaving memorandum of the desired information with the evening attendant, and if the library contains any information in the subject, it will be ready for him in on the following evening.

WEDDED LAST FALL.

John W. Utzinger and Miss Elizabeth Stark Have Just Publicly Announced Their Marriage.

Announcement was made today of the marriage of John W. Utzinger, of Grandview avenue, to Miss Elizabeth L. Stark, of Elizabeth. The event took place last fall at Elizabeth and was performed by Rev. Mr. Utzinger formerly was employed at the Pond Machine Tool Works, and expects to accept a lucrative position in a short time. Both he and his wife have many friends in this city and Elizabeth who will learn with surprise of their marriage.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS.

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary submitted their claims to the Court that the latest and best dictionary be adopted in every department of the United States Government, to which end it was necessary to secure the authorization in every State, and for the purpose of furnishing it to every clerk, and every requirements of another government.

We are of the opinion that this allegation has been sufficiently established and the result that has been accomplished and the result that has been attained, that Webster's International Dictionary has been thoroughly revised in every particular, and is unquestionably the best adapted to meet the proper and diverse requirements of a dictionary which is to be the standard authority for the English language than any competition that the world has ever produced.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the authority and the standard as set forth in the Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1879, and that in the matter of its definitions; and that in the matter of its definitions; and that in the matter of its definitions;

COMPLETE TEXT OF BILLS TO MAKE GREATER PLAINFIELD

General Act and Two Special Ones Introduced Into Legislature Monday By Assemblyman Hall.

AND THEIR AIM IS CONSOLIDATION.

GIVES IN DETAIL ARRANGEMENTS FOR PUTTING QUESTION TO THE PEOPLE.

The First Bill Is General In Scope and Provides For The Annexation of Part of One County to Another and Sundry Details Thereof—Second Bill Changes the County Line—Third Provides For The Consolidation of City of Plainfield and the Borough of North Plainfield.

Since the introduction of the consolidation bills in the Legislature, Monday evening, by Assemblyman Hall, of this county, many inquiries have been made not merely as to the purport, but concerning the precise language of the measures. Through the courtesy of Former Mayor William L. Saunders, of Washington Park, this paper is able to print the three proposed measures in detail.

The first bill is general in nature and provides for the annexation of a part of the territory within one county to another county. It is as follows:

An act to provide for and facilitate the annexation of part of one county to another.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, that whenever part of one county shall be annexed to or consolidated with any other county of this State by or pursuant to any general, local or special law all general, local and special laws affecting such county to which part of another county shall be so annexed shall extend to and have the same force and effect within the annexed territory as the same have elsewhere within such county, and all special and local laws applicable to the county from which such part is taken shall be deemed and are hereby declared to be repealed in so far as applicable to said annexed territory; provided that such repeal shall not operate to affect or impair any right which any person or corporation may have acquired under and by virtue of any such local or special law.

2. That any or all persons who shall reside within the territory annexed shall immediately become citizens and residents of the county to which such territory shall be annexed and shall be entitled to all rights, privileges and benefits of citizenship in that county.

3. That any county to which part of the territory of any other county may be annexed shall be liable to pay such proportionate part of the indebtedness of the county from which such annexed territory may be taken, as the value of the property annexed for the purpose of taxation in the annexed territory bears to the entire amount of property assessed for such purpose in the county according to the assessments for the purpose of taxation made by the appropriate taxing officers of the several taxing districts of the county in the year preceding such annexation.

4. On the third Monday after such annexation or consolidation shall take effect a committee consisting of three members of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county from which such annexed territory is taken and three members of the board of Chosen Freeholders of the county to which such territory shall be annexed shall be appointed by the directors of the respective Boards of Chosen Freeholders of each county and such committee shall meet at the court house of the county from which such territory is taken, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of the Monday following their appointment, and shall then and there proceed to ascertain (1) the entire amount of the indebtedness of the county from which such annexed territory is taken; (2) the amount of money in the treasury of the county applicable to the payment thereof, if any; (3) the amount of uncollected taxes and other claims due such county which are deemed to be collectible; (4) such other information as shall be necessary to enable said committee to make just and equitable division of such indebtedness and assets between the counties, and they shall thereupon ascertain the amount of the indebtedness of the county from which the annexed territory is taken that should be paid by the county to which such territory is annexed, and how much of the taxes and claims due the county from which the territory is taken should be paid over or delivered to the county to which the territory is annexed, and the time or times when such payment or delivery should be made and shall make a report of their determinations in duplicate, one duplicate shall be filed in the clerk's office of the county from which such annexed territory is taken and the other in the clerk's office of the county with which said territory is annexed, and the county to which such territory is annexed shall thereupon become liable for the payment of such portion of such debt and interest thereon as shown by said report when the same becomes due or payable, and the county from which the territory is taken shall thereupon become liable to the county to which the territory is annexed, according to the determinations and provisions of said report. In ascertaining the facts aforesaid and in making such report the decision of a majority of the committee shall be final and conclusive; if any member or members of such committee shall refuse or neglect to attend the meeting aforesaid, or any adjournment thereof, those assembled shall act; provided it shall be lawful to adjourn such meeting from time to time not beyond one month in all as a majority of said committee or of those attending the meetings may decide.

5. All officers of any county living in any territory that may be annexed to another county shall continue in office until the expiration of their respective terms, and all commissioners of deeds, justices of the peace and constables resident within such annexed territory shall continue to hold their respective officers until the expiration of their respective terms.

6. All taxes for county purposes levied or assessed and uncollected in such annexed territory prior to the time when annexation shall take effect shall be collected by the officer or officers thereafter charged with the duty of collecting taxes in such territory and paid over to the collector of the county from which such territory was taken, and shall be divided according to the report hereinbefore mentioned.

7. All actions, suits, appeals, prosecutions and other legal proceedings pending in any court or before any tribunal having jurisdiction within the county from which such annexed territory shall be taken shall not be affected by such annexation, but the same may be prosecuted in the county from which such territory is taken to the end thereof in the same manner and before the same courts and tribunals as if such annexation had not occurred, provided that in all actions and proceedings pending in the supreme court when the defendant in any transaction shall at the time such annexation takes effect reside within the territory annexed, or when in any local action the cause of action arose in the territory annexed, either party may, at his election, on application to the said court for that purpose, have the venue in said actions or proceedings changed to the said county to which such territory shall be annexed, and the same tried or continued therein as if the said action had originally been commenced in the county to which such territory shall have been annexed, and all judgments obtained or that may be obtained in such action, suits or proceedings in the supreme court or in any court in the county from which such territory may be taken shall have the same force and effect within the annexed territory as if such annexation had not occurred and all writs of execution and other legal process may be issued thereon and directed to the sheriff or other appropriate official of the county from which such territory was taken, who is hereby authorized and directed to execute the same, and upon any such judgment a writ of error and other legal proceedings may issue or be had and taken as if said annexation had not taken place.

8. And be it enacted, that this act shall take effect immediately.

The second bill as framed provides for the annexation of that part of Somerset county known as North Plainfield to Union county. Its language is as follows:

An act to annex the territory within the boundaries of the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, in the county of Somerset, to the county of Union.

Be it enacted, by the Senate and General Assembly:

First.—That all that part of the county of Somerset known as the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, bounded as follows:

Beginning at a point in the center line of Rock avenue, formerly old Rock road, where the same is intersected by the center line of Green brook; thence, first, running in a general northwesterly direction along said center line of Rock avenue to a point where the center line thereof is intersected by the center line of Blue Ridge avenue; thence, second, running northeasterly in a straight line to a point in the center line of Prospect avenue, said point being the intersection of said line of Prospect avenue with the center line of Washington avenue, sometimes called Wilson avenue; thence, third, running in a northeasterly direction along the center line of Prospect avenue to a point where the same is intersected by the center line of Somerset street; thence, fourth, running in a magnetic course of north sixty-six degrees, thirty-one minutes east, a distance of eight thousand, six hundred and thirty-three feet, more or less, to a point, being the intersection of the center line of Raymond avenue and Mountain avenue; thence, fifth, running in a southeasterly direction along the center line of Raymond avenue to a point where said center line is intersected by the center line of Green brook; thence, sixth, running in a general southwesterly direction along said center line of Green brook to a point in the center line of old Rock road being the point or place of beginning, shall be, and the same is hereby set over, annexed to and made part of the county of Union.

Second.—That this act shall take effect on the tenth day of April next.

The third bill, which is strictly the consolidation bill, provides for the uniting of the municipal governments of the borough and city. Its phraseology is as follows:

An act to unite and consolidate the municipal corporations known as Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, in the county of Union, and the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield and the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, and the territory embraced within the boundaries of said municipal corporations shall be and the same are hereby united and consolidated and made one body politic and corporate and shall be known as "Inhabitants of the city of Plainfield."

2. This act shall take effect immediately, provided it shall not operate to effect a consolidation of the said municipal corporations until it shall have been accepted by each municipality by a majority of the qualified voters thereof voting thereon at a special election to be held in the said city at a time to be fixed by the Common Council thereof; the clerk of said city shall cause public notice of the time and place of holding said election to be given by advertisements signed by himself and set up in at least ten public places in said city, and published in one or more newspapers printed and circulating therein.

HOW THINGS STAND IN FANWOOD TOWNSHIP

Annual Township Reports, Just Issued, Show a Satisfactory Condition of Affairs.

DETAILS OF FINANCES.

QUIET YEAR REPORTED FOR THE FIRE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS.

Recommendations Made for New Year's Appropriations — Reports on Collections and Delinquent Taxes.

The annual financial report of Fanwood township, including the reports of the collector and treasurer, which has just been issued by the township committee, shows a most satisfactory condition of affairs in that thriving municipality. In the report of the board of police, it is shown that during the past year there has been little disorder. It is recommended that $100 be appropriated for the department during the coming year.

There were only two fires in the township during the past year. The fire department is in good condition, although 150 feet of new hose is needed. It is believed that $200 will be needed for the coming year's expenses.

The collector's report shows the receipts to be $20,782.13 and the expenditures the same. There is due schools from the State $1,254.22. The treasurer's report shows receipts to be $8,355.26, with a balance of $1,099.21. The township's expenses amounted to $2,539.68, including a temporary loan account, transferred from general balance, amounting to $986.

The report of the special constable for the collection of delinquent taxes shows uncollected taxes of $1,671.44 for 1900-1901, while there was $1,258.14 returned by the collector of uncollected taxes for 1901. The total uncollected taxes amount to $1,932.97.

The township committee includes T. J. Nicholl, William H. Terry and Theodore Brachmann, while Edward L. Hand is the efficient clerk. John L. Darby is collector, while Mr. Brachmann is the treasurer. Henry Cook is the special constable. The officers of the fire department include W. B. Noble, chief; W. H. Lake, first assistant, and Philip Blank, second assistant. Mr. Nicholl is chairman of the police board.

The report comprises sixteen pages and is prepared and arranged in a concise, yet complete form. The report also contains a complete list of delinquent taxpayers for 1900-1901.

MAYORS' FACES ON THE WALL

COLLECTION OF PICTURES FOR THE BOROUGH COUNCIL CHAMBERS.

A Complete Collection of Likenesses Will Soon be Placed in Proper Position.

A complete collection of the likenesses of the chief executives of North Plainfield, past and present, will be placed on the walls of the council-manic chambers before the next regular meeting of the body, which is scheduled for Friday evening, March 7. Horace A. Woodward, of Central avenue, is the artist, who has prepared the pictures and they are very creditable.

The boroughites, who will be honored in this way, are John H. Van Winkle, Dr. J. H. Cooley, Henry M. Needham, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., William L. Saunders, Charles Place, John F. Wilson and Newton B. Smalley. In each case the likeness is an enlargement from a cabinet photograph, and the work has been skillfully done. The pictures are three quarters life size.

The photographs are mounted on white mats and have been framed in ebony. At the base of each picture is inscribed, on a neat plate, the name and the term of office. As a whole the pictures, it is believed, will add greatly to the appearance of the chamber.

Several Adoptions.

It is expected that there will be several adoptions at the meeting of Miantonomo Tribe, No. 118, Improved Order Red Men, Friday evening, and it's possible that there may be a report from the Great Council session being held at Trenton, this week.

—Communion services will be held in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning. The regular preparatory services will be held Friday evening.

TALK ABOUT WATER CONTRACT

COUNCILMEN HAD SOMETHING TO SAY ON THE SUBJECT.

President Coriell Against Municipal Ownership—The Other Councilmen's Opinions.

President B. Frank Coriell, of the Common Council, in speaking of the proposition made by the Plainfield Water Supply Company to the city as regards the renewing of a contract, said Monday evening that he was convinced that the city was getting water service on a fair basis.

As for the hydrant rental, $15 each per year, Mr. Coriell said that the price was lower than most cities pay, and while the water company had offered to consider the proposition of reducing the rates to private consumers if the hydrant rentals could be raised, he did not favor such a move. This he declared would cost more expense on the fire department.

Mr. Coriell added that if the people of Plainfield show by an overwhelming expression of opinion their desire for municipal water works, the Council would feel duty-bound to order a special election whereby a vote on the matter could be secured. However, Mr. Coriell said that he did not think it would be a paying investment, one in which the taxpayers would like to engage. He said that the Councilmanic committee had endeavored to get better rates and that the committee was convinced that the water company would make no reduction.

Mr. Buckle supplimented Mr. Coriell's remarks by saying that when President Berged, of the Plainfield Water Supply Company, stated the company's position in the Plainfield papers several months ago, he failed to notice any logical or intelligent refutation of the statements made in that letter. He believed that Plainfield is getting good, pure wholesome water at rates that are fair. Mr. Tolles believed likewise.

After these expressions of opinion were given, Mr. Buckle introduced the resolution which called for the renewing of the old contract. It was the general opinion of the members who spoke that Plainfield could do no better than renew the contract. However, if the city is not satisfied, an opportunity will be given before April, 1903, to discontinue the service with the company.

IN THE NAVY.

Secret of Disappearance of George Welsh From Millstone Last September.

East Millstone, Feb. 26—Geo. Welsh, son of Benjamin Welsh, of this place, suddenly disappeared from his home last September and for many months not a single trace of him could be found. His folks were nearly distracted with grief over his protracted stay. Every effort was made to learn his whereabouts, but this proved fruitless.

The young man's folks and friends were overjoyed this week when they received letters from him. The letters stated that he was in Norfolk, Va., and that he had enlisted in the U. S. Navy for four years and was about to sail on the ship to which he had been assigned. He said that he was well and had enjoyed excellent health. He promised to write frequently.

SLEIGHING PARTY.

Young Folks Went to Westfield and Return Monday Afternoon.

A jolly crowd of young folks enjoyed a sleigh ride to Westfield Monday afternoon. When the destination was reached the crowd adjourned to a local pharmacy, where refreshments were served. The party was chaperoned by Mrs. Lawrence, and those in the party included the Misses Gladys Peck, Mariqn Overton, Madeline Reed, and Clarence Lawrence, Russell Lawrence, Alden Miller, Clyde Doane, Ralph Hallock, Jack Sweetzel and Graff Simmonds. It was 5:30 o'clock when Plainfield was reached on the return journey.

Pictures of Primary Department.

Rev. R. D. Schoonmaker, of Central avenue, has had a group picture taken of the pupils of the primary department of the Warren chapel Sunday-school. He has been the superintendent of this branch of the church work for some time past and desires to take with him to Africa a picture of the little ones for whom he has labored.

MUNICIPAL BUILDING FOR THE BOROUGH

Such is the Plan of Mayor Smalley as Expressed at Recent Council Meeting.

PLAN IN ITS INFANCY.

GROWING NEED OF ADDITIONAL ROOM FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Would Convert Old Engineshouse Into Municipal Building, and Build New Fire Department Headquarters.

Sooner or later North Plainfield will have a municipal building as well as additional fire headquarters, according to some remarks made by Mayor Newton B. Smalley at the adjourned special meeting of the Borough Council Monday evening. The plans are still in their infancy as yet, but the prospects are that they will mature before fall.

The growing need of Warren Engine Company for larger quarters and the disinclination of the borough authorities to be continually paying rent for councilmanic chambers has given rise to the proposition. In effect the proposed arrangement is to build a new engine house and to use the abandoned structure for councilmanic and police purposes.

It would be necessary to remodel the fire headquarters to some extent if the idea is carried out. The intention is that the lower floor could be fitted up as a lockup, with the necessary cells and an office for the chief marshal. As for the upper floor the partition would be removed and the entire second story used as a Council chamber. It is estimated that the expense of remodelling would be slight.

Concerning the proposed new headquarters for the engine company the plan is to erect a suitable building at some desirable spot on the same thoroughfare, Somerset street. Approximately it is estimated that the cost of the new building would not exceed $12,000. As the present time the borough government pays $225 annually for the rental of the present Council chamber at the corner of Somerset street and Craig place. The interest on the cost of construction of the proposed building it is believed would not greatly exceed the amount now paid as rent for councilmanic purposes.

The trouble with the present fire headquarters is that there is not sufficient room for the apparatus. Particularly the width of the building is a hindrance, and it is impossible to make any alterations to overcome this difficulty. Expressions from the firemen in the borough show the approval of the Mayor's suggestion and the chances are that it will be adopted at an early date.

CALLED IN POLICE.

Richmond Street Neighbors Stopped War of Words Just in Time.

Two female residents of Richmond street, in the vicinity of East Third, engaged in a war of words, Monday afternoon, which may yet result in both appearing in the police court. The women exchanged compliments of a shady nature across yards until the neighbors could stand it no longer and sent for the police. A patrolman arrived just a few minutes after the principals had concluded to withdraw. Complaints have been entered and there is a possibility that warrants will be issued.

PRIZE IN DEBATE.

Henry A. Pierce Won First Honors at Union College.

At a recent debate between students of Williams College, and Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., Henry A. Pierce, of this city, in his second year at the latter, was awarded a prize of $100 for proficiency. As there were many competitors, the honor is a very high one. Mr. Pierce is a graduate of the Plainfield High School of the class of '98. He secured a number of prizes at his graduation and his course at college has since been marked by a list of brilliant achievements.

Postponed Dance.

The dance of the S. A. C. which was to have been given in Washington Hall, Friday evening, and which was postponed on account of the weather, will be held in Sauerbrunn Hall, Thursday evening, March 6.

Purim Ball.

A Purim ball will be given by the Young Women's Hebrew Association, Monday evening, March 24. The affair will be held in Red Men's Hall.

DEPARTING SNOW MAY CAUSE HEAVY FLOODS

Water Very High in All the Brooks and Some of the Streets Are Now Canals.

CLEARING CONDITIONS.

CITY EMPLOYES ARE BUSY KEEPING OPEN CULVERTS AND GUTTERS.

In Outlying Parts of City the Water is in Possession and Boating is Reported Good—Prospects of a Flood.

In its hurried departure, the heavy snow fall of last week's blizzard promises to furnish a new excitement for the people of central New Jersey. The rain of yesterday and today, together with the rapidly melting snow, has swollen the neighboring streams far beyond their usual size and a brisk little flood seems likely, especially through Somerset county. In the outlying portions of the city, where the arrangements to carry off the surface water are not of the best, the streets have become canals. Pedestrians, not provided with boots or rubbers are enjoying a rather moist time of it.

The snow is disappearing rapidly under the combined influences of the rain and a moderate temperature. On the streets where the water has had a chance to run off, most of the ice and slush has disappeared from the middle of the roadway. The heavy rain of last evening was instrumental in carrying off a good deal of it.

If the stories of the weather bureau men are to be believed, the rain is to cease this afternoon and clearing conditions will follow tonight. While there will be a slight fall of temperature attendant on the departure of the storm, the next two days will see the mercury up again.

Surmising that Tuesday's rain storm would result in flooded streets unless the gutters and culverts were cleared, Street Commissioner Gavett had gangs of men at this work all day. The result was plainly apparent this morning, when it could be seen that most of the streets in the more thickly populated parts of the city were clear and the water was running freely.

A number of streets which drain into Cedar brook are flooded owing to that usually diminutive stream being phenomenally high. Putnam avenue is full of running water from side to side, North avenue beyond Berckman street is under water and other streets in that section are almost as full. Clinton avenue beneath the railroad bridge is under water several feet deep and Front street from DeKalb to Rock avenues is blockaded. Everything possible is being done to alleviate the condition and this may be accomplished by nightfall.

Tuesday night's storm again left the local trolley company in a condition unfit for operating cars. This time it is the blockading of tracks by water. In the eastern section of the city the tracks are covered to a depth of several feet and beneath Richmond street bridge, the water reached the floors.

No cars are being operated on the Elizabeth-Plainfield line as it would mean nothing else but burned out motors. At Cranford and Garwood, the water is even higher than in this city.

On the Front street line, the cars have difficulty in getting beyond DeKalb avenue, in the dip which extends to Rock avenue. In this other lines there is no delay although late last night the cars were running on the ragged schedule which has predominated for the past week or more.

The heavy rain greatly interfered with the linemen in the employ of the local electric light company and as a result a large number of circuits were unfit for use. At times the entire city was in darkness owing to crossed wires, making the walk home of late quite exciting, anything but enjoyable one. The repair work is being pushed vigorously and the management promises a complete restoration of service this evening.

Broke Leg in Fall.

Frank Cawley, aged thirty-nine years, who gave his residence as Oswego, N. Y., was taken to the hospital yesterday at 5:30 o'clock, suffering with a fractured leg. He said that he fell while walking home. The leg is broken near the knee. Mr. Cawley is a moulder and works in one of the local shops.

J. P. Laire, of LaGrande avenue, is detained at his home with a severe cold.

The Sports and Athletes

THERE may come a time when the up-to-date prize fighter will have such a sense of the utilitarian that he will come around to your yard and saw the wood, bale your hay, roll your lawn, plow a ten-acre lot or furnish power for a threshing machine. Time was when these disciples of the strenuous confined their efforts at conditioning and training to gymnasium work, punching the bag, swinging Indian clubs and exercising with dumb bells and the weights. Now the system of training includes outdoor work, plenty of cross-country runs, wielding an ax, pushing heavy rollers, climbing fences and barns, and wrestling with sturdy young steers, chasing sheep, trimming trees, carrying in coal, shoveling snow—anything that will tax the physical strength of the pugilist and assist in building up his system to stand the test of the terrific exercise of the ring.

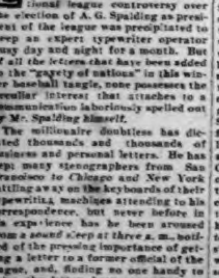
No trainer of a muscular pugilist would presume to dictate too closely to his charge the quality of work to be done, although he would insist upon his performing the same amount of work to be done. What would be an easy task for the "boiler-maker" champion, Jim Jeffries, who weighs 225 pounds when "hard as iron and drawn fine for a battle," would be too much for feather-weight champion "Young Corbett." Both might spend hours pushing a lawnmower or a heavy iron roller, but a 126-pound man could not be expected to load and unload two wagons of freight, split a cord of wood and run on a dog trot over seven miles of broken country with as little physical cost as would a heavyweight of great strength and remarkable endurance.

Recently in training for a battle with Peter Maher, "Sailor Tom" Sharkey "farmed himself out" to the people near his training headquarters, and, according to the critics, the deeds performed by the newly pugilist were of sufficient importance to be registered. All were strictly on the utilitarian order and the effort made gratuitously, saved the recipient of the work the cost of engaging workmen to do the same.

"He broke all of the lumps in my plowed land," said one man. "It would be a waste of good strength to have a man able to become a human harrow spend time pounding a leather bag." And so they talked. But the real figure upon the whole tribe of pugilists in training being confined in one inclosure, some day, where the combined energy of the hard-working athletes may be conserved and put to some useful purpose. But it will be a difficult problem to solve. The minute the pugilist suspects that he is working he will abandon that style of training and take up some indifferent gymnasium work.



ENOUGH correspondence has been given to the public since the National league controversy over the election of A. G. Spalding as president of the league was precipitated to keep an expert typewriter operator busy day and night for a month. But of all the letters that have been added to the "gayety of nations" in this wireless baseball tangle, none possesses the peculiar interest that attaches to a communication laboriously spelled out by Mr. Spalding himself.

The millionaire doubtless has dictated thousands and thousands of business and personal letters. He has kept many stenographers busy from San Francisco to Chicago and New York rattling away on the keyboards of their typewriting machines attending to his correspondence, but never before in his experience has he been aroused from a sound sleep at three a. m. notified of the pressing importance of getting a letter to a former official of the league, and, finding no one handy to write the letter, been compelled to knock up an old machine that had been stored in his hotel room, puzzle over the keyboard and by diligently punching the letters, succeeding after 40 minutes of perspiring work in producing an excuse for a letter.

"It was by all means the most judicious incident that ever came up in a National league meeting," said one of the magnates, who was there. "The papers could have made an interesting cartoon of A. G. Spalding sitting on the edge of his bed, but partially dressed, his hair disheveled, and working like a good fellow with his index fingers whenever he found the letter that he wished to inscribe on the paper. How he puffed and grunted as he worked to get the sheet of letter paper into the machine. The capital letter shift was mastered only after he had begun 'my dEAr sIR.' It was worth the salary of a typewriter for a month to see the newly-elected head of a big baseball organization trying to write the order on Nick Young requesting the transfer of the league's archives stored in the famous iron-bound trunk, to Mr. Young's son Robert, who would act as custodian of the same pending further orders from President Spalding. If that letter could be reproduced by the Freedmans-Bureau-Robinson faction of the National league—all the "bring line, where the verbal and written shot and shell," as Spalding says, are flying thick and fast—it would be as cataclysmal in its effect as "an explosion of dynamite in a stone quarry."

And after all, that letter written in the dusk of a hotel room — there was just enough light to see the paper— and at such an uncanny time in the night, did not get very far. Mr. Spalding changed his mind about the son of the deposed president of the National league maintaining the custodianship of the archives and, calling a friendly strong-armed Celtic porter, he ordered the trunk stored where he could keep an eye on it. Subsequently, when the supreme court of New York ordered the return of the trunk and contents to Nick Young, "Typewriter" Spalding wore a grin which seemed, to the spectators to mean "Better machine operators than I am may have copied the contents of those papers." As George Ade might say, the moral is "Not every man who can sign his name to a check for $100,000 is a good typewriter operator."

THE first wrestling champion of the year is John Pienning, familiarly known to followers of the sport as the "Butcher Boy." By defeating the latest aspirant for American gold and the title of champion of the western heisphere, Nachad, the "Awful Turk," Pienning enters upon a field that, like the soil tilled by the farmer, will be responsive in proportion to the amount of work put upon it. Ernest Roeber, champion wrestler, did not care to persevere in the world of the matted arena and relinquished his hold upon the title to the winner of the Pienning-Nachad bout. "I have retired," says Roeber. "Wrestling has brought me many honors, little money and—a little notoriety. It is experiencing a boom in some parts of the United States, while in other places you would be about as successful as a money-maker in wrestling as a polar bear would be hunting fish in the Nile river."

It cannot be denied that there was great interest in the "Butcher Boy"-Nachad bout. Both men were very strong—each has a sufficient amount of skill and science to make every exhibition participated in of intense interest to patrons of the sport. No one in the big list of critics of Champion Pienning has accused him of hippodromeing, and hippodromeing is the electrohe that penetrated to the vital parts of the sport of wrestling and killed it in America.

Turkey clings to wrestling as a grand sport. It must be because of the skill that has been put into such an invasion of the United States in the last few years by the Mussulmans, all seeking wrestling honors. Yousouf, the original "Terrible Turk," departed with few new honors and loaded down with gold. His career and his name fell on the floor of the Atlantic. Nonrallah, another Turk, essayed to starve the Americans, but his career as a champion was soon ended. Nachad came to our shores and captured United States that he was unmindful of the financial side of the sport. He cared little whether or not he gathered in any American gold, as his family in Constantinople had sufficient riches to occasionally loan a few bags of gold to the sultan. All he wanted was the championship, so that he could return to his country with the burden of new honors. Now that when Nachad returns to Constantinople the boys in the streets will shun him as a defeated wrestler. But that might be called sentiment. Unless all signs fail, the "Butcher Boy" may retain his title for the years, for the very good reason that unless he cares to relinquish it, as did Roeber, he will have no opportunity to lose it in contest. The supply of "Terrible Turks" seems to have failed.

THE SUMMER HATS.

They Will Have Irregular Brims and Be Worn Off the Face.

The indications are that the fashionable hats next summer will be worn off the face. The edges will be very irregular, and the hat will be tilted a little to one side by means of a band of velvet bearing a big bow. Floral trimmings are to be much used, and the inevitable bow of lace or velvet will droop over the hair in the back.

The large plateau toques, when kept flat and slightly tilted to one side, are charming in front, but hideous in the back. The prettiest toques of this style are of chiffon, draped with lace and relieved here and there by touches of fur or velvet.

Wreaths of autumn leaves are combined with roses with very good effect. Large bows of wired lace are very smart on tucked black chiffon hats.

The proper thing for summer will be to have the hat match the gown, or at least repeat in some particular the leading color of the gown.

A smart hat of chiffon is shown in the cut. It is laid in soft folds both as regards the brim and the crown, which is low and flat. The hat is tilted to one side with a wide velvet band, which is hidden by a cluster of flowers. The hat is simply trimmed with a cluster of flowers and a drooping black velvet bow.

WRINKLES OF FASHION.

Loose Fronts, Fluffy Vests and Much Trimmed Skirts.

Everything is worn loose in front. The blouse is extensively pouched, and the new belts still pull down far below the waist line in front, giving a corresponding short effect in the back. The coats are fashionable worn open and filled in with much lace and a pouched or crowded vest. Even the short boleros have tabbed ends falling far below the waist or revers so arranged that the ends flare out beyond the natural lines of the body.

Wide bands of velvet are used to trim the latest tailor mades. These bands of velvet are frequently outlined by narrow braid.

Tunic skirts showing a double or triple effect are the latest cry from Paris; so is the five flounce skirt. As its name implies, this is composed of five ruffles gored and graduated from narrow to wide as they draw nearer the bottom of the skirt. The edges of these ruffles are heavily stitched.

Panels are once more to be seen, and to lace they form a very rich decoration for the front of a ball or dinner gown.

The smart bolero in the illustration may be made by any clever woman. It is the latest Paris model. There are tucks on each shoulder, which, farther down, are held into two clusters. The top of the sleeves is laid in tucks and the fullness disposed into a tight fitting cuff. The fronts are cut long and fall over the stitched belt. This is of white cloth or taffeta to match the white appliques, which lend an air of chic to the garment. Under the open front are worn a vest and high collar of white taffeta or cloth stitched, and the fronts of the jacket are held in place over this by lacings of narrow black velvet.

A pretty model for a skirt to be worn with this should have a wide flounce headed by five folds stitched flat, the flounce being appliqued with the embroidery.

LACE ACESSORIES.

Guipure Lace Is Used For Wabits, Jackets and Evening Wraps.

Many pretty lace boleros are easily converted into dinner waists by tacking them deftly over a white satin slip with a suggestion of chiffon and a pointed waistband. Some of the old remnants of lace now on sale make smart little sack coats lined with silk or satin and even edged with fur. A confection of this sort makes a charming wrap for evening wear.

Louis Quinze jackets of lace are among the smart winter thin things which will be also much worn next summer. Heavy guipure lace is best for this purpose, and the jacket can be made separately to be worn with different gowns. Some of these jackets are trimmed with embroideries, others with appliqued flowers and still again others with medallions of tucked and painted chiffon.

Evening wraps of lace are cut after the fashion of very loose Chinese coats.

The Louis XV. gown in the illustration is made of pink crepe de chine and lace. There are a fichu of pink chiffon and deep elbow frills of the same. The rest of the waist is in the form of a lace jacket made of all over guipure lace. The skirt has a full flounce headed by a wide band of the lace. The belt is of panne and is passed through slits in the front of the jacket.

BLACK GOWNS.

A Smart Dress of This Color Should Be In Every Woman's Wardrobe.

A dress of black lace edged with a thick ruching of net, gauze or chiffon is charming over white satin. The neck can be cut decollete for evening wear, and for day occasions a guimpe can be made to wear with it. These black gowns are the most useful a woman can have.

Pretty and serviceable black gowns are being made of black crepe de chine much tucked and combined with black velvet chiffon and jet.

Many of the new French models for skirts show box plaited backs and not only single and double plaits, but quite a cluster of plaits with a box plait in the center. Some of the skirts even have slight bathers. The newest slips to wear under semitransparent skirts are made with deep flounces and are put on full at the back. They are finished with a plaited frill laid on quite at the edge of the flounce.

The black crepe de chine gown in the sketch is made in semipetticoat fashion. The continuous tucked effect gives it the princesse look. It is cut decollete but the bare effect of the neck is partly hidden by perpendicular applications of jet held in place by means of a transparent jet collar. The sleeves pouch into a considerable fullness and are held into a cuff of jet. The skirt has a gored flounce headed by the jetted application.

DRESS TRIFLES.

Parasols, Tea Jackets and Embroidered Waistcoats.

Parasols can be bought almost for nothing at this time of the year. White muslin ones are always fashionable, and Persian patterns promise to be all the style.

Tea jackets are very fashionable in the marquis style with embroidered waistcoats, and embroidering these constitutes a dainty bit of fancy work. These embroidered waistcoats are also much used with tailor mades which have open front jackets.

Several well known society women have the pretty fad of always wearing a certain kind of flower no matter what time of the year it is. This idea can be carried out by the girl in moderate circumstances if she uses artificial flowers on her evening dresses. It is a chic French notion to loop in ribbons or silver cord with the flowers, and a dainty bunch of artificial blossoms so arranged goes far toward renovating an old evening dress.

The creation in the sketch is worn in "Frocks and Frills." It is an empire robe of black point d'esprit over silver gauze, with an applique of ivy leaves in cut out velvet. The gown is finished at the bottom with an insertion of pink chiffon frills and chiffon roses. The little simulated bolero is of drawn and wired silk, a couple of pink tulle rosettes being placed immediately in front, from which depend little tassels.

EVENING GOWNS.

Floral Trimmings Combined With Lace and Ribbon.

The evening sleeve of the moment is a matter of taste. It is made with one single puff to the elbow or tight fitting a la Marie Antoinette with a frill. Some sleeves are composed of seven or eight accordion plaited frills. On many gowns there are no sleeves at all, only shoulder straps composed of jeweled chains or ropes of flowers. If a wom- an has good arms, she should display them; if not, there are transparencies of chiffon and sheer effects.

Frocks of gray chiffon are worn by those who are in half mourning and by many who are not. There seems to be a crazy just now for these soft pale gray frocks. They are relieved with violets or pale blue flowers.

Floral trimmings are much the style and with dainty touches of lace and ribbon form admirable trimmings for evening frocks. Roses, chrysanthemums and orchids are made so natural that they almost defy detection.

The French dress in the illustration is of pale yellow mousseline. The skirt has a deep tunic effect, the edge of each tunic being outlined with a hand painted design. The decollete waist is held in place by narrow straps of velvet, and the half sleeves are of lace and mousseline. There is an odd tunic or bordress effect of cream guipure lace. The corsage is daintily finished with a cluster of tinted yellow blossoms.

The Canadian Government as a Butter Maker

A Dairy Business Conducted Under Governmental Auspices With Great Success.

MORE than 1,000,000 pounds of golden yellow butter is being turned out of the Canadian government creameries, located in the territories of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, each year.

Back of this statement there is an interesting history of the development of an industry of great importance to the farmers of the territories. Both state and county governments have attempted much the same thing in this country, but have failed to win that measure of success which seems to have been met with in Canada, though the success that is now seen there did not come until the experiment had very nearly failed because of a lack of experience, not in buttter making, but in financeering the project.

It was in 1897 that the agricultural department of the Canadian government first took hold of the dairy interests of the western territories. Previous to that time several private creameries had been constructed, and an attempt made to operate them, but in nearly every case they had proven failures. Settlement had not at that time advanced far enough to afford a sufficient production of cream to keep a creamery running if it had to depend upon any one locality. If, on the other hand, it could not turn out a considerable amount of butter each year, and so be able to do a large business, the margin of profit on a small business was not sufficient to live.

Out of these private creameries the farmers were getting but little. Many of them, in fact, were getting nothing, as the creameries were too far away for them to reach them without paying excessive freight charges on their cream, in addition to the risk they had to take of its souring before reaching the point of manufacture. These things created a demand for improved facilities for butter making, and the government undertook to supply the demand.

A special dairy commissioner's department was created as a feature of the agricultural department of the government, and to this was given an ample capital for the leasing of creameries already built, and for the building of others as the business warranted. To repay the government for building new creameries it was proposed to establish a sinking fund to which would be paid one cent per pound for all butter manufactured.

Political pull is not unknown in Canada, and inside of a few months the department was flooded with petitions for the establishment of creameries at every little hamlet in the territories, and with each petition there was brought to bear a certain amount of political pull that it was hard to withstand. It was no more possible for the department to have built and equipped all the creameries that were demanded than it would have been possible for them to have operated them successfully and profitably if they had been built, and the attempt to meet the demand came near proving disastrous to the whole enterprise. But a solution for the dilemma in which the department found itself was finally found, a solution as simple, and yet as potent, that it turned a seeming failure into immediate success.

The government ceased to build creameries, but instead attempted the operation of such as were built either by stock companies, individuals or municipalities, thus throwing the burden of construction upon those who insisted that their erection was necessary, and that their operation would prove profitable. At the same time the charges for manufacture and marketing were somewhat changed.

To-day there are in operation throughout these territories 18 creameries located at Chauvhelburg, Saltcrates, Yorkton, Moosomin, Whiteford, Greenfell, Is'Apelle, Regina, Moose Jaw Maple Creek, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, Calgary, Olds, Innisfail, Red Deer, Tindastoll, Wetaskiwin, Strathcona and Fort Saskatchewan. Of the dairy department of the government Calgary is the headquarters, and to this point is shipped all the product of the other creameries. Enormous cold-storage houses are provided there, and in these the butter is kept until the state of market warrants its sale.

To make these 18 creameries meet the demands of such a great expanse of territory as is included within the boundaries of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta a system of cream transportation has been arranged. At stated times a refrigerator car from each creamery makes the rounds of the railroad stations in the territory served by the creamery in which the farmer's cream is conveyed to the point of manufacture. The government arranges for and pays for this service, and assumes all liability for the cream when it has been delivered at the station platform.

From each lot of cream received a sample is taken and churned in a test churn. From this the value in butter is judged of the entire lot when it is manufactured into butter in the great churns. For this transportation of cream, the manufacture and marketing of butter the farmer is charged four cents per pound. If this *fails to meet the expense of op*eration the government makes up the deficiency, but when it more than pays the expense a dividend is paid the stockholders, individual or municipality owning the creamery plant and buildings.

During the summer season an advance price of ten cents per pound is paid the farmer monthly, and in winter an advance price of 15 cents per pound is paid monthly. Up to the present time the price realized by the farmer for all butter manufactured by the government has ranged between 17 and 18 cents per pound, and the difference is paid twice annually, the first of November and the first of May. A small portion of this amount from the sale of by-products with which the farmer is credited, and which is sold usually to individuals in the neighborhood of each creamery.

A market for the butter manufactured in these government creameries is found in British Columbia, in the Kootenay mining district, in the Klondike, in the far eastern countries and to the northwest mounted police, and is shipped in sealed tins of one, two and five pounds and in Australian butter boxes of 14, 28 and 56 pounds. Around each pound roll is a waxed paper bearing the government label.

Within the past year the department has attempted to find a market for western Canada eggs, and have met with considerable success, though on a small scale. An advance price of ten cents per dozen is paid the farmers monthly, but an average price of about 17 cents per dozen is being secured. The eggs are shipped to Calgary and held there in cold storage warehouses until the current price warrants their sale.

It Didn't Work.

"I would give a good deal if I wasn't absent-minded," said a well-known business man with a sigh. "I have tried all the so-called cures without success, and I suppose I must make the best of the situation, although it is awfully aggravating to have such a poor memory. The other day I read of a man, who from his account, often was placed in the same embarrassing position that I find myself so many times, through a poor memory. In his case he solved the difficulty by writing himself a postal card, thus jogging his memory.

"It struck me as being a mighty good idea, and I resolved to try it myself. I was engaged to dine at an important engagement to keep the day following, so I wrote a postal card: 'Don't forget engagement with Black.' Then I addressed it to myself and thought no more of it.

"The next day I remembered I failed to keep the appointment. I had forgotten to mail the postal."—Detroit Free Press.

THEY'RE ALL RIGHT.

In Their Own Estimation New Yorkers Are Perfect.

And, According to the Same Authority, There Is No Other City in the Wide World Like Their Own.

[Special New York Letter.]

"A BRACE of English mutton chops well done, a cup of—"

The telephone on the restaurant table at the side of the man who was getting ready to dine jingled viciously.

"Hello, hello there!" he screamed into the mouthpiece.

Then his face gradually changed. At the first tinkle of the bell the lines of his mouth were drawn hard and deep and as he put the receiver to his ear the skin on his forehead was creased with wrinkles. Distinctly the words came to him:

"Jones has ordered his U. P. stock closed—100½; Smith places 1,000 shares Steel—41⅝."

The deep lines broaden into a suspicion of a smile. The waiter was at the side of the table, napkin in hand, silent and respectful.

"A brace of mutton chops well done, a cup of coffee and a piece of apple pie," said the diner, and as the obedient one was departing on a run the broker yelled after him: "Rush it!"

He is one of the million who eat on the jump every day—or rather who do not eat, but bolt their food between spasms of nervous prostration while in search of the ever nimble dollar in the jungle of commerce and speculation of New York.

New York business men take time to eat? They certainly do not. That is why you may see the telephone stands on the tables in many restaurants near Wall street which are patronized by those who have not time to eat—who have barely time to live. This is the pace of a city which has within the last few years become the most hustling, driving, nervous metropolis in the world.

Not long ago Chicago was accounted the most bustling city in the business sense on earth. But New York has outstripped it. To keep up the pace the ambitious citizens of Gotham have overdone the matter. It is true the business hours are shorter in New York than in Chicago, and it is because of this that an effort is made to crowd as much work as possible into a short space of time.

Although New York business men are great readers of newspapers they find it difficult to get the time to keep informed on current events. They own and but little at home as the social demands are too strenuous. They cannot read in the office, as it is all they can do to get through the work in the short business hours. The result is they read the papers on the street cars, on the elevated trains and on the ferry boats and the steam cars. Only about half of them get seats. The other half read standing up.

Three hundred thousand men may be seen every business morning hanging on to straps reading newspapers. And many thousand women, jammed together in the aisles and crowded into seats, are reading newspapers, too. Is it any wonder that the afternoon papers prints so many editions?

But the busy side is only one feature of the New Yorker. He has many characteristics that are different from anything that can be found outside of New York city. He talks New York, he walks New York, and he looks New York. And he doesn't care for anything besides New York. If something happes over in Brooklyn—well, if it is especially interesting, he tolerates a brief recital of it. Although Brooklyn is in Greater New York it doesn't rate equine in business it is not Manhattan. If there is something stirring in Jersey City he passes it by unless it is an astounding sensation. Nothing short of an earthquake reported from Chicago can make him move a hair.

Not long ago I met a typical New York woman why New Yorkers were not interested in anything outside of New York. She seemed surprised at my question and asked me in turn. In a tone that closed the conversation:

"Why should they be?"

The New Yorker is thoroughly wrapped up in his "Little Old New York," as he is pleased to call it. His ideals there are some rather fine cities on the other side of the Atlantic, but he insists that all the greatness and goodness and beauty of America are in New York.

The talk of the native New Yorker is a cross between the down-east Yankee and the westerner, with a mixture of the south. The New Yorker does not recognize the right of the latter to have space in the alphabet. He chops up his sentences and is not always strictly correct in his speech. Although usually very proper and formal before strangers, he becomes quite familiar with his acquaintances, and addresses his friends affectionately as "Billy," and "Jimmie," and "Tommie." He loves nicknames, not only for people, but for localities. As a result of this, nearly every place in a city has two or more names, such as Harlem, Washington Heights, Little Italy, Columbia Heights, Cathedral Heights, the Manhattan valley, the Ghetto and a dozen others.

And these different localities also have residents with their own peculiarities. You can tell a woman who lives in Washington Heights by her walk. She is so used to climbing the hills that she swings her right arm, which is held stiff as a pump handle, and is used as a sort of piston rod in mounting the high places, even when she is on Broadway or the Sixth avenue shopping district.

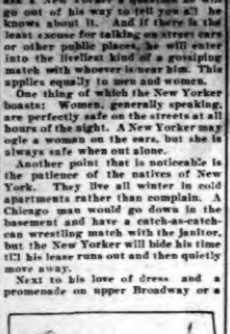
Another type is the business woman of New York, and she is rapidly becoming a distinct species of a city which has within the last few years become the most hustling, driving, nervous metropolis in the world.



THE BUSINESS WOMAN.

spin in an automobile on Fifth avenue, the New Yorker dotes on eating. It seems as if the average New Yorker ate his meals at the restaurant. There are more restaurants there than in any other city, in comparison to the population, in the world. Even the cheap places try to imitate the big hotels. They serve table d' hote for 25 cents, and they do it with as much eclat as if the waiter gave you a check for ten dollars at the end of it.

New Yorkers spend their money lavishly. They eat a great deal; they drink a great deal, and they are continually seeking amusements, when not sleeping or working. For the very rich people it is an ideal city, as every luxury on earth can be obtained here if one has the money to pay for it. For the working people it is also good, as very cheap quarters and very cheap ways of living may be found. The very poor people fare better here, probably, than in almost any other great city, as the rich are charitable and thoughtful. But for the middle class, for the average man on an average salary, it is a long, hard pull and a struggle.

FREDERICK BOYD STEVENSON.

SNOW FROM A CLEAR SKY.

Drifting Clouds Cover the Landscape Among the Heights of the Adirondacks.

The most wonderful snowstorms of all that may be seen every winter in the Adirondacks are those that precede it when the sky is cloudless. Of these there are two varieties. Every week or two we would see what looked like a fog form about the distant hills, and then come drifting across the creek valley. Doubtless it was a real snow-laden cloud that had been drifting along until it struck our level (1,300 feet above the sea) in the Adirondacks, when the conditions became favorable for the release of its feathery burden, says a writer in Scribner's. We saw these clouds fill the air with flakes that were driven along almost horizontally by a strong gale, although the tops of our old hemlocks and spruce rose into the clear air and obstructed sunlight above the 1,500 feet level of the snow-producing air stratum. We even saw the snow so thick in the air about us that the trunks of trees six feet above the earth were not visible, although the tree tops could be seen, and the sun shone down through the shallow stratum with strength enough to cast distinct shadows. We have stood on a quiet, sunlit hilltop and looked down into a valley less than 100 feet below us, where a snowstorm was raging with violence, and, the temperature was frigid.

IN THE GOOD OLD DAYS.

When the White House Lot Was Converted Into a Skating Pond for the Use of Everybody.

"Oh, for the good old days," sighed an old lady at the breakfast table of a Washington boarding house recently. The sudden cold spell had set her to thinking, says the Washington Star.

"I remember when the fire engines used to be taken down to the basin, a line of hose run from them up to the white lot, and after the basin had been built water pumped on the grass until it reached a foot or more in depth. One night's cold breath was enough to freeze the ice to a thickness strong enough to hold all the skaters who wanted to participate. It was a merry sight to see the hundreds gliding over the smooth surface. In those days it was very unusual to get any sort of skating on the river, and what little there was made the sport extremely dangerous.

"If my memory doesn't fail me, tickets were sold for ten cents by the firemen who had dragged the engines to the basin, and the proceeds went to some good and quite a pretty sum was realized.

"Those were the days when everybody seemed to enjoy themselves in a society that was not exclusive, and there were no lines drawn at the white lot skating pond."

A HUNTING EPISODE.

Bad Marksmanship Is Not Invariably a Disadvantage as Is Here Seen.

Two hunters who were shooting in New Jersey were not equally matched as regards skill in shooting.

One of them bagged many birds, while the other did not get a feather, says Judge.

"What, ho!" said the first, "but you are a duffer. Why don't you practice with a pop-gun? You could not hit a barrel if you poked the end of your fowling-piece in the bung-hole."

The other said nothing, but he gazed sadly on his empty bag and enviously at the birds his companion had slaughtered.

As they were about to start for home they met an affable stranger, who asked: "What luck?"

"I killed 23 birds," said the good shot, "while this lobster here has not killed one. Isn't he a chump to carry such a heavy gun all day?"

"Well, I am not sure," said the affable stranger. "I am a game warden and this is the closest season. Those birds will cost you ten dollars apiece."

Moral:—A bird in the hand bag is sometimes worth a whole bunch in the bushes.

FEW PAID WOMEN DRIVERS.

One Occupation, at Least, of Which Man Remains in Undisputed Supremacy.

One occupation that women do not appear to take to is that of driving. It is not unusual to see women driving pleasure vehicles, runabouts, phaetons and the sort of thing, in the parks and uptown avenues, but it is very unusual to see a woman driving any sort of a business vehicle in the lower part of the city, says the New York Sun.

A man who has been for a dozen years has taken him here and there about the city says that in all that time he has never seen a woman driving a truck, and only two women driving wagons. And in one of these two cases the wagon was apparently from a garden truck farm somewhere just off Manhattan Island, leaving just one regular business wagon belonging here that had a woman driver.

Women have found their way into many occupations that formerly were monopolized by men; but they certainly have not interfered very much with man's monopoly of the work of driving.

Fined by an Icicle.

An icicle, dropping into a barrel of unslaked lime, started a fire in a row of flat buildings at the new state capitol at Jackson, Miss., a few days ago. The watchman turned in an alarm. The firemen threw water upon the fire, but that caused hundreds of barrels of lime to ignite, and the buildings were speedily destroyed, the department devoting its attention to saving the new structure and adjoining buildings.

gained by a single gored flounce or several narrow gored ruffles edged with bias folds. Ruffles all tucked appear on many of the spring costumes. These flaring effects are to go with the ever increasing size of the sleeves.

Rounded revers and fronts are the order of the day. Nearly all the dressy jackets are made open front and the space filled in with a soft front of lace, chiffon and brocade.

One of the latest skirts is box plaited all the way around. Each box plait is trimmed with fine strappings, which are apparently buttoned to the skirt. There is a stocked yoke around the hips.

A simple and at the same time stylish gown is shown in the sketch. It is of black veiling dotted in white, and it is made up over a lining of white silk. The vest is trimmed both back and front and is trimmed with three wide bands of black chantilly. The sleeves are tight fitting to the elbow, where they develop into puffs. The skirt has a full flounce headed by a band of the lace.

NET AND POINT D'ESPRIT.

They Make Useful Gowns and Separate Skirts.

A point d'esprit net gown is by far the most useful evening dress for a young girl. This fabric is a decided improvement on the tulles and vellings, for, in spite of the somewhat ethereal appearance of point d'esprit, it is very durable. A very handsome effect can be given by the addition of many frills bound with narrow satin or velvet ribbon.

At some of the shops separate skirts of point d'esprit and net can be bought ready made. These are especially useful in black, white or cream and may be worn with chiffon or lace waists for dinner or informal occasions.

The all lace frock has by no means departed. There has been a revival of it this winter. The finest dresses are very magnificent. The underskirt consists of endless flounces of accordion plaited chiffon. The overdrapery of lace is often mingled with bands of mink or sable. Jet and beading of every description are to be worn on the summer lace gowns.

The smart gown in the illustration is of black veiling over white silk. The waist is decolete, but has long, tight fitting sleeves. There are three tiny velvet straps over the shoulders. Both waist and skirt are profusely ornamented with black chiffon appliques in a decided flower pattern.

CIVILIZING THE INDIANS.

Orders for the Males to Have Their Hair Cut—Painting Faces and Holding Dances Prohibited.

The commissioner of Indian affairs has issued an order which in effect compels all male Indians in the United States to have their hair cut frequently, or at least not to wear it long, and as the Carlisle football team is not excepted the order probably applies to them, too. Commissioner Jones hopes by the order to assist the wards of the government in their advancement toward civilization, says the Washington report.

The order is addressed to the various Indian agents throughout the country, and directs them to induce the male Indians under their charge to cut their hair, using force only when necessary.

He says that it will require considerable tact and perseverance to carry out the order, and suggests the withholding of supplies from recalcitrant Indians until they will comply. The officer in charge of those who are employed by the government in any capacity will appear with short locks. No long-haired Indians are to be employed.

If any Indian "becomes obstreperous about his hair" a short course of treatment in the guardhouse after clipping their hair, he thinks, will effect a cure.

The order also prohibits Indians of both sexes from painting their faces and forms, holding of dances and so-called Indian feasts, and directs the agents to encourage the Indians in adopting citizens' clothing instead of the Indian costume and blanket. The agents are also directed to report to the commissioner before June 30 what progress they have made in the suppression of the evils.

THE ENGLISH KING'S WINE.

New Labels Have Been Made for the Stock of Each of Edward's Palaces.

One result of the accession of Edward VII. to the throne of England, which should be of interest to connoisseurs of wine, is that it has become necessary to prepare new labels for the king's wine, one for each palace. The new labels bear the royal crown, the initials "E. R." and the name of the palace as "Windsor castle." These will be placed on all the wine purchased for the future, the old labels on the wine laid down in the last reign will not be disturbed, for they are an interesting testimony of age, says a London paper.

The late queen had two labels, the one with "V. R." on it she used throughout the early part of her reign and the one with "V. R. I." was made after the royal titles act. Wine which bears the former label must have been in the royal cellars for years. Similarly that wine in the cellars at Marlborough house is all marked with a label bearing the prince of Wale's feathers, the initials "P. W." and the name "Marlborough house." This will not be disturbed, and in view of future contingencies no new label will be introduced. Another peculiarity of the royal cellars which is worth noticing is the fact that the bottles of champagne bear no label but the royal label. This is due to the fact that the wine is brought in hogsheads from the manufacturer and bottled in the royal cellars.

MISTAKES EASY TO MAKE.

An Old Engineer Relates One of His Early Experiences in a Bad Smash-Up on the Road.

"It is a pretty easy thing to make a mistake in railroading," said an old engineer as he thought of the recent wrecks on the Wabash and Iron Mountain roads in which so many lives were lost, statgs the Mexican Herald. "As I understand it, those wrecks were caused by defective orders. The train dispatcher sent out his orders directing one train to pass the other at a certain station. The operator did not copy the order on his manifold book, as he should have done. Instead, he wrote it on a slip of paper and handed it to the engineer. But in making the copy the operator made a mistake and changed the name of the station. The collision was the only natural result.

"An accident just like that happened to me once when I was working in the service. I received orders to pass a train at the next station. I was just pulling out when I saw the headlight of a locomotive looming up close before me. Did I jump? I guess I did! The engines were badly smashed up, but, fortunately, none of the passengers were badly hurt, as I had reversed my engine before I jumped and the other engine was slowing down for the station when the collision came. An examination showed that the original order had been for our trains to pass at the station which I had just started to leave."

PARIS GREEN AND LADY BUGS.

The Technical and Learned Decision of a Kentucky Judge in a Curious Damage Case.

Judge Sterling B. Toney, of the circuit court of Jefferson county, Kentucky, recently rendered an opinion in a curious case, says the New York Tribune. A man was employed last July to sprinkle paris green on potato vines to kill lady bugs, and on account of the heat he opened his shirt with the result that he was poisoned by the paris green. He sued his employer, who entered a demurrer to the petition, and the learned judge sustained the demurrer for the following reasons. The plaintiff had no right in foro conscientiae or in foro externo to make an indecent exposure of his person while killing lady bugs, and the plaintiff exceeded the scope of his employment in sprinkling paris green elsewhere than on the potato vines, as his special and exclusive agency was to kill lady bugs by sanding the shade of said potato vines; the plaintiff was in allowing the defendant's paris green to come in contact with his flesh, instead of with the flesh of the ladybugs, was unauthorized and ultra vires; the mental and physical suffering of which the plaintiff complained was the result of his own wrong in misapplying the defendant's paris green to purposes other than those for which he was employed to apply it, and, besides, in damnum absque injuria; the plaintiff, in opening his clothes and exposing himself to the lady bugs and the paris green, was guilty of contributory negligence; the plaintiff knew as well as the defendant that paris green was poisonous, and, if he did not know that paris green was a poison, then this suit should not have been brought in his name, but by a committee appointed to represent him.

SPEED OF FIRE LADDIES.

Erroneous Ideas Regarding the Time Required to Get Ready for Actual Service.

People who reach the scene of a fire about the time the alarm is sounded are frequently heard to complain of the length of time required for the engines to get into operation. It is nothing unusual for excited spectators to say the engines were 30 minutes late. The records of the department, however, show that such statements cannot possibly be true. Chief Dutton is having regular weekly drills and the time made by the companies on each run is proof that most of the complaints are groundless. It is shown by the records that the average time employed in getting the horses harnessed is eight seconds, and 20 seconds is the average time required to get to the street, says the Chicago Chronicle.

The best time made during the recent drills was recorded by No. 1 chemical company, when the animals were ready to start from the house in six seconds. It required 11 seconds to get the three horses of Truck D ready to make a start. The trucks are somewhat longer than the engines and more time is required for the animals to get into position.

It is probably the best time on record was made by Truck A company the day of President McKinley's first inauguration, when members of three New York departments, who were there as spectators, found the horses ready to leave the house in six seconds from the first stroke of the bell.

FULL-BLOOD INDIAN BABIES.

There Are But Few Coming Into Existence and the Number Is Decreasing.

The present generation of full-blooded Indian babies is interesting from many points of view. In the first place, says the Cosmopolitan, there is no doubt that in a few years it will be no more full-blooded Indians born, as even those women of pure Indian blood are rapidly marrying either white persons or Indians whose blood is largely mixed with that of the whites. Then, too, these little copper-colored babies are something of an anachronism, for many of them preserve, to a great extent, the bringing up and training known to their fathers, and at the age of 13 or 14 find themselves well versed in the arts of love. The translation of the medicine men and expert in the use of the scalping knife, but with a lamentable lack of subjects upon whom to practice their skill. Moreover, these pure-blooded children inherit, in addition to large sums from the sale of lands to the government, or some valuable reservation property, so that many of them have more suitors than Penelope. It is only on the reservations of the far southwest that the genuine little redskin can now be found. There are now among the 20 tribes only 3,000 full-blooded Indian children. In these same tribes there are more than 20,000 children through whose veins runs a drop or two of white blood. They are healthy, fat youngsters, and, despite their rough usage, grow up to be strong men and women.

A PATHETIC EXPERIENCE.

An Instance Where Wireless Telegraphy Was Anything But a Blessing.

A pathetic experience has been that of Capt. Jorgensen, of the lightship on Nantucket shoals. That lightship is anchored out in the Atlantic some distance from Nantucket. Communication with the island of Nantucket is kept up by wireless telegraphy, says the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

The other day the mysterious electric impulses from the land informed Capt. Jorgensen that his beloved 19-year-old daughter at Braintree was dangerously ill. At the time and since the wild Atlantic was sending its mighty rollers against the lightship, and it was impossible for the father to get away from it. Every day the wireless messages came freighted with gloomier tidings, until the announcement of the young girl's death was made. And still the captain could not be taken from his floating but anchored prison. The winds and the waves raged about the lightship, and no vessel could get near enough to take him off.

This is one of the cases in which wireless telegraphy was not a blessing. Many hours of mental anguish would have been averted had Capt. Jorgensen not had intelligence daily from his daughter's deathbed.

GUTTA PERCHA FROM PEAT.

A Discovery in Germany That May Cheapen the Cost of Great Ocean Cables.

Advices from Germany are to the effect that a very satisfactory artificial gutta percha, to be derived from peat, and great things are expected to result from the discovery in cheapening the cost of insulating ocean cables. Gutta percha is the only substance thus far discovered for protecting a wire against the corrosive action of salt water, and the product is not only limited, but is controlled by an English firm of cable manufacturers, who own the forests in the East Indies from which the gutta percha is obtained.

Experiments to find a substitute have been going on for years throughout the world, but thus far nothing has been entirely successful. The price of gutta percha has been advanced from time to time as the demands of the manufacturers of golf balls, which has almost doubled the cost of cable manufacture, says the New York Times, and if this German inventor is able to make a really good insulator out of peat he will make a very important contribution to the world's economy, for peat can be found in almost every country on the globe in quantities almost unlimited.

SEEKING A WORD.

Officials Are Seeking a Designation for Messages Transmitted by Wireless Telegraphy.

Marconi's invention has set the officials of the navy and signal service, where it is now in actual use, hunting for a new word, writes a Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun.

They are casting about for a short and simple term to stand for the laborious expression now employed for a message transmitted by wireless telegraph."

One genius of the war department suggests "Atmospherogram." A student of natural forces in the navy believes that "Etherogram" would be better. "Aerogram" and "Airgram" quite as convenient as "telegram and sublegram," find much favor, but Gen. Greeley, chief of the signal service, has not taken kindly enough to these to advocate their use in official reports, and therefore their adoption into the language.

"Marconigram" has been suggested by an ingenious layman, who says that the matter what term is officially coined, the popular word will always be "wireless."

THE WORD "PLEASE."

In England It Is Considered a Back-number and a Word for Servants Only.

An American just returned from two years' residence in England was recently speaking of the different treatment accorded the word "please" there and here. "In England 'please' is a servant's word solely; here gentlefolk use it as well," said the American, and when the other Americans said that they, having traveled themselves, knew that as well as she did, she added: "Yes, but you must realize it until you've tried to bring up children abroad. At home my youngsters had always been taught to say 'please.' In England I soon found out that they must not say it; if they did it stamped them as underbred. Now that we've returned to America the old school conservatives look askance at my children and observe sententiously: 'Those little girls don't say please.' I am in hopes that all parents in this country will follow suit and 'please' will become a back number, just as a good many years ago 'ma'am' and 'sir' became back numbers."

THE LEGISLATURE'S WORK.

According to the customs of the usual State Legislatures, it is now about time that the members of that august body settled down to work. An encouraging sign is that the first chapter of the New Jersey laws of 1903 has been entered upon the statute books. It provides for the expenses of the inauguration of Governor Murphy. These amounted to $16,977.74.

There is a host of bills before the two houses, many of which will undoubtedly disappear in committees never to be heard from again. Hundreds of bills are introduced every session without the slightest expectation of having them passed, introduced simply to please the constituents of some legislator. It is for the various committees to weed out such bills.

It so happens, however, that there are several quite important bills before the Legislature and every prospect that a number of others equally or even more important will be introduced before the session is over. There are several important things which the present Legislature should consider and these subjects will be dealt with in bills.

The most prominent event of the week at Trenton has been the selection of J. Willard Morgan, of Camden, as State comptroller. The selection was the unanimous choice of the Republican legislators at the caucus and the subsequent election, Tuesday, was merely a matter of form. While Mr. Morgan is not generally known throughout the State, he apparently is quite well known in Camden county. It is generally conceded, even by the conservative New York Tribune, that he is of that type commonly known as a "practical politician." He has sufficient wealth, however, not to require the aid of the $6,000 salary of the positionafor his own support.

UNDERGROUND WIRES.

The troubles to the telephone, telegraph and electric light wires in this city, which followed in the wake of last Friday's storm, served to demonstrate very clearly the need of placing more of these wires underground. The failing of the overhead wires not only served to inconvenience the people but it also added a danger to those who were abroad during the storm which might easily have proved fatal here as it did in other places.

The fact that many of the telephone wires were in underground conduits is all that prevented a complete demolition of the local 'phone service. While the storm worked havoc with the wires running from the distributing poles, it will be a comparatively easy matter to repair this damage and have the lines in working order again. It will be weeks before Elizabeth has its service in running order again. The wires there were overhead and are now heaped in confused masses in the streets. It will be necessary to put up entire new lines in most cases. That will require weeks. Had the system in Plainfield been more extended, the damage would have been still less.

The electric light wires run underground only in the business section. There the lights burned steadily while the rest of the city, where the wires were overhead, was in utter darkness. At midnight Friday night, the current was shut off in the outer circuits and the danger from the wires was thus eliminated. Had the conduits extended generally through the city, the lights would have been there at a time when they were most needed and pedestrians would not have been compelled to move with fear and trembling, expecting every moment to encounter a live wire.

Days like those follo-ing the storm were just the times when the 'phones were most needed. Of course, the telephone company could not be blamed. Nevertheless, an extension of the underground wires will largely tend to keep the system in working order and have it ready in time of need. Convenience as well as safety demand the extension of the conduits of the Plainfield Electric Light Company. After an experience like that of the last few days, the members of the Common Council will find that the people of Plainfield are almost a unit in advocating such action as will place all the wires where they belong, underground.

WATER WORKS PUT TO VOTE

Boroughites Will Decide the Question of Municipal Ownership of Water Works.

THE TAX BUDGET FIXED.

Lots of Important Business Done at Monday's Meeting of the Borough Council—Annual Reports Were Received—No Change in Size of Appropriations.

As predicted exclusively by The Daily Press, the Borough Council has placed the responsibility of disposing of the proposition of the municipal ownership of water works directly upon the citizens. A resolution to that effect was introduced at the adjourned special meeting of the body, held last Monday, and it was passed without a dissenting vote. The matter will come before the people at the coming election.

Other matters of importance which occupied the attention of the borough fathers were the making up of the annual budget and the question of consolidation of the borough and city. Councilman Northrup offered a resolution which in effect requests the representatives of Somerset county in the State Legislature to vote and work against any bill relating to the proposition which does not provide for a referendum. The idea of the councilman is that before the Legislature makes final disposition of the matter the people of the borough should have the right to vote upon the proposition. There was little debate in this connection and it was passed unanimously.

In regard to the report of the committee on municipal ownership suggesting that the water question be left to the wishes of the people, the reasons stated for the action were that there is much agitation of the question of consolidation and also that it was such a matter of importance that the advisability of the establishment of a plant should rightfully be decided by the voters.

The total amount of the budget as fettled upon is $19,600. Subdivided it is as follows: Police department, $5,000; fire department, $1,800; street department, $5,000; lights, $5,000; water, $1,300; poor, $1,500; incidentals, $1,000; Watchung avenue certificates, $1,000. These figures tally very closely with those of last year's budget. It was the effort of Mayor Smalley to keep down the estimates as much as possible and he was successful in doing so.

Tax Collector George F. Brown presented the following report covering the period between February 1 and February 15, the close of the fiscal year: Taxes and interest, $308.93; board of health, $2.10; special school tax, $86.90; clerk, fines, $5; Somerset street certificates, $3,000; balance in road fund, $33.35; bills payable, note, $32.80; balance, February 1, $3,023.06; total receipts, $9,631.84. Disbursements, $9,378.02. Cash on hand at close of fiscal year, $253.32.

The number of the annual report presented by Recorder Coddington is that approximately 120 arrests were made during the year. The disposition of these cases was as follows: Sent to county jail, none; discharged, 10; sentence suspended, 43; confined in lockup, 11; fined and locked up, 9; fined, 37; persuaded to leave the borough, 2. The total amount of fines collected by the recorder was $288.45.

The report of Overseer of the Poor William G. Debele, for the year, showed that the total receipts was $1,787.35 and the disbursements, $1,-487.12. The balance in his hands at the close of the fiscal year amounted to $300.23. The new year begins with ten charges to be looked after by the borough.

The annual report of Borough Clerk Frank Rowley was read and approved. Summarized it is as follows: Receipts—Cash on hand, borough account, $24.07; cash on hand, Watchung avenue, $610.35; borough taxes, 1899, $162.40; borough taxes, 1900, $1,635.85; school taxes, 1900, $2,044.19; borough taxes, 1901, $4,570.52; interest on taxes, $650.61; board of health tax, $472.04; special school tax, $18,099.24; liquor licenses, $1,852.50; licenses from clerk, $150.50; dog register and tags, $5.80; discount on State tax, $24.41; rents, borough property, $88; street improvements, $1,047.43; sidewalk assessments, $168.07; court fines, $290.45; Edwin Hooley, rebate on interest, $91; Watchung avenue assessments, $179.40; Watchung avenue certificates, $9,000; Somerset street certificates, $2,000; N. Y. and N. J. Telephone Co., deposit, $150; bills payable, notes, $41,408.75; total receipts, $115,835.48.

Disbursements — Borough general expense account, $7,644.19; police department, $2,999.70; fire department, $1,071.46; water department, $1,200; street department, $9,693.55; street lighting, $5,102.92; poor account, $1,500; sidewalk account, $138.42; total expenses, $29,468.75.

Disbursements for borough purposes —County and State tax, $18,700.68; Watchung avenue bonds, $9,645.35; board of health, $476.09; board of education, $18,161.71; paid last year's notes, $29,129.75; grand total disbursements, $115,582.16. Balance on hand, $253.32.

In accordance with a resolution of the councilmanic body the books of Mr. Brown as treasurer were examined and the result reported that they were correct in every detail.

Chief of the Fire Department J. J. Stahl's annual report contained a number of recommendations for the betterment of the department. He suggested that a fire alarm box be placed at the corner of Duer street and Lincoln place and another be placed at the corner of Fairview and Watchung avenues. The purchase of an insulated handle wire cutter and also a door opener were among other suggestions as was also the recommendation for the introduction of 2,000 additional feet of hose and four nozzles. During the year just closed there were ten fires in the borough and the aggregate loss by these amounted to $3,300.

Chairman Harrison Coddington, of the stationary and supplies committee, offered a resolution awarding the contract for printing and distributing the annual report to Webb & Brown, publishers of the Weekly Review, a paper in North Plainfield. According to the agreement the statement will be published in full in the paper and delivered to every house in the borough limits. For this they asked $37, and their bid being the lowest the matter was quickly disposed of.

THEATRICAL.

"The Bostonians" have made a great hit at the Garden Theatre, New York, in Reginald DeKoven and Harry B. Smith's new romantic comedy opera, "Maid Marian," a sequel to their former triumph, "Robin Hood." Nothing but praise is heard of this tuneful composition and its interpretation. Under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger this company has again been lifted into prominence, and "Maid Marian" promises to vie with its protagonist, "Robin Hood" in popularity. Grace VanStuddiford, the prima donna soprano, in the title role, has scored a triumph unequalled in years. Adele Ralfer, a new contralto, has an admirable song, "Tell Me Again, Sweetheart," and Belle Harper, the talented young vocalist, also shares in the constant applause. Among the many tuneful numbers which will readily find a place on the music racks of amateurs and be played by orchestras, are the ballad, "The Snake Charmer's Song," rendered by Miss VanStuddiford; "The Dew is on the Heather," and "Away to the Forest," rendered by Mr. MacDonald; and the topical verses allotted to Mr. Barnabee. All the old favorites are in admirable form, and Barnabee, MacDonald, Josephine Bartlett, W. H. Fitzgerald, Frank Rushworth, Allen Hinckley, G. H. Head, MacDonald Dorrington, J. J. Martin and others are excellently suited with congenial roles.

The papers in the case have been sent to Prosecutor English as Johnson is confined in the county jail.

DEBUT OF MISS VON OHL

SHE APPEARED IN "THE SCULPTOR'S DAUGHTER" AT REFORM HALL.

Young Woman Made a Good Showing Before a Small Audience—Others of the Cast.

A four act drama entitled "The Sculptor's Daughter," given at Reform Hall, Saturday evening, furnished the occasion for the debut of Miss Adele T. von Ohl, a young Plainfielder scarcely sixteen years of age. As might be expected on such a night the audience was not very large, but those who had braved the weather, saw a good play.

Miss von Ohl appeared in the title role and displayed some ability in the histronic art. She had been carefully coached by Richard Foote, the California tragedian, and from the manner in which she portrayed her lines much may be expected from her in future years. Mr. Foote, himself, assumed the role of Hugo, the foster father of the heroine, and he gave unusual force and character to the part as might be expected.

As Berto, Bob Mattox was capital. He furnished considerable humor to the situations in a way that was creditable to himself and enjoyable to the audience. Others in the caste were Miss Suzanne Kranz, Miss Margaret Hoffman, John Manley, W. A. Kenyon, B. W. Hand and John Goodwin.

ALL IS HARMONY.

No Prospects of a Fight at Coming Spring Election in North Plainfield Township.

The political sages in the Republican ranks of North Plainfield township have bade the clamor cease and the clash of contending forces will not be heard at the coming election, according to reliable prophets.

Benjamin Cahall, as a township committeeman, will be renominated for there is practically no opposition to him. The term of William Demler, the township clerk, will expire and he has already signified his intention of retiring from office. In his place it is likely that Henry Kliner will be nominated as he is considered a strong man. Mr. Demler has served two terms with satisfaction.

As for the assessorship, William Morris has every chance of being named again. The township people speak words of praise regarding the way he has conducted his office, and his unusual [qualifications will no doubt bring to him another nomination.

SLIM ATTENDANCE.

But Ball Was Financial Success as Tickets Had Been Sold in Advance.

It was not surprising to find a rather slim attendance at the Warren Engine Company's first annual ball, in Saengerbund Hall, Friday evening. There was not more than 100 persons present, but inasmuch as the sale of tickets had largely been advanced, from a financial standpoint it mattered little how many put in an appearance.

Eugene O'Reilly's orchestra furnished the music for the dances. The committee in charge consisted of L. Bodine, chairman, John Schenck, treasurer, F. Kesselring, secretary, L. Rosenstiehl, C. Stahl, L. Feiring, W. Conover and William Dond. L. Feiring was floor manager and his assistants were F. Kesselring and L. Rosenstiehl.

ANNUAL BUDGET.

Councilmanic Committees Are Completing Figures to Go to Council.

Nearly all the Councilmanic committees have about completed an estimate of moneys needed in each department for the coming year. The annual budget will be made up at the March meeting of the Common Council. It is not believed that there will be any large increases in any department. It is the purpose of the Council to keep the expenses down as much as possible consistent with good government.

Lots of Building.

The prospects for considerable building this spring are very bright. It is reported that there will be a number of fine dwellings erected by Plainfielders for their own occupancy. The merchants in the various trades are much pleased with the outlook and all are hoping for an early spring.

FOUND HIS HOME IN FLAMES

BLAZE AT RESIDENCE OF B. R. CAIN, OF GRANDVIEW AVENUE.

Discovered Shortly After 1 o'Clock Saturday Morning—Supposed to Have Caught From Range.

The crackling sound, made by the flames eating their way through the woodwork in the kitchen of his residence, caused Bryant R. Cain, of Grandview avenue, to awaken shortly after 1 o'clock Saturday morning. Rushing down stairs he found the rooms filled with smoke and fire destroying the rear part of his house. The attic was also afire.

After dashing some water on the flames in the kitchen he aroused the neighbors, his own family having been alarmed previously. Warren Townley, who lives next door, hurried to Saengerbund Hall, where the Warren Engine Company was holding a ball, and notified Chief J. J. Stahl. He selected six men and they lost no time in getting to the fire.

Two streams were turned on the building and the fire was gotten under control after the attic had been destroyed. Alonzo Brokaw, Joseph Newman and Winn Conover, who were in the vicinity, were the first firemen on the spot. The members of the family had no time to get their clothes but hurried out in night attire. One daughter was wrapped in a blanket and carried out by Mr. Brokaw.

Besides the loss by fire, the house was considerably damaged by water, the kitchen and many other walls being much injured by the soaking they received. The house is a two story and a half structure. The loss, which will amount to over $1,500, is partially covered by insurance. An adjoining house was scorched by the flames.

The origin of the fire is unknown but it is supposed to be due to the woodwork catching from a red hot range in the kitchen.

WORK AT HAMPTON.

Described by the Chaplain to a Congregation at Crescent Avenue Church Last Monday.

A service in the interest of Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute was held in the Crescent Avenue church last Monday and a large congregation listened attentively to an address pertaining to the school and its needs. The talk was given by Rev. H. B. Turner, the chaplain of the institution.

Old plantation melodies were sung during the service by a trio, composed of Hampton pupils, and the rich voices of the young colored men proved a pleasing feature of the meeting.

Rev. Mr. Turner, in commencing his address, gave some interesting statistics relating to the negro and followed this up with a sketch of the life of General S. C. Armstrong, who founded the school. Before closing he dwelt upon the condition of the institution and the great work it is doing in improving the moral and intellectual life of the southern negro.

STORMY SESSION.

Pythian Knights Had Damp Time of It Friday Night.

During the storm, Friday evening, the rooms of Perseverance Lodge, K. of P., in Washington Hall, became very much dampened through sundry leaks which appeared in the ceilings. A meeting was in progress at the time and the members were soon calling for umbrellas. The patter of drops soon gave way to rivulets which used no discretion in landing. The session was quickly adjourned and the members hastily departed before the plaster could get a chance to fall on them.

Borough's Good Health.

The condition of the public health in the borough at the present time is excellent. There is but one case of scarlet fever and only half a dozen cases of measles.

Locked Up for Drunkenness.

J. Newton Hoagland was arrested Saturday evening for drunkenness and lodged in the borough lockup. He was released Sunday morning.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN TO COLLECT CITY TAXES

City Collector Smith is Sending Out Bills to Delinquent Ones on City Books.

THEN THE LEGAL STEPS.

RUNNING CITY'S AFFAIRS ON STRICT BUSINESS PRINCIPLES.

Will be Given a Chance to Pay Up and Then Warrants Will be Issued—Levy on Property or Send Delinquent to Jail.

Unpaid taxes for 1901 were delinquent just three months Thursday and City Collector Frank H. Smith is now busily engaged preparing bills, which will precede the issuing of warrants. The levy was made as usual on May 1, and the taxes were not due until November 20.

It's a big business to collect taxes for the city and the present incumbent has introduced some practical methods in the conduct of his office. He doesn't send out a tax bill and then follow it up with a warrant as soon as possible. On the day they were due he sent a bill to every person taxed. The first of the present year he sent another notice to those who failed to respond to the first, and now, after the lapse of three months from the date they were due, he is engaged in preparing the action.

Nearly one-half of the poll taxes were paid soon after the first notice was given in November. In this city there are approximately 3,300 persons subject to such a tax, and about 2,000 of these were delinquent. In answer to the notices sent out the first of the year about 20 per cent. of the delinquents paid the amount due, and now Mr. Smith is using every endeavor to collect the remaining sum.

A reasonable time will be given those who have neglected to settle, and then warrants will be issued. Constable Robert Mattox will serve these and he will tell these whom he visits to pay up immediately. After a short time further legal methods to compel the payment will be taken.

The amount of a poll tax is $1, but there's five cents interest to be added to this. If the delinquent citizen waits for Constable Mattox to call, he'll find that the visit costs him fifty cents, which goes to the constable for his work. Subsequent to the officer's service of the warrant, if the amount remains unpaid, Constable Mattox will levy on the personal property of the dilatory citizen, providing he has any, and advertisement and sale will follow. Should the delinquent taxpayer be without personal property the constable is empowered to arrest him. Confinement in the county jail until the tax is paid is the punishment meted out by law.

Some persons seem to think that a delinquent can work out his poll tax by serving time in the county jail, but such is not the case. The neglectful citizen must stay at Elizabeth until he or some one else pays the bill. It is impossible to tell exactly how the collections of poll tax thus far compare with those of last year, but the collector believes that a comparison would result favorable to the work done during the current year.

There's a mistaken idea, says Mr. Smith, regarding the liability of Civil War veterans and exempt firemen for dog tax. They are not exempt from this class of tax, which is collected in the same manner as other taxes. The idea that a delinquent can not be arrested for a dog tax is an erroneous one, and the corporation counsel has instructed the collector to proceed the same as with other taxes. Warrants can be issued for the non-payment and the delinquent can be placed in jail.

The collector can collect real estate tax under the same law as that applicable to poll taxes, but he must find personal property to sell. Because of this he proceeds under the Martin Act, which declares that all real estate taxes unpaid for two years permits the sale of the land. Consequently all unpaid real estate taxes for 1899 warrants the collector in selling the real estate now. Of course the collector could go ahead and sell, but he awaits the action of Common Council. That body is likely to pass a resolution at the March session instructing the collector to proceed under the Martin Act.

There's a special law under which the macadamizing has been done. The assessment in this case cannot be collected forcibly until the expiration of three years from the time the lien is filed; then the collector may proceed under the Martin Act.

As a rule the property owners have been very prompt in paying bills of this class. Of all the residents benefitted by the macadamizing of West Third street, West Fourth street, Franklin place and East Sixth street there are less than thirty who have failed to meet the bills, up to the present time, as previously stated, although the work was only completed in May 1900. Flagging and curbing bills become a lien when filed. Notices are sent out to property owners requesting them to lay the pavements, and in the event of their not complying the city does the work and the cost is charged up against the property owners. The street commissioner files the liens with the collector.

Collector Smith says he believes in dealing with the taxpayers in the same manner that a merchant would deal with his customers. He does not send a bill and then immediately follow it up with legal proceedings. On the contrary he keeps on sending bills, until he is convinced that the delinquent never has no intention of paying. Then he proceeds in a legal manner. Every day he reads the personals in the papers to ascertain who are leaving the city, and in case any names appear of persons about to absent themselves from the municipality, who are delinquent taxpayers, he immediately follows them up. A warrant is issued at once in order to protect the interests of the city, but in few cases is it necessary to effect service

BOTH LICENSES WERE DENIED

Thus Ended Fight for Place on North Ave. Between A. B. Rosell and J. H. McVey.

ALL OTHERS GRANTED.

Common Council Acted on License Applications at Its Meeting Last Monday and Granted Fourteen, All But Two of the Applications—Pray Opposed Retailers.

The much-discussed and important question of liquor licenses was settled for the present at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council last Monday. The lobby was filled with friends of the various hotels and saloons, who waited anxiously for the decision. There was doubt in the minds of many as to whether J. H. McVey or A. B. Rosell would get a license for a saloon on North avenue, or whether neither would get it. They were the last applications to be considered. When Chairman Gloak, of the license committee, reported adversely on both applications and recommended that neither one be granted, there was a quiet spell. Then the crowd filed out. Every license application was granted, except those of Mr. McVey and Mr. Rosell, making fourteen in all, one less than last year.

All of the Councilmen were present except Mr. vanHerwerden and Mr. Daniel. After the meeting was called to order and the minutes were read, the first business was the reception of communications and petitions. These consisted chiefly of petitions remonstrating against the granting of license applications. Those who protested were Mrs. Mary L. Winter, Mrs. Voorhees W. Laing, Stephen Cahoons, president of the Y. M. C. A.; F. E. Smith, Robert Love, James Love, George Zirch, Russell O. Howell, Geo. Cook, Frederick Westphal, Mrs. Elizabeth Brand, S. A. Bryon, Miss J. H. Pessinger and William Hewron. These protests were all referred to the license committee for consideration.

Among the other petitions was one from F. I. Smith and others asking that Berkley avenue and Park terrace be macadamized and graded and agreeing to pay the proportionate share of the expense. Another petition was received from James Huntington, informing the Council that he had been assessed for a wrong property on East Third street and requesting an adjustment.

The bond of Constable Peter V. Weaver was reported correct and ordered placed on file and the bond of Constable John Gjettleson was referred to the corporation counsel for approval. Mr. Tolles offered a resolution authorizing the street committee to get bids for the furnishing of crushed stone, culverts and crosswalks.

Mr. Gloak was asked at this time if he was ready to report on the liquor license applications. He asked the Council to take a recess for fifteen minutes to consider the licenses and remonstrances. The members retired to the ante-room and it was forty minutes later when the session was resumed. In the meantime those in the lobby had also retired, but the audience returned promptly at the end of the executive session.

Mr. Gloak then presented the applications one at a time. Messrs. Coriell, Randolph, Mellick, Tolles, Buckle, Gloak, Lee and Murphy voted for every license except the two refused applications, while Mr. Pray stood alone in his opposition to all except the two wholesale applications, Frank Linke and the Eastern Bottling Association. He also voted in favor of an inn and tavern license for Henry Haurand. It was afterward explained that Mr. Pray favors the wholesale license, but not a retail business.

Licenses were granted to the following applicants: Charles L. Strong, Hotel Plainfield; Henry Haurand, 115 East Front street; J. A. Staats, Hotel Kensington; Jacob Blimm, Farmer's Hotel, Somerset street; Henry Windham, Waldorf Hotel; Bernard Clark, Liberty and West Third streets; Charles Schantz, Park avenue; A. D. Fleming, 120 East Second street; John Hafferty, Park avenue; Daniel Galbraith, West Third street; J. A. Blatz, Front and Somerset streets; Michael Watson, Grant avenue; Frank Linke, West Front street; Eastern Bottling Association, West Second street.

This makes fourteen in all. When a vote was taken on the applications of J. H. McVey and A. B. Rosell, every member voted in the negative. To some this was a surprise, for it was believed by them that one of the two would get a license. Those on the inside, however, learned yesterday that both were likely to be denied.

There were a large number of applications for truck, hack and junk licenses, and Mr. Gloak moved that they be granted after the fee is paid as provided by the ordinance.

Mr. Lee informed the Council that the fire committee had purchased 1,000 feet of new hose for the fire department and he asked the Council to confirm the action by adopting a resolution authorizing the committee to make such purchase. This was done. This concluded the business and the Council adjourned.

Exposure to Wet,

dampness and cold, invariably results in a sudden chill, which if not attended to immediately will cause a cold. By mixing a teaspoonful of Perry Davis' Painkiller in half a glass of warm water or milk, the whole system will be heated and the danger of cold avoided. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis' Price 25c. and 50c.

Saved Him From Torture.

There is no more agonizing trouble than piles. The constant itching and burning make life intolerable. No position is comfortable. The torture is unceasing. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures piles at once. For skin diseases, cuts, burns, bruises, all kinds of wounds it is unequalled. J. S. Gerall, St. Paul, Ark., says: "From 1865 I suffered with the protruding, bleeding piles and could find nothing to help me until I used DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. A few boxes completely cured me." Beware of counterfeits. L. W. Randolph.

The Last Heard Of It.

"My little boy took the croup one night and soon grew so bad you could hear him breathe all over the house," says F. D. Reynolds, Mansfield, O. "We feared he would die, but a few doses of One Minute Cough Cure quickly relieved him and he went to sleep. That's the last we heard of the croup. Now isn't a cough cure like that valuable?" One Minute Cough Cure is absolutely safe and acts immediately. For coughs, colds, croup, grip, bronchitis and all other throat and lung troubles it is a certain cure Very pleasant to take. The little ones like it. L. W. Randolph.

POLICE STOP BENEFIT BALL

Raided Dance at Washington Hall Claiming Beer Was Being Sold There.

SENT DANCERS HOME.

Called It "Ginger Ale With a Stick in It"—Committee Had Been Warned Not to Sell—Bottles Taken by Police as Evidence —Arrests May Follow.

An unlooked for happening brought the Robert Wood benefit ball in Washington Hall, Thursday, to an abrupt termination. A crowd of several hundred people were enjoying themselves at midnight dancing to the accompaniment of an orchestra when the music ceased suddenly. In the hall which followed, Sergeant Frederickson, of the local police force, stepped forward and informed the astonished crowd that the festivities were over and that all were to file out of the hall and go home. Some were inclined to rebel but on second consideration they acquiesced.

When all had left but the committee in charge of the affair, the sergeant made known his reason for marring the programme. From a side room he and Patrolman McCarthy brought out a number of small bottles, such as are generally used for holding soda water, and which contained a brown liquid closely resembling ginger ale. Several were opened but, instead of the supposed harmless ale, the police say the liquid found was of the kind brewed from hops and generally sold over a saloon bar. As the hall has no privileges to sell beer it was for this violation of the law that the ball was broken up.

A short time ago, two members of the committee, George Babcock and Charles Beekman, held a short conversation with Chief Kiely concerning the affair in the course of which he warned them against selling beer at the ball. They promised none would be allowed in the building.

Early last evening, the chief was informed that the soft drink bar was in full swing at the ball but that everybody was calling for ginger ale, "with a stick in it." A policeman was despatched to find out what it was but on his arrival business in the ginger ale department was transferred to a side room. He secured enough evidence, however, to call the sergeant.

The other names of the committee as announced on the programme are John Dixon, Harry McLean, Theodore Larew, Eugene O'Reilly, Harry Dilts, James Wagner, Michael Burke, Chas. Strumbach, Daniel Guinee and Tenny Overbaugh.

Clerk's Wise Suggestion.

"I have lately been much troubled with dyspepsia, belching and sour stomach," writes M. S. Mead, leading pharmacist of Attleboro, Mass. "I could eat hardly anything without suffering several hours. My clerk suggested I try Kodol Dyspepsia Cure which I did with most happy results. I have had no more trouble and when one can go to eating mince pie, cheese, candy and nuts after such a time, their digestion must be pretty good. I endorse Kodol Dyspepsia Cure heartily." You don't have to diet. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests your food. L. W. Randolph.

GAVE A MISSIONARY TEA

AT RESIDENCE OF MRS. REUBEN KNOX, OF WASHINGTON AVENUE.

Arranged by Women's Foreign Missionary Society of First Baptist Church, Feb. 19.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the First Baptist church, was delightfully entertained Tuesday afternoon at the home of the president, Mrs. Reuben Knox, of Washington avenue. An interesting programme had been prepared by Mrs. Knox.

A short paper, "Why I Believe in Foreign Missions" was read by Miss Florence Marsh. Brief histories of the pioneer missionaries, Dr. Judson, Ann H. Judson, Sarah B. Judson and Emily C. Judson, were read by Miss Cairns, Mrs. Robbins and Mrs. Shreve, with shorter sketches by Miss Whitney and Mrs. G. T. Wilson. An interesting paper on "Japan" was read by Miss Rafferty with side lights on some customs of the country by Mrs. Charles E. Smith and Miss Shreve.

The readings were interpersed with charming solos by Mrs. George A. Chapman and Mrs. Giddis, of Dunellen, accompanied by Miss Edith Cairns. Mrs. Pettit, of Elizabeth, made some forceful remars, after which refreshments were served.

Miss Minnie Carpenter, of Dunellen, who has been a missionary in Japan for a number of years, was among the guests and exhibited some interesting curios brought from the famous country.

The rooms were artistically decorated with flags and, in the dining room, Japanese decorations were used. At the tea table, Miss Ida Yerkes and Miss Annie Boice presided, relieved by Mrs. I. DeWitt Brokaw. Their assistants were Mrs. Frank Jones, the Misses Shreve, Mae Batchelor and Pauline Denton.

IN HONOR OF GUEST.

Mrs. Frederick V. Greene Entertained at Her Home Thursday.

Mrs. Frederick V. Greene, of 29 Willow avenue, entertained a few friends at her home Thursday in honor of her cousin, Miss Marguerite Marx, of New York, who has been her guest. During the evening there were piano solos by Miss Mae Brower and Mrs. Greene, piano duets by Miss Marguerite Marx and Frederick V. Greene and recitations by Miss Lulu Randolph.

Following the informal programme of music and recitations, the guests enjoyed dancing, after which refreshments were served. Among those present were Mrs. Frederick V. Green, the Misses Mae Brower, Sadie Randolph, Lulu Randolph and William Moore, William Abbott, Richard Randolph, Clifford Manning and Harry Joseph.

PROF. GRIGGS' TALK.

First of a Series on Browning Before Monday Afternoon Club.

Professor Edward Howard Griggs, the scholar of literature who favored Plainfield audiences last spring with lectures on Dante's Divine Comedy, commenced a series of talks on Browning, before the Monday Afternoon Club, yesterday afternoon. The address was made in the Sunday-school room of the Crescent Avenue church and there was a large attendance.

The attitude of the great English poet formed the basis for his remarks. At some length he dwelt upon the genius of Browning's character, declaring that he was the only great genius whose life was entirely without stain. Some time was devoted to the poet's shorter works, particularly Rabbi Ben Ezra, and he handled his subject in his usual masterly way.

SCHOOLS HELD EXERCISES.

Washington's Birthday Was Observed in City Schools.

Washington's Birthday was observed at the city public schools Friday morning. In the Irving School the various classes participated in the exercises held in the chapel. The Battle of Trenton was described by one of the teachers. Here as in the Bryant school the affair was more elaborate than in former years. In the later school recitations were given by Philip Mosher, and the Misses Mary McMahon and Elsie Organ and a selection read by Miss Edna Cronce. Recitations were also given by a number of boys in the second year B. class and girls in the third year B. class. Patriotic songs were sung.

In the Washington School sketches of Washington's life were given by pupils of the fifth grade. Robert Green recited and the school saluted the flag. Sousa's "Stars and Stripes" were among the songs.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

Kate Gardner Chats About Teagowns and Lounging Robes.

Chinese and Japanese Tendency Distinguishes the House Garments of the Season—Change in Skirts.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

IT HAS been a long time since I have wandered into the realm of the fascinating teagown, the combination that suits near relation, the dainty matinee jacket, and as this happens to be the season of the year when garments of this description are supposed to appeal most strongly to womankind, a few hints as to the present and coming fashion in this direction will not prove uninteresting reading, particularly as there are many delightful things to say concerning all of them.

For some mysterious reason or other Dame Fashion has decreed this season that there shall be a distinctly Chinese or Japanese tendency in all the newest lounging robes, teagowns and house jackets. Everything is more or less a la Geisha, with kamona-like fronts and long, loose-hanging sleeves. Of course the materials of which these charming gowns are fashioned, carries out this idea to the fullest degree. For instance, many of the teagowns of the moment are made of the new pointed velveteen, which shows a wonderfully mixed-up Chinese pattern on its smooth surface, while the lounging robes and house jackets—at least the major part of them—look as though they first saw the light of day in far-away Japan. For those who do not like the rather severe Japanese style and I must confess to many it will prove vastly unbecoming—fashion has provided beautiful models made of crepe de chine and soft Oriental satin, which cannot but prove captivating to every woman with a true sense of the beautiful.

It has always seemed to me that crepe de chine is particularly appropriate for teagown purposes. A truly successful teagown must "hang" to perfection, an end, by the way, not always obtainable where velveteen is employed and then a teagown, to be seen at its best, requires a vast amount of airy-fairy daintiness in the matter of trimming; and in the use of velveteen, unless one is very careful, the result is apt to be anything but beautiful. While no garment of the wardrobe of to-day admits of so many possibilities as the teagown, to be an artistic success it must be draped by the master hand. Altogether it can be made an exquisite picture of crepe de chine, velvet, soft lace, chiffon, and, indeed, everything that the luxury-loving nature of the lady of fashion suggests, or it may be contrived in such an unfortunate manner as to present the reverse side of the picture.

PALE BLUE CASHMERE TEAGOWN.

Within the week I have seen some truly charming teagowns made of fine French cashmere, in both cream white and delicately-tinted tones, prettily trimmed with much lace and hanging stoles of the cashmere, and simply finished at the waist by a pointed girdle of Oriental embroidery. The pretty model given in the first illustration is fashioned of cashmere in a delicate shade of blue. The skirt is ornamented by ruffles of the material, the square yoke is of black panne velvet, the stoles of which are spotted effectively with Chantilly, while the embroidery, which is all done by hand, of course, in the most exquisite manner possible, is carried out in the soft Oriental colorings that are so very popular at the present moment. The other model represents a somewhat more elaborate and fanciful teagown, made in this instance of crepe de chine. Draped round the shoulders is a handsome fichu of soft white mousseline de soie, which is held in place by a large knot of white chiffon, with long sash ends reaching almost to the hem of the skirt.

The most desirable lounging robes seen thus far are made of printed velveteen in dark colorings, lined throughout with soft China silk, finished at the neck by a smartly-rolled collar and held at the waist by means of a finely wrought metal girdle. Other pretty models are made of cashmere with lining of silk, while others again are fashioned of printed cotton crepe cloth, in both light and dark colors, with cuffs and collar in a contrasting color or else in somber black. The "Geisha" dressing jacket still remains the idol of fashion, although it has reigned quite two seasons. The most sought after models are made of cream-tinted silk and wool material and simply finished with wide hems and facings of washing silk in some delicate shade of color. Cashmere is also ideal for this purpose and, when carried out in a soft shade of rose pink with facings of dainty white, makes a perfectly charming jacket and one that any woman might be proud to call her own.

The "matinee" is, of course, much more elaborate and fanciful than the dressing jacket, and it is proper that it should be, considering the mission of each is so vastly different. Frenchy to a degree are the matinee jackets that come to us this season in pastel shades of mousseline de soie, arranged in fine tucks and long lines of insertion. The sleeves are tucked and trimmed with lace insertion, and finished with double frills of accordion-plaited chiffon, edged with narrow satin ribbon. Nun's veiling in pretty shades of lavender and gray makes lovely matinee jackets, and when given a plentiful trimming of lace and chiffon are quite as desirable as those fashioned of mousseline de soie, and not nearly so expensive.

Dame Fashion is after all not such a fickle jade as she is represented to be. Only a short time ago some of the leading authorities loudly proclaimed that the requiem of the Russian blouse and the jaunty little bolero would soon be sounded, and that the latter would be short and most elaborately trimmed. How none of these undesirable things have come to pass and, judging from present signs, are not likely to. All the models that are daily being sent over from Paris show in a most marked degree that the reign of the bolero is not over by any manner of means, while the swellest-looking skirts intended for early spring wear are long and trailing, as of yore, and show but the slightest tendency toward an increase in trimming. I think Chicago women in particular should be thankful that the long skirt still prevails, for while possessing many points of beauty and grace, and with a charm all their own, their feet do not always show to perfect advantage. Whether this is the fault of nature or the bootmaker, I do not pretend to say; but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the majority of women one sees nowadays have, to put it mildly, extremely shabby-looking feet.

In the matter of sleeves there is much that could be written. The tendency at the present moment is to have them rather tight-fitting from the shoulder to the elbow, and then to show a great deal of fulness from the elbow to the wrist. In the smart-looking, up-to-date model in the picture this pretty new fashion shows to great advantage.

The tailor-gowns of the moment are certainly delightful to look upon. Made of the new sheltie cloth, with long trailing skirts and smartly-cut jackets, they are more charming than ever before. Some have handsomely embroidered waistcoats, and this mode is likely to remain in favor throughout the season.

Lace continues to play an important part in the world of fashion. Embroideries, too, of all kinds and descriptions, are much in demand, to brighten up winter frocks, and those who have anything of this kind in their possession should try to utilize it, for now is the time and hour.

Wonderful Things Promised by an Indianapolis Man.

Device to See Over Telephone Almost Perfected — Second Invention Separates Gold from Sand at Small Cost.

An inventive genius of Indianapolis, Ind., whose name is withheld for the present, within a few weeks will give the world two inventions that promise to revolutionize two great industries of the world and, at the same time, to affect other channels of the world's commerce.

One is a device whereby a man talking at a telephone may see who is talking and be seen by the talker, as well as hear and be heard, no matter how great the distance separating the two instruments. The other is a device separating "flour" gold from the sand and foreign particles surrounding it, rendering placer mining so cheap that the precious metal may be profitably separated from gold-bearing dirt at expense so small that the cost of operation is, in substance, nothing.

The inventor is represented by Attorney Bernie B. Cohen, a young lawyer who befriended the man, and, when he was practically penniless, advanced him funds with which he might continue his experiments and bring his machines to the present state of perfection.

Attorney Cohen declared to a Chicago Tribune correspondent that the gold separating device will render the work of separating microscopic particles of gold from surrounding sand as cheap as the Edison magnetic process for drawing minute particles of iron from other foreign materials with which it is mixed.

"It might be called," the inventor's representative said, "an 'aeronetic' mechanism, inasmuch as it attracts particles of the precious metal as the magnet attracts particles of iron or steel."

The other invention, for similar reasons, has been named the telecloscope," for, by its use, the eye will be enabled to annihilate space through the medium of electricity as has been made possible for the ear through the application of the same agent in telephonic form.

"The telelectroscope," Attorney Cohen declares, "has reached a stage where perfection is practically assured. In the inventor's laboratory the device has been tried and tested and its operation is successful. It only remains to add an improvement or two before the mechanism will be in shape to be put on the market.

"Attached to the sending device of the telephone, rising above and over it, will be a small mirror-like reflector. The talker, by gazing into this, will see pictured before him not only the person talking at the other end of the wire, but also the object surrounding the latter. Pictures on the walls, chairs, tables, and, in fact, all the furnishings within focus, will be accurately reproduced in the picturing mirror.

"At the same time a device attached to the telephone will enable the second person to see as clearly and distinctly as the first.

"These sending devices are always in focus. They can be moved about, turned from side to side on their stationary support, to suit the convenience and whims of the talker. In whatever manner they are turned a faithful reproduction of all that comes within the lines of the focus will be portrayed in the reflector at the other end."

The receiving device is in the form of a circle, the diameter of which is five inches. The figures and scenes are thrown upon a delicate screen through the medium of a strong incandescent light hidden behind the surface. The sending apparatus is more complex. It operates, however, much as does the focusing devices common on cameras.

Salaries in Great Britain.

The lord lieutenant of Ireland, now Earl Cadogan, gets $100,000 a year, which is said to be the biggest salary paid in Great Britain; the viceroy of India comes next with about $85,000 a year. The three bishops have the pleasure of handling from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and after that the governors of colonies and the ambassadors receive from $40,000 to $60,000 a year.

Wires Stretched Under Snow.

According to the experiments conducted by Mr. H. Janssen on Mont Blanc, it is not necessary to erect poles for stringing telephone and telegraph wires in snow-covered countries. It is now believed that the wires can simply be laid down and be ready for transmission of messages.

TOLD OF FLOWERY KINGDOM

MISSIONARY ADDRESS GIVEN TO JUNIOR ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

Mrs. J. W. Schenck Spoke at Trinity Reformed Church Wednesday Afternoon.

An instructive talk concerning the Christian missionary work in Japan was given before the Junior Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. J. W. Schenck, who has spent sometime laboring among the heathen in the Flowery Kingdom. This indefagitable missionary is a sister-in-law of Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the church, and she is well-known in the community.

Fifty little Endeavorers were present and they listened most attentively while the missionary told, in a plain way, of the customs and peculiarities of the people among whom she has worked. Mrs. Schenck makes a special effort to convert the women and children and it was about these that she spoke for nearly an hour. During her talk she exhibited tiny idols, such as are worshipped by the Japanese, and also showed pictures of monster idols and temples of that country. At some length she dwelt upon the methods pursued by the missionaries in their work and told of the almost insurmountable difficulties with which they met.

Occasionally she catechised the children in order to bring out what facts they knew about the people and in addition to this added the knowledge displayed by the little ones was quite remarkable. Mrs. Schenck referred to the methods of living in that country and to the habits of its people.

FORMED A CLUB.

Guests of Mrs. R. M. Clark Organized to Play Progressive Euchre.

Mrs. Robert M. Clark, of Richmond street, entertained a number of friends at her home Tuesday afternoon. Progressive euchre was the source of entertainment. Mrs. Clark won first prize, Mrs. Harry Coddington the second, while Miss Addie Weaver won the booby prize.

During the afternoon a regular club was formed by those present, which includes the following: Mrs. William M. Tier, Mrs. George H. Fairchild, Mrs. Arthur A. Cannon, Mrs. J. M. Smalley, Mrs. Harry Coddington, Mrs. William Morrison, Miss Addie Weaver, Miss May McLaughlin and Mrs. Dundon. The club will probably meet every two weeks.

WEDDED AT HOME.

Marriage of Miss Bowles and Arthur Brinkley Took Place Feb. 19.

In the presence of one hundred relatives and friends from this city, Newark, Paterson, Jersey City and Hoboken, Miss Alice Lee Bowles and Arthur Lee Brinkley, both of this city, were united in marriage, last evening. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Joseph Brinkley, of East Third street. Rev. Scott Wallace officiated.

Miss Bowles was attended by Miss Lucy Farrell, of this city, while William Burton acted as best man. The bride's gown was of white satin and she carried a large bouquet of bridal roses.

Immediately after the ceremony the guests were invited to take part in a reception and at its conclusion, Mr. and Mrs. Brinkley were taken by coach to their new home on West Third street.

FORMALLY DECLINES.

Robert Clark, Jr., Will Not Take Renomination for Councilman.

It will devolve upon the borough Republicans to select two new candidates for Council. Councilman Robert Clark, Jr., has communicated with Mayor Smalley, by letter, absolutely declining to permit his name to go before the party primary as a candidate for re-election. Mr. Clark states that the pressure of business is too great for him to undertake the cares of office again and he is firmly opposed to renomination.

BELATED CONGRATULATIONS.

Extended to Mr. and Mrs. John Utzinger at Reception Given Them.

Mr. and Mrs. John Utzinger, of Grandview avenue, who announced their marriage the first part of the week, were tendered a reception by a large number of friends, Wednesday evening. The belated congratulations were then extended with a heartiness that repaid for the wait. It is the intention of Mr. and Mrs. Utzinger to leave Monday for a trip to Boston and other points in New England.

Engagement Announced.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Florence Morrison and Georgs W. VanVechten, of New Brunswick. Miss Morrison is a sister of William Morrison, of the borough.

Mrs. A. I. Smalley and Mrs. W. L. Smalley, Jr., of Somerset street, witnessed the dog show in New York Thursday.

MUST ACCOUNT FOR HORSE

FRANK JAROSKI ARRESTED IN THIS CITY FOR HORSE STEALING.

Was Indicted by Grand Jury, But Westfield Officers Couldn't Find Him Until Yesterday.

Westfield, Feb. 21—Frank Jaroski, alias Frank Johnson, alias Frank Smith, was arrested at his residence, 17 Cottage place, Plainfield, yesterday, by Constable J. M. C. Marsh and Eugene Chamberlin, of this place. He was brought to Westfield and later lodged in the county jail at Elizabeth, where he will have to stand trial on an indictment found by the January Grand Jury.

On October 2, 1901, Jaroski called at W. H. Bartin's livery stable on North avenue and after telling a plausible story succeeded in hiring a horse and buggy. He drove to Dog Corners, where it is alleged he sold the rig and skipped out. Mr. Barton had a warrant issued for his arrest, after which the case was presented to the Grand Jury. An indictment was found, although Jaroski could not be located.

Last December the Westfield police heard that Jaroski was living at Elizabethport. They went there, but the man evidently heard of their coming and he again skipped. This time he located in Staten Island, where he rested until Tuesday, when he went to Plainfield and stopped at 17 Cottage place.

Yesterday Constable Chamberlin was in Plainfield and he heard that Jaroski was in that city. He telephoned to Constable Marsh and the two officers went to his new home and arrested him. When Jaroski was searched a large knife, with open blade, was found on his person.

BIRTHDAY SOCIAL.

Annual Affair at Monroe Avenue M. E. Church Thursday Was Largely Attended.

Almost impassable roads did not detract any from the interest taken in the annual birthday social given in the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, last Thursday under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society.

The deft hands of the women in charge had decorated the main room in a most tasty manner, red being the prevailing color. A pretty table whereon dainty bits of confectionery and birthday cookies were sold was surrounded by palms and plants making a charming effect. The table was in charge of the Misses Lulu Randolph, Daisy Brouard and Mae Brower.

During the evening the following delightful programme was rendered: Piano solos, Miss Charlotte Aldrich and Miss Florence Morrison; recitations, Miss Laura Adkins and Miss Lulu Randolph. Light refreshments were served by Mrs. Mansfield Smith, Mrs. William Stein and Miss Annie Stafford. The affair was in charge of the social committee of the society of which Mrs. Stephen Higham is chairman.

LITERARY.

There is a pretty story in connection with the series of articles which Helen Keller, the wonderful blind girl, has written for the Ladies' Home Journal, telling about her own life from infancy to the present day. She always has shrunk from the publicity which follows successful literary work, and it was with great difficulty that she was persuaded to take up the task of preparing her autobiography. She had, however, set her heart on owning an island in Halifax for a summer home, and in a spirit of fun the editor of the Journal offered to buy it for her, or to provide the means to buy it. When the work of writing appeared especially irksome Miss Keller was reminded of her desire to become a land-holder, and it spurred her on. Just before Christmas she completed the first chapter of her marvelous story; and on Christmas morning she received from her publishers a check for a good round sum. Her delight may be imagined, for this was the first money of any account which she had ever earned. "It is a fairy tale come true," she said. Whether she will really carry out her plan to buy the island remains to be seen.

Residence for D. F. Ginna.

Daniel F. Ginna, of Watchung avenue, has plans out for a very fine dwelling for his own occupancy. It is proposed to erect it on the corner of the property now occupied by his father, S. A. Ginna. Evarts Tracy is the architect.

Residence Near Golf Club.

Frank Hyde, of Rahway road, has plans out for a handsome dwelling to be erected near the Park Golf Club course, close to a new roadway recently opened. It is expected that work will be started in the spring.

Miss Lucia S. Barbour, of New York, was the guest of Miss Marion Porter, of West Third street, yesterday and Saturday.

NON-RESIDENT GUNNERS MAY NEED LICENSE

Important Change to Fish and Game Laws Now Before the Legislature.

ACT OF RETALIATION.

NUMBER OF OTHER CHANGES TO LAWS HAVE BEEN PROPOSED.

Chief Change Makes a Charge of $10 for License to Hunt in New Jersey—Bill Considered at Conference of Committees.

Every sportsman in Plainfield and vicinity is much interested in the various changes which are proposed to the State fish and game laws. There are a number of bills relating to these subjects now before the Legislature and the members of the State Fish and Game Commissioners have already held several conferences with the proper committees from the two houses relative to the proposed legislation.

The most important of the bills in which sportsmen of New Jersey are interested is the one introduced by the Republican leader, Mr. Horner, which, if enacted, will require a license to be taken out by non-resident sportsmen. The bill, as drawn, starts off with a rather interesting "Whereas," which states "sister States have, by legislation, required all non-residents (including residents of the State of New Jersey) to take out licenses before hunting or gunning in such States respectively, and impose license fee therefore and provided for the punishment for such as should violate the provisions of such act."

Then the bill recites the retaliation of New Jersey, which enacts that $10 shall be the license fee for New Jersey. The bill is particularly a thrust at Pennsylvania, which has a license law that keeps out Jerseymen, and as matters now stand Jersey sportsmen are crowded in their own domain by the evasion of Pennsylvania sportsmen who do as they please on Jersey soil. The State Fish and Game Commission held out for a retaliation on the proposition to put a Chinese wall around the State, because they did not want to discriminate against New York, but they now lean favorably to the proposition. It is understood that they will make some changes in the bill that is now pending so as to make it possible for the owner of game preserves and farmers to extend courtesies to friends gunning on their immediate premises. The features of the Horner bill, behind which are many of the gunning and sporting clubs of the State, are as follows:

Upon and after the passage of this act every non-resident of this State shall be required to take out a license before he shall begin hunting or gunning in this State, which license the several clerks of this State are authorized to issue upon the payment of $10, and an issuance fee of fifty cents to the county clerk, such license shall be a certificate of permission to hunt and gun within the State of New Jersey and shall include the name, age and place of residence and business of the applicant, with his description, as nearly as may be, upon such form as shall be furnished in blank to the several county clerks by the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners. Such certificate shall authorize the owner thereof to hunt and kill in any part of this State during the open seasons of the year, under the restrictions and for the purposes allowed by law.

The certificate shall not be transferable and shall be exposed for examination upon demand by any game protector or game warden of this State; said license fee shall immediately be forwarded by the county clerk receiving the same to the treasurer of the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners, to be applied by them to such expense as shall be incurred by them for the purpose of protection and propagation of game.

Another game bill of importance is that which reopens annually the deer season in south Jersey. There was a controversy as to the deer shooting season because of confusion about the law. A bill pending opens the season annually between November 1 and 10. Assemblyman Gill, of Camden, is responsible for this bill, as well as a bill to make rural communities pay $5 a tail for captured foxes. The points foxes are doing their work of devastation are in the localities bordering on the place, while from the lakes of Sussex come a plea for the protection of beavers. Senator Martin has introduced a bill making it unlawful to trap or kill beavers under the penalty of $100. "Suckers" will get considerable attention, for there are four bills of various characters to protect them.

Miss Marguerite Marx, of New York, who has been visiting her cousin, Mrs. Frederick V. Greene, of Willow avenue, has returned home.

HETFIELD NOT IN IT.

Does Not Figure at All in Details of Suit Against Upson.

In regard to the suit in tort which Charles Bock has brought against Arthur J. Upson in Justice Hand's court, it is but fair to Walter L. Hetfield to explain that he had nothing at all to do with the case. Bock's allegation, to the effect that Upson put a $100 bill belonging to Bock in his pocket and walked off with it, is said to have occurred several nights before the one when Upson and Huff figured in their trouble. Mr. Hetfield was not present at that occasion and had no knowledge of the $100 bill or what became of it.

Mr. Hetfield states that not at that time or any other did he put up any check for a guarantee or wager. The check, which is said to have figured in the trouble on the night of the assault, was one given by Upson to Bock some days previous.

PERFECTLY SAFE.

No Truth to Rumor About Camera Club Rooms Being Unsafe.

A persistent rumor about the streets has it that dancing has been forbidden in the rooms of the Camera Club, in the Babcock building, owing to the floor becoming unsafe. The attendants at the building when questioned about the matter declare it to be absurd. There is nothing at all the matter with the floor, they said, and they could assign no source for the origin of the story.

City Suing For Taxes.

Constable W. W. Mason levied, Wednesday afternoon, on a number of bar fixtures stored in the McIntyre building on North avenue from the defunct Imperial Cafe. They are the property of Hibbard & Jones, the former proprietors, and will be held Monday to secure the amount due the city from the owners for unpaid personal taxes.

Enlarging Establishement.

Marcus Silbert, of Somerset street, is enlarging and improving his store property. The part of the building formerly occupied by George Richter, the barber, has been added, and new windows have been placed in the store. Mr. Richter has removed to the Heldloff building on the same thoroughfare.

John O'Brien, of this city, who has been ill at the home of his parents at High Bridge, has returned to Plainfield.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 2, "The Joy of Service." Text, Ps. cxxvi, 5, 6; Matt. xxv, 19-23.

"Enter thou into the joy of thy lord." The gladness spoken of is the joy of accomplishment, for surely

No ill can fret the soul with discontent
Like consciousness of powers unused.

To one all effort used in failure is misery indeed. To be ever rolling the load up hill and yet to never gain a foot advance is death to all courage and interest.

In active use of our powers we find the deepest pleasure. We must be doing. Thought must reappear in things. We must form and shape things to correspond to ideas within. We must compel things to unite, to increase, to do our bidding. We not only discover what is, we invent and create what never before was. We received talents—one, two, five. We return with added capital. We have discovered the secret of the Lord's riches. We have shared in His power. Unconsciously to ourselves we have grown into His way of doing and being. In our intentness to be faithful to His interests and be able to give Him on his return His own goods with rightful increase we have developed and expanded our own powers, and become capable of companionship and partnership.

It requires "nerve" to do this—something more than nerves. It is the feeling power held firmly by will power to the course approved by reason power. It must be sustained by waiting time, sorrow at loss of good seed buried in the earth when we may be pinched with hunger and crave it for food, but whatever the call of appetite we go forth with that precious seed and sow it instead of eating it. Is there any joy in that? Perhaps there is a kind of grim satisfaction in the self mastery. We pull the belt a hole tighter in the buckle to still the gnawings of hunger and swing the hands in wider circle as we scatter the grain. We can sing, we will sing in hope of harvest, in triumph of right doing, in consciousness of right use of the Master's goods.

"Come again, rejoicing, bringing sheaves." Harvest is the singing time. Not yet can we swell the full chorus of redemption because some is in the blade only, some is earing, and we must patiently wait the filled out corn, ripe and golden.

We catch glimpses of what the future joy will be as we see some specimens of the work advancing, but, oh, what glory will it be when, soul and body purified, glorified, we see the Christ face to face and find ourselves appearing like Him! What rapture too deep for words if He shall say to us, "Well done!"

These are days of toilsome planting and tending, times of careful investing and accumulating treasure. Keep up good heart; we are increasing just as truly and more valuably than the corn or the cash.

The future joy will not be so much because we bring added talents and gathered sheaves to our Lord as we are admitted to Christ's companionship.

A Substitute For Trouble.

The Christian has, of all men, abundant reason for trusting. Surely God is to be trusted. If He had cared nothing about us, He would not have esteemed us at such a great cost. If He had been indifferent to our fate, He would not have sent Christ as the pledge of His love. If He had care enough and love enough and power enough to open a way to our salvation, we may certainly trust Him with all we have. And what kind of a trust is it that is always doubtful? If we ask Him to forgive our sins and blot them out of His book of remembrance, why worry about it and wonder if He has done it? If we commit our ways to Him, why disturb ourselves with fear lest He forget His charge? He says to us, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Why load ourselves down with anxiety about the possible evils of tomorrow? If He has power over the future and we have not, why waste our time, strength and courage in fretfulness?—Independent.

The Scriptural Idea.

Any unperverted mind will conceive of the Scriptural idea of prayer as that of one of the most downright, sturdy realities in the universe. Right in the heart of God's plan of government it is lodged as a power. Amid the conflicts which are going on in the evolution of that plan it stands as a power. Into all the intricacies of divine working and the mysteries of divine decree it reaches out silently as a power. In the mind of God, as he is assured, the conception of prayer is no fiction, whatever man may think of it. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."—Austin Phelps.

By Praise We Give.

By prayer we ask, by faith we take, but by praise we receive. In heaven blessing God will be our constant employment, and if we would have a portion of the happiness of heaven upon earth, in the enjoyment of divine peace, while seeking to be free from all undue care, while committing all anxieties to Him in prayer, we must also cultivate the important grace of continual thanksgiving.—Freeman.

In His Keeping.

Softly, softly in the dawning
Came the whisper: "Leave me, leaving me.
"Serve Me, child, from early morning;
I each day thy strength will be."

* * * * * * *

Now that sunset hours are nearing,
When night does fall chillingly,
Still the whisper: "Leave me, fearing
Child, and simply trust in Me."
So I lay my hopes a-sleeping,
Secure in the night of doubt;
I am ever in His keeping,
And He knoweth what He wants.
—Hannah Coddington.

DEFRATED THE BICYCLISTS.

A Florida Ostrich That Gives Fast Wheelmen and Horses All the Racing They Want.

"Go and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation, says Youth's Companion.

At Jacksonville, Fla., there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and 22 seconds. His owners claim that he is more enthusiastic than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without lazyness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, took the bit in his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, and was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W., who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

FINE VENETIAN LACES.

A Great Advance Has Been Made as the Methods of Primitive Needle Workers.

The stamp of perfected elegance which all Venice lace bears is the result of its having been evolved in a period and environment of luxury and constantly widening art development, says the Chautauquan. Primitive needlewomen display no art ingenuity in getting beyond the simpler twisted effects in thread work. The product of native Indians, of Syrians, of South Americans, and even of the Mexicans, in all of which the ingenuity of the meshes similar to those seen in veilings and with a "star" ground, are the sole resource of these workers, to whom even the open buttonhole stitch as an embellishment is unknown.

Though as early as the fifteenth in design, the early laces of Italy and Spain were equally flat until the workers began to imitate with the needle the raised and knotted effects of the hard reticella thread work. Then came the method of applying the buttonhole stitch became known among them, however, the experimenters among the more enlightened workers of those countries, and later of France and England, were unfitted for realizing the possibilities. Soon this stitch became the basis of all Venetian laces. It was used for the making of every portion of the pattern, including the plain and ornamental bridles that connected the parts, and was unlike the stitch used for the cordonnets or raised borders and edges, and even for the filling-in stitches.

INDIAN GOLD HOARDERS.

Milliards Upon Milliards of Francs Supposed to Be Lying Idle in Hiding Places.

Of the outpouring of gold which during four centuries has been scattered all over the world, an immense portion remains idle in India, where it is supposed to be hoarded. Like the gold returns to the earth and remains there more completely hidden than it was in its original state. The amount of gold brought into India during the past 60 years, that is to say, from 1837 to 1896, is greater by three milliards nine hundred and forty-three millions of francs than the amount exported. The soil of India absorbs the floods of gold just as the sand of the deserts swallows the overflow of the great rivers. When it is remembered that this work of absorption has been going on with little interruption for ten centuries and still continues, it is easy to form an idea of the immense treasures that are hidden in that country. All this gold remains sterile, and, consequently, is lost. It is estimated that milliards upon milliards of francs in gold lie idle in the hiding places of India, and it is known that this colossal treasure is in coin that dates back several centuries.

An Ingenious Girl.

An ingenious girl who wanted extra pin money used her large acquaintance list to further her desire. She collected the names and addresses of all the engaged girls that she possibly could from her friends and their friends, giving a nominal sum presumably as a joke to the accommodating individuals. When she had collected a large list of brides-to-be, she visited shops where the proprietors were apt to have lists of the establishing housewares and bridal fixings generally and sold each name and address for a certain sum. Evidently the arrangement was satisfactory, but the engaged girls must have been surprised to receive catalogues from firms known and unknown to them, setting forth their specialties in the way of requirements for the ordinary bride.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 2—Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle. Topic—"The joy of service."—Ps. cxxvi, 5, 6; Matt. xxv, 19-23.

The springs of the Christian's joy are many. He may rejoice that he has been redeemed and saved by Jesus Christ. "We joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." He may rejoice in the salvation of others. "There is joy among the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." If the angels rejoice over such a one, may the redeemed do so! He may rejoice in his assurance of an inheritance in heaven. "In thy presence is fullness of joy. At thy right hand are pleasures forevermore." But one of the chief sources of the Christian's joy is in service. The child of God who has never learned to serve Him has not tasted of the sweetest of the Christian joys. Service and happiness go hand in hand in the Christian's life, and we cannot divide much in life if we have not learned this secret of happiness.

The joy of service is not inconsistent with hardships in service. This is taught in the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Psalm: "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and, weeping, bearing precious seed shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Sowing is a difficulty, a hardship. How much more so is the sowing of the wheat, when very seed may be of great value! But reaping follows sowing, and reaping is joyous. When the sown seeds have become sheaves, what cause for rejoicing! Who thinks then of the hardships in life if we have? Those very hardships only make the joy of reaping surer and sweeter. Service without hardship is not near so joy producing as service that has been accomplished amid tears and sorrow. Saying in sorrow produces reaping in joy. Let us not expect the joy before it is due, and then we will not be disappointed and discouraged.

The joy of service is not limited to the present life. The joy of the Lord in returning to Paradise from Babylon is typical of the Christian joy in heaven. What a rapturous joy it was! It seemed too good to be true. They "were like them that dream." They laughed, they sang, they shouted for joy. Such will be our joy if we are saved, and it will be greatly increased if we have spent a life in service. Christ Himself teaches this doctrine. To the faithful servant He said, "Well done; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The entrance into joy was the fruit of well doing. And how much sweeter that joy will be if the well doing has resulted in the salvation of others! If we not only enter into the joy of the Lord, but cause others to enter in, if we come bringing as our sheaves the saved souls of others, how great indeed our joy! Child of God, have you ever led a lost soul to the Lord Jesus Christ? If not, will you not begin to service for the Lord at once? It will mean joy here and joy hereafter. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and forever."

The temptation to sacrifice the Christian's joy to the joy of the world is sometimes very great. But we should not yield to it. "The joy of the world worketh death, and death ends all its joy, but the Christian's joy only really begins when death comes. Some one has compared the joy of the sinner to lightning—a flash and it is gone—and the joy of the saint to light, lasting, healthful, healing and beautiful." Which we should chose is self evident.

BIBLE READINGS.

Neh. viii, 10; Isa. xxvi, 11; xxx, 5; li, 12; Eccl. ii, 1-11; Isa. xxxv, 1-10; Matt. xiii, 44-46; Luke xv, 1-7; Acts viii, 5-8; Heb. xii, 1, 2; Jas. i, 1-4; I Pet. i, 1-9.

The Best Spiritual Guest.

Among all the spiritual guests that cross our threshold Jesus not only incomparably the best by the excellence of His divinity, but also the most intimate by the presence of the same divinity. If any one receive Him into his soul, Jesus comes to have a place of His own that has no parallel in life and which has no proof save in experience. While the public come and go through the house in the busy daytime, this guest keeps His room, but in the quiet hours He sits with us. We make Him the confidant of our secrets, but in the end He tells us things about ourselves we have not known. We turn to Him for help, but find He has promised what we were about to ask. We look to Him for good things only to remember that it was His suggestion. His presence is an irresistible condemnation of wrongdoing, a perpetual inspiration of well doing.—Churchman.

Living For Self Alone.

The man who lives to himself bequeaths his own folly and poverty and meanness for his monument. He has benefited nobody, while he has dwarfed and warped his own powers, and senseless stone or marble, however lavishly supplied to mark his resting place, does him no honor. He has lived to himself, he has died to himself, and all that he leaves in memory of his self speaks no word of praise in his behalf, no word of justification. This is no true life. It is the worst of failures. There are glorious opportunities in this world for service. He who wisely uses them enriches not only his race and himself and, dying, leaves a monument which outlasts granite and is brighter than polished brass.—Independent.

Life Again.

Out of the dusk a shadow,
Then a spark;
Out of the spark a flame,
Then a lark;
Out of the heart a rapture,
Then a song;
Out of the dead, cold ashes
Life again.
—John B. Tabb.

YOUNG FOLKS ON STRAW RIDE

MRS. L. H. BIGLOW CHAPERONED PARTY ON A SLEIGHRIDE.

Took a Spin About the City Wednesday Afternoon, Stopping at Randolph's for Refreshments.

A jolly crowd of young folks, chaperoned by Mrs. L. H. Biglow, of Central avenue, joined in a sleighride about the city Wednesday afternoon. The affair was given by Eric Biglow and he invited a number of his boy and girl friends. One of William Hand & Son's big sleighs and a fine team of horses were engaged and everyone entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion.

After riding about the city for a time a stop was made at L. W. Randolph's pharmacy on West Front street, where everybody was served with hot chocolate. Several boxes made cakes were sent in advance and these added not a little to satisfying the appetites of the hungry folks. The ride lasted three hours, at the end of which the young folks were returned to their homes.

Those in the party included Mrs. L. H. Biglow, Eric Biglow, Kenneth Biglow, Myrtle Dorman, Hazel Dorman, Louise Andrews, Carolyn Slasson, Sayre Slasson, Victor Tillotson, Arthur Tillotson, Kenneth Phillips, Kathleen and Peter Phillips, Kenneth Brown, Jack Martin, Priscilla Van-Wyck, Helen Joy, Elizabeth McGee, John Valiant, Roy Milne, Leslie Brokaw, Odgen Rogers, Henry Richards, George Yerkes, William Flanders, William Douglass, Arthur Dyer, Newell Kirkner, Kenneth Runyon, Bertram and Margaret Leggett.

THEATRICAL.

On Washington's Birthday Mr. Keith will introduce a novelty in the line of amusement, and this managerial innovation is especially tendered to the out-of-town patrons of his New York theatre who desire to enjoy the entire programme and be home in time for an early supper. A special performance will be given commencing at 10:30 o'clock, and every artist will positively appear, and thus plenty of time is allowed for the homeward trip.

For next week at Keith's Theatre a galaxy of attractive vaudeville stars are announced. To say that it will be a strong show but feebly expresses it, for the stellar position will be upheld by Eugene Sandow, the famous "strong man," one of the world's most wonderful athletes. His present feats are proclaimed more sensational than any before attempted. The comedy and novelty elements of the programme will be sustained by Eva Williams and Fred Packer in their sketch, "Driftwood"; also Tom Nawn & Company, in "Pat and the Genii"; the European Rossean Brothers; Elwood, the magician, and a score of other stars.

Each week brings added proof of the popularity of Proctor's, Newark, in the increased throng in attendance upon the bills of high-class vaudeville. The engagement of Peter F. Dailey as the feature of next week's bill is an evidence of this enterprise. In "A Dress Rehearsal," the skit which he will present, Dailey is seen to excellent advantage. The four Luken Brothers, sensational bar performers, offer a decided novelty in their line. Caron and Herbert have a decidedly clever acrobatic act, in which exceptionally funny clowning is a leading factor. "The Little Mother" will be presented by the Smedley Sketch Club, and Bonnie Thornton will have a new repertoire of topical songs. The Fifty-eighth Street will have one of the few novelties of the week in the first New York presentation of "Mistakes Will Happen," a play in which Charles Dickson successfully starred last season. The curtain-raiser will be "His Little Error," and there will be the customary amount of vaudeville to fill the interim between acts. The Proctor Stock Company will present "The Royal Box" at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, Clay M. Greene's travesty, "The Gentle Mr. Bellew, of France," preceding it as a curtain-raiser. The Twenty-third Street's bill of continuous vaudeville will show another excellent list of bookings and will maintain the season's record as that house for the best vaudeville obtainable. Flo Irwin will be the topping feature next week, with the inimitable acts of Walter Hawley, a new comedy sketch, "2 23 in the Morn." One of Roland Reed's best starring pieces, "His Father's Boy," will be presented by the Proctor Stock Company at the Fifth Avenue, preceded by "A Woman's Won't," a curtain-raiser which was always popular with patrons of Augustin Daly's Stock Company. The Ten-Ichi Troupe are retained for the second week as the topping feature of the vaudeville.

Miss Hensel, of the Somerville schools, was a visitor at the North Plainfield public schools Friday morning.

BUILDING BOOM SOON; WAGES MAY GO UP

Concerted Movement Among the Building Trades' Unions to Increase the Wages.

BOSSES WILL CONFER.

MEETING OF BUILDING TRADES' COUNCIL TO BE HELD FOR THE PURPOSE.

Bricklayers, Masons and Hod Carriers Have Made Formal Demands to Take Effect June 1.

—Bosses Not Yet Agreed.

With the opening of spring there promises to be considerable building in Plainfield and the locality. At the same time there is being made a concerted effort on the part of many of the local building trades unions to increase the rate of wages.

Recently, the Bricklayers and Masons' Union, No. 14, decided by a resolution to demand after June 1, 1902, fifty cents per hour. There was some opposition to the increase, but the resolution was adopted. Another meeting of the union was held Wednesday evening, when an effort was made to rescind the resolution. This effort failed and the various bosses in the city and borough have just received notice from the union that after June 1, 1902, fifty cents per hour will be asked.

At present the bosses receive $4 a day and the bricklayers and masons $3.50 per day, eight hours. By the proposed change the men will get $4 a day and the bosses will of necessity feel obliged to ask $4.50, for they say that they cannot pay $4 and work for the present wages. The men work from 8 to 4:30 o'clock, with a half hour for dinner.

Recently, the hod-carriers decided to demand more money. They now receive $2.25 and they asked $2.50, to take effect June 1, 1902. It is said that in every other trade there will be a demand for more money. In view of this it is said that in the near future there will be a meeting of the Building Trades' Council for the purpose of considering and discussing these requests for more money.

There seems to be a general impression about that if the rate of wages is increased it may have a tendency to hinder somewhat the building boom which now appears to be coming toward Plainfield. Some of the bosses favor the increase; while others are opposed to it, and it is believed that the questions can only be settled at a meeting of all trades.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Speakers Secured for Meetings at Park Avenue Baptist Church.

The first and second weeks of March, evangelistic meetings are to be held in the Park Avenue Baptist church. These meetings will be undenominational in character, and all who wish to attend will be welcome. Rev. J. Madison Ware, of Parnaly Memorial church, Jersey City, will preach March 4 and 5. This is the eloquent pastor and loyal citizen who resigned a large and successful pastorate at the beginning of the Spanish War that he might go to the front as chaplain to "his volunteer boys." Dr. Peters, who preaches the second week, is known throughout the world as one of the most original, eloquent speakers of the modern pulpit. A speaker is to be engaged for March 6 and 7.

NEW OFFICES.

Plainfield Water Supply Company Will Have New Quarters.

On April 1, the office of the Plainfield Water Supply Company will be moved from its present location at 107 North avenue to 175 North avenue, in the quarters formerly occupied by S. D. Drake. The new office will be much larger and commodious and much more conspicuous. The growing business of the company has demanded a change for some time and the new office was decided upon after much careful consideration.

SPEDON WAS THERE.

Entertained Members of Greenbrook Council, R. A., Last Evening.

After the regular meeting of Greenbrook Council, No. 1728, Royal Arcanum, last evening, the members were entertained by Spedon, a lightning sketch artist. He is an Arcanumite and his work was of a high order. He also gave several recitations that were fully enjoyed.

There were members from Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, and Orator O'Keefe, of that Council, favored the members with several vocal solos. There was fully eighty-five per cent. of the membership of Greenbrook Council present. Another entertainment for the members will be given Thursday evening, March 6.

Lindsey Woolley, of Plainfield avenue, is in New York State, on business.

PLANS FOR MUSIC HALL

W. S. Butterfield, the New Owner, Announces the Details for Remodelling It.

HIGH-CLASS COMPANIES.

Special Effort Will be Made With Opening—Interior of House Will be Entirely Changed—Something About Career of Man Who is to Reopen It—Much Experience.

Details of the plans for remodelling of Music Hall have been announced by W. S. Butterfield, the purchaser of the building. When the changes in the present arrangement of the theatre are perfected and the house opens in September, to all appearances it will look like a new structure so far as the interior is concerned.

Plainfielders will, no doubt, rejoice to learn that only high class performances will be presented at frequent intervals. Klaw and Erlanger, the New York syndicate, will control the booking of the house, and popular prices will prevail. The better grade of repertoire companies will appear and the admission will be ten, twenty and thirty cents. Matinees on Saturday will become a fad for the women and children. Polite vaudeville will be announced from time to time and the public will have the opportunity of witnessing the class of productions seen usually at Keith's and at Proctor's. These attractions will be introduced at intervals between the shows to be given by travelling companies.

The opening attraction will be a special effort on the part of the proprietor of the house. It is announced for the early part of September and a promise is made that a Broadway company will favor Plainfield on that occasion. This production will be such as to establish a reputation for the house and the attractions will be continued on the same level.

As for the theatre it will be up-to-date in every respect. A new gallery will replace the one now in the house and modern boxes will be installed. Down stairs there will be entire new flooring. The present seats will be cleaned out and more comfortable ones introduced.

This is not all. Mr. Butterfield states that the dimensions of the stage will be changed considerably. It will be brought out from three to six feet, and seats will be placed closer to the stage making the house a neat, compact and attractive theatre. According to the arrangements one will be able to see and hear well from any part of the house. The scenery and stage settings and effects will be features which will constitute a much needed improvement. Much attention will be paid to the gas and electric light arrangements.

Leading from Compton's alley will be a gallery entrance. For the comfort of the patrons a women's retiring room will be furnished and a special attendant will be engaged. Another convenience will be a men's smoking apartment.

As has already been announced a section of what is now Rowley's drug store will be used as a lobby. In order to obtain the desirable effect it will be entirely remodelled with tile flooring and sheet steel ceiling. It will be well lighted and a large iron door will grace the front. The theatre and the lobby as well will be handsomely decorated.

The name of the theatre will be changed, but as yet no new title has been selected. Societies, lodges and churches will be able to obtain the use of the theatre at a reasonable rental. For any charitable cause, Mr. Butterfield will stand ready to donate its use very willingly.

The new proprietor has been a theatrical manager for the past fifteen years and is well informed on all phases of the business. He was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1867, and drifted into the theatrical business when a mere boy. At first he was an usher and then treasurer in an opera house of his native city. Later he was identified with the Ohio State Journal, the leading morning paper in Columbus, and subsequently he became treasurer of the Grand Opera House at that place.

After remaining in that position for four years he became treasurer of the Alhambra Theatre, Chicago, and for the past ten years he has been connected with traveling attractions. For three years he was interested in all of Charles E. Blaney's shows, and at present he is manager for William Bonelli, starring in the well established success "An American Gentleman." He is also interested in the melodrama "Man to Man" and a pastoral drama entitled "Meeting House Corners." Mr. Butterfield proposes to make Plainfield his permanent residence and will manage his road productions from the theatre in this city.

MARRIAGE OF MRS. M'KEE AND HARVEY APGAR FEB. 20.

Ceremony Was Performed by Rev. George Bowers in Presence of Relatives and Friends.

Mrs. Louise McKee, of Watchung avenue, and Harvey Apgar, of De Kalb avenue, were married Feb 20 at the home of the bride. The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock. Rev. George Bowers, of Warrenville, officiated.

The parlor, which was the scene of the nuptial event, was tastefully adorned with cut flowers, ferns, palms and potted plants. In all about fifty persons, intimate friends and relatives of the couple, were present. An effective gown of white organdie trimmed with insertion was worn by the bride.

After the wedding ceremony was concluded a reception was held by Mr. and Mrs. Agar and dainty refreshments were served to the assembled guests. At a late hour they left on their honeymoon trip. On their return they will reside on Watchung avenue. The presents received by the bride were especially numerous. Among the collection were designs in Haviland and Dresden china, silverware and cut glass.

HORSE DROPPED DEAD.

After Owner Had Attempted to Drive Through Big Drifts From Plainfield to Stirling.

Despite the protests of friends and farmers along the road, Adolph Behren, of the borough, attempted to deliver some coal to customers in the mountains Wednesday. He intended going through Stirling and around to Berkley Heights but at the former place he abandoned his intention only after one of his fine horses had dropped dead from exhaustion.

Nearly every foot of the way from this city to Stirling the team had to fight its way through huge drifts, some of which reached a height of ten feet. At intervals Mr. Bohren and his driver were warned to desist in their attempt to get through the mountain roads but in spite of all they continued.

The horses did not appear to be in bad shape until they had nearly reached Stirling when one of them expired. The wagon was abandoned and Mr. Bohren returned to this city with the remaining horse.

CRESCEUS, THE DOG.

Champion Trotter Is Much Attached to the Bull Pup.

How Ketcham's Canine Guards His Master's Diamonds — Carried Away $50,000 Worth After Maiming a Burglar.

According to the Denver correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune George Ketcham and Crescens came near having a disagreement the other day. Not the famous racing stallion, but the $2,000 Boston bull pup which Mr. Ketcham has named after the champion trotter. The pup meant well enough, but it almost cost his master $50,000.

"It happened like this," said Ketcham, after the stallion had given an exhibition at the Overland track and was cooled out, "We were in the sleeper Sunday night coming toward Denver, the men and horses in the private car head. Tim Murnan came back to ask me a question after I had retired. The pup sleeps with Tim when he isn't with me, and, of course, upon entering my stateroom Crescens felt at home.

"Now, for certain private reasons, I carry with me a bag of stones that cost me $50,000. One of them was a gift to my father, many years ago, from Prince Edward, now king of England, and, while it is worth but a few thousand dollars intrinsically, ten times its value would not get it from me.

"When I went to bed I put the bag of diamonds under my pillow, just as I have done many times while on the road. The pup knew this, for not three months ago he woke me up when a burglar was trying to get into my room in a Boston hotel, and while I was struggling with the intruder the dog got the bag and crept under the bed. After he had hidden it well he came out and, incidentally, took a chunk out of the burglar's leg.

"But Sunday night the pup made a mistake. When he came in with Murnan I sat up in bed and paid no attention to him. He nosed about my pillow, as I supposed, to see that the bag was safe. He seems to have the idea that he is the custodian of the gems, for when he went out he had the bag in his jaws. His lips hung down like lambrequins, and I did not notice anything wrong.

"I slept very well and did not miss the bag until Monday morning. You can imagine how I felt when I discovered the theft. Murnan, Tim and Ed Green came in and we all searched high and low, but found no gems. In desperation I said: 'I'll give $5,000 for that bag of diamonds,' when, lo, and behold, Crescens, the dog, lifted up his head and seemed to understand. He has been taught to understand a good many things, and, naturally, knew what those words meant, 'bag of diamonds,' so often has he heard of them and guarded the stones.

"The dog jumped up, barked and ran out of the car. We followed him to the car of the stallion, where one of the boys was about to throw out a fork of straw. The dog made a break and grabbed the fork handle. Then he dug into the straw and pretty soon came out wagging his tail and carrying the bag in his mouth.

"When that dog grows old I am going to have a diamond collar made for him to wear around home. In fact, I'll not wait until age stiffens his joints, for he is certainly a jewel, even if his face is on crooked.

"Would you believe me, that dog is the only animal, human or beast, that can get into Crescens's stall without being kicked or bitten at. Their friendship is the most remarkable thing I have ever known. Why, it was only last week that Mike the Tramp induced the dog to come into his stall, and Crescens raised such a fuss, kicking and trying to break his halter, that the pup was glad to get back with his old friend. Then, for a whole day, the horse rubbed his nose over the pup and kept him from nearly suffocating. That's what I call plain love in animals, and it is a pleasure to see it."

Goats Which Climb Trees.

In the Atlas mountains of northern Africa there are goats which climb trees to browse on the foliage. Some of them have been seen standing erect on the branches 30 feet from the ground, while others were likely reclining on the boughs gently rocked by the wind.

FORTY-SEVEN YEARS SERVICE

BUSINESS RECORD OF DEPARTMENT COMMANDER OF THE G. A. R.

Has Spent That Time in Employ of Janeway & Company, of New Brunswick.

John Lawrence, department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, of New Jersey, not only has a good war record, but he possesses another record just as good. Recently, he observed the forty-seventh anniversary of his employment by the wallpaper firm of Janeway & Company, of New Brunswick, by whom he has been continuously employed since 1855.

Mr. Lawrence entered the employ of that firm January 10, 1855, as an apprentice in the blockcutting department. He completed his term of apprenticeship and continued with the company as a blockcutter. When the war broke out he was permitted to enlist and still remain an employe of the firm. On his return from the war, with shoulder straps and an honorable discharge, he resumed his place at the blockcutting bench in the factory, holding this position until 1875, when he became a bookkeeper in the office of the firm. He has filled that position ever since.

Mr. Lawrence is in vigorous health, and confidently hopes to round out the half of the twentieth century, and then tack a good many years on to that. He is an ardent wheelman, and attributes much of his superb health to his love of outdoor exercise.

MORE TENNIS AT PARK CLUB

PREPARATIONS BEING MADE TO MEET REVIVAL OF THAT GAME.

Old Courts Will be Put in Fine Condition and One New One Has Been Added.

Never has a winter seen the Park Club in better condition than now. Although Lent has put a stop to the formal functions at the club, the members and their families have found the club house a delightful place to gather evenings and spend the time bowling, playing 'pool and billiards or enjoying a social chat.

While naturally the social features will become of secondary importance during the summer months, there is every promise that the club will continue to be as popular as ever when the warm weather comes. The revival of tennis all over the country has been so marked that the trustees of the club are planning to pay special attention to that sport.

At the present time, the Park Club possesses the best tennis courts in either city or borough. They have been in existence ever since the club erected its pretty little club house on Washington avenue. Last year, there was much demand for them. In order to meet the anticipated renewal of interest this year, another court will be made along side of the other two and the three will be kept in the best of condition throughout the season.

There are a number of the young people in the club who are anxious to play as soon as the season opens and it is expected that others will take up the game as it returns into popular favor. Tennis is to be made an important feature of the summer life at the club and will undoubtedly prove a very important factor in making the club house the centre of attraction even after the warm weather is here.

A class of six persons will be confirmed at the German Reformed church Palm Sunday, March 23.

HE HAD HIS SUSPICION.

The Colored Southern Minister Looked Ashamed at Andrew Carnegie's $50 Bill.

It is related that on the last tour of President McKinley in the south, Andrew Carnegie was in the party, and all were asked to attend a negro church in Thomasville, Ga., where a very fervid colored minister officiated, says the Des Moines Leader.

It is said that whenever a collection in the services the deacons took up a collection, but through hospitable motives avoided passing the box to the white visitors. The old pastor rose at last and preached a sermon that was at the same time eloquent, earnest and ridiculous—preaching right at the white folks—and his description of the poverty of the church was so impressive that when the deacons passed the contribution boxes around for the third time Mr. Carnegie intercepted one and dropped a $50 bill in the box.

The old preacher counted their contents, and then, as he handed the plate a handful of small change on one side and a crisp greenback on the other. Clearing his throat he said:

"Breddern, we has been greatly blessed by dish yer contebution. We has fo' dollahs and fifty cents dat is good, an' if de $50 bill put in by de white gemman wid de gray whiskers is also good we is blessed a whole lot mosh." And he looked suspiciously at the giver of libraries and campaign funds.

ST. PAUL'S ARMLESS MAN.

Though Unfortunate, He Has More Attention Paid Him Than Many Who Have Two Arms.

A man without arms is not to be envied, although in some respects he receives more attention than one would at first suppose. The old man who sits under the shadow of St. Paul's is an example, says the New York Sun.

He has been there day after day for two years, some say longer. He is there to sell his little wares.

He is fond of his pipe. There is always some one around who fills the bowl, puts the stem between his lips, lights a match and fires the tobacco.

All the armless man has to do is to draw and puff. Many a man with two arms has greater difficulty in getting his pipe to work.

If a storm breaks upon the curb dealer somebody some one volunteers to bundle up his goods and carry them to shelter. Occasionally a man with an umbrella offers the armless man protection.

He also has some one to feed him. He does not have the trouble of cutting a beefsteak. To him knives and forks and spoons are superfluous.

At least this is the supposition of a man who has two arms, and who stood looking at the armless man at St. Pauls.

POLICY PLAYING IN GOTHAM.

The Infamous Gambling Scheme Is Extensively Worked in the New York Metropolis.

By the arrest recently of one of the backers of New York city, known as the policy king, the extent to which policy playing has been carried on in the metropolis was brought to light. Papers in the place searched by the police show that the receipts in 120 shops owned by the policy king amounted to $17,000 a day on the average, and of this $7,000 a day was profit. About $5,000 a day was paid for expenses of running the business, including $1,000 a day for police protection. An insignificant amount was paid out in the shape of winnings, care being taken by the manipulation of the figures that these should not amount to much. The profits were so great that after paying all the expenses there was a clear profit of $2,000,000, and some of those engaged as assistants were paid as high as $1,000 a month for their work. These enormous amounts came chiefly in small sums from people little able to afford it, and who did not realize that they were being robbed by the most infamous system of gambling ever devised. The fact that the play can be made for a few cents makes it very tempting to the poor and credulous.

Causes of Cancer.

Under the heading, "The Pre-cancerous Stage of Cancer," a recent medical journal cites the following conditions which predispose to the disease: Fissure of the lip, abrasion of the tongue from a rough or broken tooth, biting the tongue, cutting a razor while shaving, wound of the skin from the finger nail in cook, chronic eczema. The constant pressure and irritation from a pipe or cigar is supposed to be a causative factor in the cancer of the lip in men, a condition which is very rare in women.

French Bird Stories.

Two bird stories come from France. According to Le Figaro a canary breeder named Bourez is going to raise red canaries by feeding the parent birds on cayenne pepper of an orange-red tint. French poachers are making big hauls of partridges and other game by using automobiles with nets and a bright light. They run the automobiles at a swift pace along the public roads, and the birds, attracted by the light, fly into the nets. There seems to be no violation of existing game laws in the practice.

Progressive Japan.

Wireless telegraph stations are now being erected by the Japanese authorities on the Korean coast.

Free from Disease.

Infectious diseases, it is said, are practically unknown in Greenland.

YEAR AT WOMEN'S EXCHANGE

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY ON WHAT HAS BEEN DONE THERE.

Also a Statement of the Needs During Coming Year and Plea for Support.

The fifth annual meeting of the executive board of the Woman's Exchange, of Plainfield, was held Tuesday, Feb. 11, in the guild room of Grace P. E. church. The election of officers for the year resulted as follows: President, Mrs. O. T. Waring; first vice president, Mrs. D. N. VanBuren; second vice president, Miss Elizabeth R. Cock; recording secretary, Mrs. Hyatt; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. W. Serrell; treasurer, Mrs. Carl Pfeiffer; auditors, Mrs. Craig A. Marsh, Mrs. Wm. Stillman. The treasurer's report for the year beginning February, 1901, and ending February, 1902 was as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Balance on hand Feb. 1, 1901	$ 48.49
Received from sales, etc.	7,346.96
Subscribers' dues	170.00
Donations from three charitable entertainments	70.40
Donation (Miss E. Morris)	25.00
From publisher of exchange book	5.00
Total receipts	$7,665.85

EXPENDITURES.

Paid to consignors from sale of their work	$7,196.74
Salaries of superintendent, assistant and servant boy	256.50
Rent	96.00
Water rate, heating, telephone, cleaning and other necessary expenses	96.86
Total expenditures	$7,646.10

We thus have a small balance on hand of $19.49. The receipts for the past year's work show an increase of over $1,300.

In presenting this fourth annual report of the condition of the Woman's Exchange, the members of the executive board feel gratified and encouraged. The number of consigners has increased to one hundred and fifteen, and their work has reached a standard of great excellence. The work has steadily increased, and we have found it absolutely necessary to give our superintendent an assistant.

The fact must be borne in mind that our expenses, in our working corps, are augmented in exactly the same proportion as our receipts. We need more annual subscribers to help us. Indeed any addition from a legitimate source to our income, is most gratefully received.

We receive from our sales only 10 per cent. commission to carry on our work. This is not sufficient. We can never make the Woman's Exchange self-supporting. Such has never been the case anywhere. One of these admirable organizations (in a neighboring city) is now entering upon its forty-sixth year of good work, and even there the problem of making a Woman's Exchange self-supporting, has not yet been solved. It never overtake our expenses by any income from sales. For this reason, we appeal to our generous public to help us in carrying on our work, by their patronage, their personal interest and their subscriptions. Otherwise, our exchange, so fraught with good to many refined families in our midst, must go down in its struggle for existence.

Annie F. Hyatt,
Recording Secretary.
